LAHORE HIGH COURT

Full Bench

Execution Second Appeal No. 419 of 1940
January 30, 1941

YOUNG, O. J., DALIP SINGH AND MONROE, JJ.
S. UDHAM SINGH—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—

APPELLANT

S. ATMA SINGH—DECREE-HOLDER—

RESPONDENT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908). O. XXI, r. 2—Completed contract immediately extinguishing and replacing decree, whether adjustment—Agreement to adjust decree on fulfilment of future condition—Decree still left existing pending fulfilment of condition—Agreement, if adjustment under O. XXI, r. 2—Question of completed contract—S. 92, Evidence Act (I of 1872), whether bars setting up of contract as adjustment of decree.

A completed contract, which immediately extinguishes and takes the place of the decree, is an adjustment within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 2, Civil P. O. If, there is only an agreement to adjust the decree on the fulfilment of a future condition and the decree is still left in existence pending its fulfilment then there is no adjustment. It is, of course, a question to be decided in each case by the executing Court whether there has been a completed contract or not. 132 Ind. Cas. 670 (1), Overruled. [p. 4, col. 1.]

Section 92, Evi. Act does not bar the setting up of a contract to operate as an adjustment of a decree. 64 Ind. Cas. 990 (3), not approved. [ibid.]

Exn. S. A. referred by Skemp, J., dated October 3, 1940.

Order of Reference

Skemp, J.—The facts leading to this second appeal are as follows: In 1937 Atma Singh obtained a decree against Udharn Singh for Rs. 1,632 and costs. Execution was sought in 1938 and during the proceedings on December 22, 1938 Udharn Singh, judgment-debtor, applied under O. XXI, r. 2, Civil P. O., alleging that at a panchayat held on December 16, 1938, it had been settled that the decree-holder should take in full settlement Rs. 900 to be paid by instalments of Rs. 50 per half year. On January 27, 1939, the decree-holder entirely denied this stating that there had been not only no settlement but no discussion of the matter. The executing Judge, Sheikh Laiq Ali, framed two issues:

"(1) Whether a compromise was effected between the parties? and (2) If so, what were its terms and how does it affect the present execution petition?"

The judgment-debtor produced five witnesses three of whom were lambardars and he himself went into the witness box. The decree-holder also examined witnesses. The learned Senior Sub-Judge found that there was an adjustment and that it barred execution proceedings. The decree-holder appealed to the learned District Judge Rai Bahadur D. D. Dhawan who, without giving a finding as to whether he believed the oral evidence or not, said:

"It is settled law that an adjustment in order to be a compromise within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 2, Civil P. O., must be a settlement which extinguishes the decree-holder's debt and not one which if carried into effect will extinguish it."

He relied on Bakshi Ram Varma v. Des Raj (1) and Bharat National Bank Ltd. v. Delhi v. Bhagwan Singh (2). The judgment-debtor has come here in second appeal through Sardar Kartar Singh and the decree-holder has been represented by Mr. Durga Das. Order XXI, r. 2, runs as follows:

"(1) Where any money payable under a decree of any kind is paid out of Court, or the decree is otherwise adjusted in whole or in part to the satisfaction of the decree-holder, the decree-holder shall certify such payment or adjustment to the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree and the Court shall record the same accordingly.

(2) The judgment-debtor also may inform the Court of such payment or adjustment, and apply to the Court to issue a notice to the decree-holder to show cause, on a day to be fixed by the Court, why such payment or adjustment should not be recorded as certified, and if, after service of such notice the decree-holder fails to show cause, why the payment or adjustment should not be recorded as certified, the Court shall record the same accordingly."

Sardar Kartar Singh has taken me through the decisions for the last 14 years in this Court. At one time the leading case was regarded as Lachhman Das v. Baba Ramnath Kali Kamliwala (3), a Division Bench ruling which laid down that where there was an oral agreement alleged by the judgment-debtor and denied by the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor was unable to show that any part of the alleged agreement had been performed, it would not be set up under O. XXI, r. 2, Civil P. C. Walsh, J., further held that s. 92, Evi. Act, was a bar to setting up such an oral agreement. In Civil Appeal No. 799 of 1926, which I have not read, Jai Lal, J., apparently did not follow this ruling. He gave his reasons in a reported case, Sumar Chand v. Chitrangi Lal (4), saying that the question really depended upon the intention of the parties at the time when the agreement was entered into, and if they made a final and binding agreement regarding the decree then it amounted to an adjustment. A similar view was taken by Dalip Singh, J. in Baga Mal v. Shib Parshad (5). Jai Lal, J.'s unreported judgment of 1926 already referred to came before a Letters Patent Bench consisting of Sir Shadi Lal and Sir Alan Broadway whose judgment is reported in Bakshi Ram Varma v. Des Raj (1). The learned Chief Justice said:

"In the present case a certain sum of money has been paid. The rest was agreed to be paid in future and the question arises whether a settlement of that description constitutes an adjustment, of which cognizance can be taken by the executing Court. It is beyond dispute that the parties cannot, in execution proceedings vary the terms of the decree; and a contract which seeks to substitute one decree for another decree cannot be regarded as an adjustment. If, however, the terms of the compromise have been carried out and the decree is extinguished in whole or in part the compromise can be recognized by the Court."

The Letters Patent Bench accepted the appeal. This judgment was followed by Dalip Singh, J., in Firm Thakur Das-Kalyan Das v. Firm Jagan Nath Charan Das (6), who, however, clearly thought that it was erroneous and by Jai Lal, J., in Hukam Chand v. Sadaq (7) in a case which can be distinguished on the facts. The matter came before another Letters Patent Bench consisting of Addison and Din Mohammad, JJ., who in Bharat National Bank Ltd., Delhi v. Bhagwan Singh (2), criticized the law as laid down by the previous Letters Patent Bench, but held that in the appeal before them there was no adjustment. In another very brief judgment Firm Jagan Nath-Charan Das v. Firm Thakur Das-Kalyandas (8), however, they held without giving the facts, that there was an adjustment and said:

"In all cases it is a question of fact to determine whether the alleged adjustment was intended to extinguish the decree and if it did, the adjustment will be complete, no matter whether the compromise that is made to wipe out the decree is to be performed at some future date."

This judgment was followed by Abdul Rashid, J., in Darumal v. Todar (9), which however, can be distinguished on the facts and is of no help in the present discussion. There are judgments of other High Courts which are referred to in several of the judgments I have quoted but at this stage it is not necessary for me to go into them. There is a clear distinction of principle between the two Letters Patent Benches, between Bakshi Ram Varma v. Des Raj (1), and the law as laid down in Bharat National Bank Ltd., Delhi v. Bhagwan Singh (2) and Firm Jagan Nath-Charan Das v. Firm Thakur Das-Kalyandas (8). I, therefore, think it desirable that the present appeal be decided by a larger Bench and refer this case to the Hon'ble the Chief Justice with the recommendation that it be laid down before a Full Bench. Costs of this hearing to be costs in the execution.

Sardar Kartar Singh, for the Appellant.

Opinion

Young, C. J.—The facts in this case are as follows: Atma Singh obtained a decree against Udham Singu for Rs. 1,632 and costs. Execution proceedings were commenced on December 22, 1938. The judgment-debtor applied under O. XXI, r. 2, Civil P. C., alleging that the decree had been settled by an agreement with the decree-holder that he should take in full settlement Rs. 900 to be paid by instalments of Rs. 50 every half year. The decree-holder denied that there had been any such agreement. The Judge in charge of the execution proceedings framed two issues:

(1) Whether a compromise was effected between the parties? (2) If so, what were its terms and how it affected the execution petition?"

Evidence was led and the learned Judge held that there was an agreement and therefore, an adjustment within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 2. On appeal the learned District Judge held, without going into the merits, that "it is settled law that an adjustment in order to be a compromise within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 2, must be a settlement which extinguishes the decree-holder's debt and not one which, if carried into effect, will extinguish it."

On appeal to this Court the learned single Judge reviewed the various decisions of this and other Courts on the question of what amounted to an adjustment and as there were in this Court conflicting decisions of two Division Benches, referred it to the Chief Justice for appointment of a Full Bench. The essential part of O. XXI, r. 2, is as follows:

"Where any money payable under a decree of any kind is paid out of Court, or the decree is otherwise adjusted in whole or in part to the satisfaction of the decree-holder, the decree-holder shall certify such payment or adjustment to the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree, and the Court shall record the same accordingly."

The question for decision in this case is what is the meaning of "adjustment." "Adjustment," according to Stroud's Judicial Dictionary, is a settlement among various parties...in respect of claims, liabilities, etc. According to Webster's Dictionary it is a regulation or settlement. In this Court there is a Division Bench decision reported in Bakhshi Ram Varma v. Des Raj (1). The learned Judges in that case held that "a compromise can be held to be an adjustment only when all the terms thereof have been fulfilled by the judgment-debtor. If it contains any promise to be performed in the future, it cannot be treated as an adjustment so as to operate as a bar to execution... An adjustment of a decree is a transaction which extinguishes the decree as such in whole or in part and a contract containing stipulations to be carried out in future does not come within the purview of O. XXI, r. 2."

On the other hand another Bench of this Court in a case reported in Firm Jagan Nath-Charan Das v. Firm Thakar Das-Kalyandas (2) held that "it is a question of fact to be determined whether the alleged adjustment is intended to extinguish the decree; if it does the adjustment will be complete no matter whether the compromise that is made to wipe out the decree is to be performed at some future date."

In my opinion the view of the law laid down in Firm Jagan Nath-Charan Das v. Firm Thakar Das-Kalyandas (2), is correct and that the earlier decision cannot be supported. There is nothing in my opinion to prevent the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor entering into an entirely new contract for arranging their affairs so long as the contract is complete and the intention of the parties is to extinguish the decree altogether and to rely upon the new contract. A contract to be performed in the future is based on good consideration and so long as the contract complies with the rules of law laid down concerning contracts, the decree would be adjusted within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 2. We have been referred to decisions of other High Courts in support of the proposition that an agreement to be performed in the future is not an adjustment. For instance, there is a decision of a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court reported in Lachhman Das v. Baba Ramnath Kali Kamliwala (3). In my opinion this decision is no guide. In that case the agreement was that the decree-holder "would accept satisfaction of his decree in a modified form and would abandon the execution proceedings which were being taken as soon as four specified conditions had been fulfilled by the judgment-debtor."

None of those conditions had been fulfilled. This clearly was not a contract. It was merely inchoate, that is negotiations begun but not completed. The term "inchoate contract" which is sometimes used appears to me to be a contradiction in terms. There can be no contract until the parties are ad idem. The parties in this case would not be ad idem until the specified conditions had been fulfilled. This ruling therefore is no authority for the proposition that a completed contract cannot operate as an adjustment. In the same judgment one of the learned Judges held that s. 92, Evi. Act, also operated as a bar to setting up any such contract. Section 92, Evi. Act, embodies the principles of English Law that when the terms of a contract, grant or other disposition of property, or any matter required by law to be reduced to the form of a document have been proved, no evidence of any oral agreement shall be admitted as between the parties to any such instrument, for the purpose of contradicting, varying, adding to, or subtracting from its terms. Section 92 clearly refers in my opinion to a contract, grant or other disposition of property entered into by agreement between the parties to that document. It cannot refer to a decree which is imposed upon one of the parties by force majori. There is no mutuality about a decree which is passed in accordance with the wishes of one party and contrary to the wishes of the other. Section 92 therefore in my opinion—and with due respect to the learned Judge—cannot bar the setting up of a contract to operate as an adjustment of a decree.

The opinion of the Calcutta High Court is divided in two cases, one reported in Jhabar Md. v. Modan Sonabar (10) and the other in Azizur Rahman v. Aliraja (11), both Division Bench rulings; one held in favour of the proposition that an adjustment may be a contract to do something in the future and the other was against this proposition. The Bombay High Court in a Division Bench decision reported in Shankar Atmawani v. Kashav Govind Tambolkar (12) held that it was not necessary that "there should be an actual payment in order to constitute a valid adjustment within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 2, and that an agreement to pay a portion of the decretal amount in instalments would amount to an adjustment." A Division Bench of the Madras High Court in a case reported in Ramanarasu v. Matta Venkata Reddy (13), came to the same conclusion. The Patna High Court in a decision reported in Satyabadi Sahu v. Mani Sahu (14) also held the same opinion. And finally a Full Bench of the Rangoon High Court reported in A. N. A. R. Arunachallam Chettyar v. V. M. R. P. Firm (15) came to the same conclusion.

It appears to me therefore that on a consideration of all these authorities the correct view appears to be that if there is a completed contract, which immediately extinguishes and takes the place of the decree, that contract is an adjustment within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 2. If, on the other hand, there is only an agreement to adjust the decree on the fulfilment of a future condition and the decree is still left in existence pending the fulfilment of the condition, then there is no adjustment. It is, of course, a question to be decided in each case by the executing Court whether there has been a completed contract or not. If the decree-holder wishes to give up the strong position he holds in favour of instalments to be paid in the future that is a matter for him and the judgment-debtor. It may be a difficult contract to prove under all the circumstances; but if it is proved, the adjustment is complete. I would return the case to the District Judge in order that he may record a finding on the facts of this case and for his decision in accordance with the law laid down in this judgment. Costs will abide the result. Parties to appear before the District Judge, Amritsar, on February 25, 1941 and obtain a date.

Monroe, J.—I agree.

Dalip Singh, J.—I have little to say in this judgment except that I adhere to the views that I expressed in my judgment reported in Baga Mal v. Shib Prashad (5). So far as the point before us is concerned, namely whether a compromise in which certain terms are left to be executed in the future can or cannot be an adjustment wholly or partially of the decree, it appears to me always to be a question of fact or a mixed question of fact and law, namely as to what was the intention of the parties in arriving at the compromise. On the other point however, it may be necessary to modify that decision in view of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Oudh Commercial Bank Ltd., Fyzabad v. Bind Basni Kuer (16), namely whether the Court should leave undetermined the question whether the rights of the parties should be decided in a subsequent suit based on the new cause of action, namely the compromise, or whether the parties' method, if any terms of the compromise were not complied with, was by way of execution or not. As regards my second decision, namely that reported in Firm Thakur Das-Kalyan Das v. Firm Jagan Nath-Charan Dar (6) the only modification I have to make is in the sentence beginning "a contract is not executory because terms have to be performed in the future." What I meant and should have said was that a contract is not contingent or conditional because terms have to be performed in the future. Subject to these modifications, I only repeat that I abide by the view that I have already expressed in the rulings reported in Baga Mal v.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT Full Bench

First Criminal Sessions of 1940 : Case No. 2
October 4, 1940

BEAUMONT, C. J., BROOMFIELD AND

WASSOODREW, JJ.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR

THOKARSI NARSI—ACCUSED

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 289—Trial by jury—Function of jury—Duty of Judge in leaving case to jury—Prosecution case closed—Conclusion of Judge that jury will not be justified in convicting even if they believed all prosecution evidence—Judge is bound to say so and direct jury that in law they must give verdict of not guilty—He must not in such case leave matter to jury.

In a trial by jury if the Judge comes to the conclusion that there is no evidence to go to the jury, it is the duty of the Judge to direct the jury that in law they must acquit. It is the function of the jury, to determine whether the evidence is true, and if the Judge thinks that the prosecution evidence, if true, will lead to a conviction, then he is bound to leave the case to the jury. But if he thinks that though weak the evidence if true will justify a conviction, he must leave the case to the jury, cautioning them, of course, about the weak points in the evidence. But if the Judge, after the prosecution case is closed, comes to the conclusion that, assuming that the jury believe every word of the prosecution evidence, nevertheless they will not be justified in convicting, then he is bound in law to say so and to direct the jury that in law they must bring in a verdict of not guilty, and he ought not in such a case to leave the matter to the jury. [p. 7, col. 2.]

Messrs. A. C. Beynon and N. K. Pettigara (Public Prosecutor), for the Crown.

Sir Jamshedji Kanga, Messrs. V. G. Mohile and M. G. Dharamsey, for Accused No. 1.

Beaumont, C. J.—This matter comes before the Court on a certificate given by the Advocate General under cl. 26, Letters Patent. Under cl. 25, there is no appeal from a decision in the Sessions Court, but under cl. 26, the Advocate-General may certify the matter to the Court if he thinks that there has been some error in law on a matter which requires further consideration. Many people, including myself, think that it is very wrong that there should be no appeal, at any rate on points of law, from a trial in Sessions in this Court. But however that may be, in law there is no appeal. The learned Advocate-General in deciding whether to give a certificate, and this Court in dealing with any matter which he has certified, is in a difficulty where the case is not one of murder, because owing to the insufficient number of shorthand writers supplied to the Court no shorthand note is taken of the learned Judge's charge to the jury. It is only in murder cases that a notice is taken. The ground on which the learned Advocate-General has certified that the case should be reconsidered is that he thinks that a question arises whether the learned Judge should not have withdrawn the case from the jury on the ground that there was no evidence to go before them. In determining that question it would assist us to know from the charge to the jury what view the learned Judge took of the evidence. However fortunately the learned Judge made a full note of the evidence and we can ascertain from that what the real case was.

There were three accused, and the general nature of the case was this. The present appellant, if I may so call him, accused No. 1, was one of the two cashiers with Messrs. Sulleman Mitha & Co. Ltd., Bombay. In the month of March 1939 Sulleman Mitha & Co. sent an agent named Ratansi into the Broach district to buy cotton. He bought certain cotton and drew a hundi on the firm by way of payment, cashed that hundi with one Achratlal or Amratlal Hirralal of Broach, and notified his firm of Sulleman Mitha & Co., on the same day by Ex. B that he had drawn such a hundi. The number of the hundi was No. 1604, and the evidence is that Ratansi took with him a book of forms of hundis, and it was from this book that he withdrew the form No. 1604 and filled it up in favour of the payee for Rs. 5,000. The evidence of the two directors of Sulleman Mitha & Co., who were called, is that in the normal course a hundi is presented for payment within a day or two after they have been notified that it has been drawn, and, having been presented, it would be the duty of one of the cashiers to check the particulars of the hundi, and if there was nothing suspicious about it, he would pay it, as he would have seen in the ordinary course the notification that the hundi had been drawn, and would probably have no difficulty in deciding whether it was a hundi which should be honoured. But in the case of this hundi, No. 1604, it was not presented for payment within the normal time, and accordingly the directors instructed accused No. 1 as cashier not to pay it when it was presented without reference to them. The hundi was dated March 8, and these instructions were given, I suppose, about the 10th or 11th.

On May 5, hundi No. 1604 was presented for payment to Sulleman Mitha & Co. It was apparently received by some other clerk. Accused No. 1 says he was not in the office, and the particulars were entered in a book by that other clerk. But then accused No. 1 as cashier was informed about the presentation of this hundi, and he at once informed the two directors of the firm who told him not to honour it without further instructions. They then enquired into the matter. The hundi had been presented through a bank, called the New Citizen Bank, and they found that it had been paid into an account with that bank in the name of Shamji Damji, and it was not found possible to trace Shamji Damji. The directors also thought that the signature on the hundi was not that of Ratansi, their agent. Therefore they placed the matter in the hands of the Police, and I think we must take it for the purposes of this reference that it was definitely proved that accused No. 2 was the man into whose account this hundi had been paid, that Shamji Damji was a fictitious name taken by accused No. 2, and that accused No. 2 had forged the body of the hundi. The endorsements on the hundi, according to the evidence, had been forged by accused No. 3. But there is no suggestion that accused No. 1 had forged any part of the hundi. The actual charges against accused No. 1 were two:

First: That you, accused No. 1, Thokars Narsi between the 8th day of March 1939, and the 5th day of May 1939, at Bombay, being employed as a Mehta and cashier of Sulleman Mitha & Co. Ltd., Bombay, committed theft by stealing page No. 1904 from an hundi book (Ex. D) in the possession of the said Sulleman Mitha & Co. Ltd., Bombay, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 381, I. P. O.

Secondly: That you, accused No. 1, Thokars Narsi, at the time and place aforesaid, abetted the commission by accused No. 2, Khiasi Asaria, of the offence of forging a valuable security, which offence was committed in consequence of your abetment and that you have thereby committed an offence punishable under ss. 109 and 487, I. P. O."

The suggestion is that the forged hundi, which purports to bear the number 1604, had in fact been written on a blank form, and the number had been altered. It looks as if both numbers '6' and '0' had been altered, but the suggestion is that the original number of the form used was 1904, and the reason for that suggestion is that in the hundi book kept by the firm form No. 1904 is missing. So that the prosecution case seems to be this, that the hundi No. 1604, which was a genuine hundi, was stolen. The evidence is that it was sent by post from Broach to the payee's agent in Bombay in order to be cashed, and that in fact it never arrived. So probably it was stolen, and it may be that originally it was intended to present that hundi, perhaps with a forged endorsement, for payment, but that was not done. Whether the hundi met with some accident or not, I do not know. But the suggestion is that, not being able to present the original hundi, the conspirators got another form with a number which could be easily altered to 1604, and they then altered the number and forged the contents of the hundi; so that the charge against accused No. 1 is that he stole the form No. 1904 and thereby enabled the forgery to be committed; and the question is whether there was any evidence to go to the jury on that charge.

Now, the book of forms, from which form No. 1904 was missing, was kept in a cupboard in a part of the office of Sulleman Mitha & Co. which was only occupied by a typist, and the typist was not there all day. It would, I think, have been easy for anybody to come up by the lift and enter this room, and if the typist was out, there would be no difficulty in getting to the cupboard. The door is just next to where the lift comes up. This cupboard was kept locked at night and each of the two cashiers, including accused No. 1, had a key. The other cashier was away when the forged hundi was presented though he had only gone away early in May, and his key was kept by the directors in his absence. So that, no doubt, accused No. 1 had access to this cupboard in which the forms were kept. But then the evidence of both the directors is that many other people had access to it as well, because stationery and other things were kept in the cupboard, and the cupboard was kept open during the day. It was unlocked by one of the cashiers in the morning, and left open during the day, and as there was only the typist in the room at certain periods, there would be no difficulty in many persons entering this room and taking away forms from the hundi book in the cupboard.

However, the first piece of evidence against accused No. 1 is that he had access to the cupboard from which it is suggested that the form was taken. I may say that there is no conclusive evidence to my mind that the forged hundi is on a form which was originally numbered 1904. It looks as if the '6' and the '0' have been altered, but I am quite unable to say from the hundi itself that the original number was 1904. The second figure has been obliterated, and it is no more than a guess that it may have been 9.

Then the next piece of evidence against accused No. 1 is that accused No. 2, who did the major part of the forgery, is his cousin, and they lived in the same building, though not on the same floor. The third piece of evidence is that it is proved that on May 1, that is seven days before the forged hundi was presented, accused No. 1 drew a cheque on his bank account to self or bearer, and gave that cheque to accused No. 2, who cashed it, endorsing his name on the back of the cheque, because, although it was a bearer cheque, the bank apparently required anybody cashing it to endorse his name on the back. It is then shown that accused No. 2, very shortly after receiving this money from accused No. 1, opened an account in the name of Shamji Damji at the New Citizen Bank, and for that purpose he had to deposit at least Rs. 100 to open the account, and he did in fact deposit Rs. 150, and it is a justifiable inference that he obtained a part of that Rs. 150 by means of this advance from accused No. 1. But it is not shown that accused No. 1 knew the purposes for which the sum of Rs. 85 was required, or the manner in which it was in fact used. He says that accused No. 2, being his cousin, borrowed the money from him to go upcountry to his native place, and he says, though there is no independent evidence of the fact, that he had advanced him moneys before. That, at any rate, is not improbable seeing that accused No. 2 was his cousin and had apparently no work. That is the whole of the evidence against accused No. 1. Mr. Beynon, Counsel for the prosecution, in addressing the trial Court, said that he did not stress the charge of theft against accused No. 1, but relied on the abetment of forgery. It is, I think, difficult to see what abetment of forgery there was apart from the alleged theft of the form No. 1904. But the jury brought in a verdict of guilty against accused No. 1 on both charges, by a majority of 8 to 1, and the learned Judge accepted that verdict and sentenced accused No. 1 to five years' rigorous imprisonment.

The question which we have to determine is whether there was any evidence to go to the jury that accused No. 1 was guilty. Under s. 289, Criminal P. C., if the Court considers that there is no evidence that the accused committed the offence, it may, in a case tried by a jury, direct the jury to return a verdict of not guilty. No doubt, the word used is "may" not "must," but it is well settled that if the Judge comes to the conclusion that there is no evidence to go to the jury, it is the duty of the Judge to direct the jury that in law they must acquit. In applying any rule, there are always cases on the border line, and it may be difficult some times to say on which side the particular case falls. But the general principle which governs the present matter is to my mind perfectly clear. It is the function of the jury, in a trial by jury, to determine whether the evidence is true, and if the Judge thinks that the prosecution evidence, if true, will lead to a conviction, then he is bound to leave the case to the jury. He may think that the prosecution story is inherently improbable, that the evidence is discrepant, and that it is of a class which is generally unreliable, for example, the evidence of discharged servants; but if he thinks that though weak the evidence if true will justify a conviction, he must leave the case to the jury, cautioning them, of course, about the weak points in the evidence. But if the Judge, after the prosecution case is closed, comes to the conclusion that, assuming that the jury believe every word of the prosecution evidence, nevertheless they will not be justified in convicting, then he is bound in law to say so and to direct the jury that in law they must bring in a verdict of not guilty, and he ought not in such a case to leave the matter to the jury.

Now, the question here is whether there was any evidence on which the jury could convict, assuming they believed the whole story against accused No. 1 to be true. To my mind there was not. It is perfectly clear that the particular items of evidence against accused No. 1 come to nothing. Any one may have a dishonest cousin, any one may lend money to that cousin, and it is shown that many people besides accused No. 1 had access to the cupboard in which the document alleged to have been stolen was kept. Therefore none of those particular items of evidence can lead to a conviction. But, no doubt, one has to consider their cumulative effect, and it seems to me that the cumulative effect comes at the very most to a case of suspicion. The learned Judge seems to have been most impressed, judging from the memorandum which he has been good enough to supply to the Court, with the fact that very shortly before the forged hundi was presented, accused No. 1 had lent money, or given money, to accused No. 2, without which it might have been difficult or impossible for accused No. 2 to open the account though which the forged hundi was to be presented. But, that at the most raises mere suspicion.

If it had been shown that accused No. 1 knew the purpose for which the money was to be used, that would have been a different matter. But there is no evidence whatever that he knew the purpose for which it was intended, or the manner in which in fact it was used, and it is not by any means unlikely that he lent the money to his cousin because the cousin was in financial difficulties and wanted to go upcountry to his native place. But, at most, the evidence raises a case of suspicion, and I must confess that, to my mind, when one looks at the whole of the prosecution evidence, the suspicion is extremely faint. It is proved that accused No. 1 as cashier knew that this hundi No. 1604 was suspect. He had been warned by the directors that if it was presented for payment, he was not to pay it without reference to them; he was to take instructions; and in fact he reported to them the presentation of the hundi. Surely, therefore, if he was in a conspiracy to try and cash a forged hundi on form No. 1604, he would have told his fellow conspirators that it was perfectly useless to go on with the matter. He knew for a fact that the presentation of hundi No. 1604 was not going to lead to payment of Rs. 5,000, but was likely to lead to an enquiry by the police, and he would have warned his fellow conspirators that they had better take no further steps in the matter. That would have been the course he would probably have adopted, if he had really been in the conspiracy. These observations relating, as they do, rather to the weight of the evidence, go beyond the reference, but I have made them because it is only fair to the accused, who will have to take up again the threads of his life, to say that in my view on the materials before the Court there is no case against him even of serious suspicion.

So far as the question of law is concerned, I am clearly of opinion that the learned Judge erred in not ruling that there was no case to go to the jury, and that he ought to have directed the jury that in law they must bring in a verdict of not guilty. That being so, we must set aside the conviction, acquit the accused, and direct that he be released.

Miscellaneous Appeal No. 63 of 1940

THOMAS, C. J. AND GHULAM HASAN, J.

Mahant SHEOAMBAR BAN—

DEFENDANT No. 1—APPELLANT

versus

MOHAN BAN—PLAINTIFF AND ANOTHER—

DEFENDANT No. 2—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XL, r. 1—Receiver—Appointment of—Rival claimants to property of deceased owner—None of claimants in possession of property since death of owner—Possibility of waste and mismanagement—Receiver should be appointed—Trial Court exercising discretion judicially—No interference by Appellate Court.

In a case where there are rival claimants to the property in dispute and the property has never been in the possession of any of the parties to the suit since the death of the deceased owner and the situation is fraught with the possibility of waste and mismanagement, it would eminently be a case for the appointment of a Receiver. [p. 13, col. 1.]

Where the trial Court, with whom the discretion under O. XL, r. 1 of the Civil P. C., primarily vests, has not exercised such discretion in an arbitrary fashion, illegally or improperly, the Appellate Court should not interfere with the order passed by the trial Court. [ibid]

Misc. A. against the order of the Civil Judge of Gonda, dated November 4, 1940.

Messrs. M. Wasim and K. M. Shamim, for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. N. Roy and K. L. Nigam, for Respondent No. 1.

Mr. B. N. Roy, for the Receiver.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by defendant No. 1 against the order dated November 4, 1940, passed by the Civil Judge of Gonda for the appointment of a Receiver in a pending suit between the parties.

The plaintiff-respondent filed a suit on September 18, 1940, for a declaration that he is the Mahant of Math Srinagar, pargana and District Gonda and is the heir of Mahant Rajendra Ban deceased and in the capacity of Mahant and heir he is entitled to get possession and occupation of certain properties in the District of Gonda, a list whereof was attached to the plaint. He also prayed for a decree for possession in respect of certain pukhtadari land in village Anchalapur in the District of Bahraich. The ground of the plaintiff's claim was that there is an ancestral Math of the Nihang Faqirs of Ban Sanyasi class in village Srinagar, Pargana and District Gonda existing from Shahi times. According to the plaintiff the Mahant of this sect had always been a Nihang Goshain. Mahant Rajendra Ban, the last Mahant of the said Asthan, having died on March 16/17, 1940, without leaving any disciple, the plaintiff claimed to be the nearest heir, both legally as well as according to a custom, to the deceased Mahant according to a pedigree set out at the foot of the plaint. The plaintiff further alleged that on September 6, 1940, the Visnami and Sanyasi Faqirs assembled at the Math and in the presence of respectable persons admitted him to be a competent person for the Mahantship and to be the nearest heir of the deceased Mahant Rajendra Ban. The aforementioned Faqirs conferred on him the tilak and chadar (token of Mahantship) and declared him as the Mahant of the said Math.

The appellant, who is defendant No. 1, filed a written statement contesting the claim. The appellant denied the pedigree set up by the plaintiff in so far as his connection with the founder of the Math and the successive Mahants was concerned. The appellant on the other hand claimed exclusive right to succeed of the Mahant and alleged that on the 13th day ceremony a bhandara of the deceased Mahant took place and he had been properly selected as the Mahant of the said Asthan after due ceremonies.

There was another defendant impleaded in the case as defendant No. 2 but he does not appear to have filed any written statement and although notice has been served on him in the present appeal he has not put in appearance. He did not turn up in the trial Court in spite of service. He has been impleaded as defendant No. 2 in the case because he filed an application for mutation in May 1940 in the Revenue Court.

The plaintiff filed an application on September 19, 1940, for the appointment of a Receiver. The ground of the application was that the appellant had no right of any sort in the property of the Asthan. He was neither a Goshain nor was he entitled to succeed as the Mahant of Asthan Srinagar under law or custom. The plaintiff asserted that his own title to the property was unassailable. It was further stated that upon the death of the deceased Mahant the Sub-Divisional Officer of Tarabganj visited the Asthan and locked up all the movables except some articles and that the Tahsildar of Gonda subsequently prepared a list of all the articles. It was alleged that many of these articles were found missing when another Tahsildar subsequently visited the Asthan. A cycle was alleged to have been given by the appellant to the patwari of village Srinagar and a motor-car had been given away to one Pandit Raj Kishore Upadhyay. Fifty thousand bricks out of four lakhs lying in the kiln, which had been started by the deceased Mahant, were said to have been removed from the kiln. There were many decrees and debts which were likely to become time-barred if necessary proceedings were not taken in time and there was a large amount of money in fixed deposit of the Allahabad Bank which was to mature on December 2, 1940, and the Math was liable to suffer loss if the deposit was not renewed. The immovable property situate in Gonda had been attached by the Deputy Commissioner in connection with the arrears of revenue and was still under attachment. The appellant had taken possession of the pukhtadari land in village Anchalapur, District Bahraich, and was misappropriating the income of that property. The appellant was possessed of no property and it would be difficult to realise any mesne profits from him in the event of a decree being passed in the plaintiff's favour.

A written reply was filed in answer to this application by the appellant in which the allegations were generally denied, particularly those relating to the disposal of the bicycle and the motor-car and the removal of the bricks. The appellant asserted that he was in possession of the entire movable and immovable property owned by the Asthan since the death of the deceased Mahant, except some movable property, which had been locked up by the Sub-Divisional Officer, and he continued to remain in possession, making collections and paying Govt. revenue until June 1, 1940, when the Deputy Commissioner of Gonda attached all the property in Gonda District under s. 150 of the Land Revenue Act leaving undisturbed the possession of the appellant over certain sir and khudkast lands. The appellant had further obtained mutation in regard to the villages situate in Tahsil Utraula, District Gonda, and the pukhtadari rights in Bahraich District. He had further been in possession and occupation of the Math and had been conducting all arrangements for the worship of the Math. The right of the plaintiff to obtain an order for the appointment of a Receiver was emphatically denied.

The learned Civil Judge after hearing both parties allowed the application and appointed one Mr. Jwala Prasad Sinha as receiver over the entire properties belonging to the Math and directed him to take possession at once from the Deputy Commissioner. The Receiver was directed to deposit the valuables in some Bank or in the Treasury and the other movables in the nazarat. He was further directed to make proper arrangements for the custody of the live stock and manage the zamindari properties in accordance with the rules of the Court of Wards. He was allowed ten per cent. as his remuneration over the actual collections in addition to the expenses of management. The learned Judge held that there was no reliable evidence of the appellant's possession over the property since the death of the deceased Mahant and there was very great danger of the income of the property being spent over the litigation instead of over the purposes for which the endowment exists. He was of opinion that both the claimants in the case were of the mendicant class having no property in their possession and the loss, if caused by waste and mismanagement, will not be liable to be compensated. We understand that the Receiver has taken possession of the property in dispute with the exception of village Anchalapur and some sir lands being still in the possession of the applicant, cash in the Bank and movable property in the Math.

We have heard learned Counsel on both sides at some length and we are of opinion that the order of the lower Court appointing a Receiver should be maintained. Mahant Rajendra Ban, the deceased Mahant, died on March 17, 1940. The property left by him is valued in the plaint at Rs. 2,03,034-1-9. The income of the immovable property is stated to be about Rs. 14,090 a year. There is a fixed deposit of Rs. 55,000 in the Allahabad Bank standing in the name of the deceased Mahant. This deposit was due to expire on December 2, 1940. Rs. 43-12-9 are locked in the Math itself. There are cash certificates of the value of Rs. 1,070 and Rs. 435 are in the Post Office Savings Bank Account in the name of Naresh Ban, about which a succession certificate had been sanctioned in the name of the deceased Mahant. In addition to these there are 500 shares of the Indian Iron & Steel Company and a number of decrees, bonds, promissory notes and deeds—the value is not stated—executed in favour of the deceased Mahant. It is no longer disputed between the parties that the Sub-Divisional Officer upon receipt of the news of the death of the deceased Mahant visited the Asthan on March 17, 1940, and locked the property in the Math leaving a few articles.

On March 21, 1940, the appellant made application to the Deputy Commissioner of Gonda in which he stated that the deceased Mahant had nominated no disciple in his lifetime and consequently the Sub-Divisional Officer of Tarabganj visited the Math on March 17, 1940, and appointed the appellant as the custodian of the Math. He further stated that as long as a lawful heir was not installed in the gaddi it was necessary to perform the Kriya Karma ceremonies of the deceased Mahant and since the appellant was not given any money and he possessed no independent means of his own wherewith to spend money on the Kriya Karma ceremonies, he requested that he may be given at least Rs. 2,000 for the performance of the Kriya Karma ceremonies. The appellant further asked that he may be permitted by an order to realise the aforesaid amount from the estate and that a Tahsil peon may be deputed to assist him in the collections. The Sub-Divisional Officer reported to the Deputy Commissioner as follows :

"I think there will be no harm in permitting collection of rent through Tahsildar to the extent of Rs. 2,000 and in handing over the amount to the applicant after deduction of necessary charges for expenditure on the Kriya Karma ceremony of the deceased which will be a legitimate charge on the deceased's property. The applicant has been put in charge of the deceased's property by Mr. Jayal, as he solemnly affirms, and he seems to be a proper person for the performance of the necessary ceremonies. He must, however, produce regular accounts of the expenditure."

The Deputy Commissioner approved of this report and the Sub-Divisional Officer then directed the Tahsildar to comply with the order. He further directed the applicant to keep regular accounts of the money handed over to him and produce them after the Kriya Karma.

On April 9, 1940, the Tahsildar of Gonda reported to the Sub-Divisional Officer that there were rival claimants to the Math and its property and that he apprehended difficulties in the realisation of Govt. revenue. He, therefore, recommended that the property should be attached.

The Sub-Divisional Officer in his report dated April 12, 1940, made to the Deputy Commissioner with reference to the Tahsildar's report, stated that the title to the gaddi was contested by four claimants, two of whom, namely the plaintiff and the defendant, had filed applications for mutation of their names. He further stated that upon enquiry he had come to know that the alleged election in favour of Sheoambar Ban (defendant No. 1), who claims to have been duly elected on March 21, 1940, was more or less a farce. There were no written proceedings of the so called election and there were wild stories abroad about its farcical nature. He agreed with the report of the Tahsildar that each disputant would try to secure forcible possession of the estate and the task of the collection of revenue would be beset with numerous difficulties. He supported the Tahsildar's recommendation to attach the entire estate under s. 150 of the Land Revenue Act.

On May 15, 1940, the Tahsildar of Gonda similarly reported that there is no likelihood of the revenue being recovered as there is no living Mahant of the vacant gaddi of Srinagar. The Deputy Commissioner thereupon ordered the attachment of the property, which accordingly took place on June 1, 1940.

It appears that on April 1, 1940, the plaintiff applied for mutation of names in the Revenue Court while the defendant made a similar application two days later, namely April 3, 1940. It has been urged on behalf of the defendant-appellant that he has been in possession of the property in dispute from the death of the deceased Mahant, namely March 17, 1940, up to June 1, 1940, when the attachment took place, and during this period he has realised Rs. 4,966-2-6 and paid Rs. 1,903 as Govt. revenue. In support of this contention he has relied on certain receipts. On behalf of the plaintiff the possession of the defendant has been strenuously denied and it has been urged that a number of receipts showing realisation of Rs. 2,900 and odd relate to the period between May 20, 1940, to June 1, 1940. Be that as it may, we are satisfied from the circumstances of this case that the defendant-appellant has not been able to establish that he was in possession of the property in dispute in his own right from the time of the death of the deceased Mahant. The various reports of the Tahsildar, and the orders of the Sub-Divisional Officer and the Deputy Commissioner unmistakably show that the defendant was appointed as a custodian of the Math to look after the worship as well as to see to the performance, of the Kriya Karma ceremonies, which was considered to be essential. It was with this object that he was allowed a sum of Rs. 2,000. It is not unlikely in these circumstances that under colour of the permission granted to him, by the executive authorities he may have collected money from the tenants in the estate and issued receipts to them. We are not prepared to hold that the defendant-appellant was in peaceable and effective possession in his own right from the time of the death of the deceased Mahant and we do not, therefore, place any reliance upon the documents evidencing the possession of the defendant-appellant.

It has also been urged in this connection that the defendant has obtained mutation of the pukhtadari rights in Bahraich district and that in regard to certain villages in the Utraula Tahsil he has obtained a similar order in course of the record operations. There is no doubt, however, that the mutation proceedings are still pending before the Sub-Divisional Officer of Gonda in regard to the entire zamindari property in Gonda District belonging to the Math and that no order for possession has been made in favour of the defendant-appellant by the Revenue Court.

The position, therefore, is that at the time of the death of the deceased Mahant on March 17, 1940, neither of the parties was in possession of the property in dispute and the possession, if any exercised by the defendant-appellant, was in no sense a possession in his own right, nor can it be said that it was peaceable or undisturbed because it is clear from the circumstances of the case that the Sub-Divisional Officer upon finding that the deceased Mahant had left no disciple took immediate action in locking the movables and prevented the scramble by allowing the defendant-appellant to perform the Kriya Karma ceremonies of the deceased Mahant and for the aforesaid purposes to make certain collections of the rent. It is also clear that in view of the rival claims having been put forward in the mutation Court the Revenue authorities anticipated a scramble for forcible possession and consequently, recommended attachment of the property with a view to securing the realisation of the Govt. Revenue, and this attachment accordingly took place on June 1, 1940. Neither party having been in possession of the property from March 17, 1940, till June 1, 1940, when the attachment took place, the property must be considered to have been in medio and the possession of the Deputy Commissioner must, therefore, be deemed to be the possession of the rightful owner of the property. The observation of Lord Cranworth in the case of Owen v. Homan, (4 H. L. 1031), (1), so often quoted in cases arising under O. XL, r. 1, of the Civil P. O., are fully applicable to the circumstances of the case. It was observed in the said case:

"In such cases the Court must of necessity exercise a discretion as to whether it will or will not interfere by this kind of interim protection of the property. Where indeed the property is as it were in medio in the enjoyment of no one, the Court can hardly do wrong in taking possession. It is the common interest of all parties that the Court should prevent a scramble. Such is the case when a Receiver of a property of a deceased person is appointed pending a litigation in the Ecclesiastical Court as to the right of probate or administration. No one is in the actual lawful enjoyment of property so circumstanced, and no wrong can be done to any one by taking it and preserving it for the benefit of the successful litigant. But where the object of the plaintiff is to assert a right to property of which the defendant is in the enjoyment, the case is necessarily involved in further questions. The Court by taking possession at the instance of the plaintiff may be doing a wrong to the defendant, in some cases an irreparable wrong."

Reference was made on behalf of the defendant appellant to Ali Raza Khan v. Nawazish Ali Khan (1936 O. W. N., 466) (2), Ali Raza Khan v. Nawazish Ali Khan (1937 O. W. N., 197) (3), Bidurramji v. Kesho Ramji (1938 O. W. N., 1153) (4), Bisheshar Singh v. Jadunath Singh (1939 O. W. N. 59) (5), Ali Raza Khan v. Nawazish Ali Khan (1939 O. W. N., 615), (6) and Benoy Krishna Mukherjee v. Satish Chandra Giri (L. R. 55 I. A., 131), (7).

It was held in Ali Raza Khan v. Nawazish Ali Khan (1936 O. W. N., 466), (2), that the question whether a Receiver should be appointed cannot be decided on the rulings but according to the circumstances of each case. It was further held that in order to succeed in getting a Receiver appointed the plaintiff must show that prima facie he has the title and that the defendant has no title. In that case the mutation Courts in Oudh and Lahore had decided the matter in favour of the defendant. It was held therefore that the Court could not at that stage decide the entire case by holding that the Revenue Courts were wrong and prima facie the defendant had no title and that the plaintiff had title.

The decision in the original suit reported in Ali Raza Khan v. Nawazish Ali Khan (1936 O. W. N. 466, (2), came up in appeal before a Bench of this Court and is reported in Ali Raza Khan v. Nawazish Ali Khan (1937 O. W. N., 197 (3). It was held, confirming the decision, that the appointment of a Receiver is a matter entirely within the discretion of the trial Judge and unless it can be shown by the applicant that the trial Judge has not exercised a judicial discretion in the matter, he cannot succeed in an appeal filed by him against the order of the trial Judge rejecting his application for the appointment of a Receiver. It was also held that where the defendant in a suit has been put in possession of the properties in dispute by the Revenue Courts after contest on the ground of his prima facie title to them, it would not be just and convenient for the Court to deprive him of that possession and to appoint a Receiver in his place to manage the property.

The case of Bidurramji v. Kesho Ramji (1938 O. W. N., 1153 (4), was a case in which the defendant had been in peaceable possession for about 15 years without objection on behalf of anybody and it was held therefore that it would not be in the interests of justice to deprive him of his possession at the instance of a plaintiff who bases his claim on a custom denied by the defendant. It was further ruled that in matters which lie within the discretion of the trial Court such as under O. XL, r. 1 of the Civil P. O. the Appellate Court should not interfere with the trial Court's discretion unless that discretion has been exercised illegally and improperly.

The two cases reported in 1939 Oudh Weekly Notes at pp. 59 and 615 Bisheshar Singh v. Jadunath Singh (5), and Ali Raza Khan v. Nawazish Ali Khan (6), are wholly inapplicable as in both those cases there had been a decision on the merits deciding the rights of the parties in the property.

concerned and there could be no question of the appointment of a Receiver in such a case.

The case of Benoy Krishna Mukherjee v Satish Chandra Giri (L. R. 55 I. A. 131) (7), was a case in which their Lordships of the Judicial Committee upheld the order of the High Court discharging the order of the trial Court appointing a Receiver in respect of the properties which had been in the Mahant's possession and enjoyment for a considerable number of years and were his self-acquired properties. Their Lordships observed that the order of the trial Judge appointing a Receiver over properties, which had been in the possession of the defendant for a long time as his self-acquired properties, was not altogether within the principles of a judicial exercise of discretion, and although the order of the trial Court is no doubt discretionary in such a case yet that discretion is liable to interference if it is not in accordance with the principles on which judicial discretion must be exercised. If the Appellate Court in such a case concludes that proper discretion was not used by the Court below, it is free to exercise its own discretion in the matter.

As regards the merits of the claim of either party to the property in dispute, we consider it obviously undesirable to express any opinion one way or the other without running the risk of its being used hereafter in such a way as to prejudice the case of either party. It is enough for our purpose to state that the questions raised by both parties as regards their title to the property in dispute are serious questions to be tried at the hearing of the case and it would be extremely unwise to prejudice the matter at this stage of the case. There is no doubt however, that in a case such as the present where there are rival claimants to the property in dispute and the property has never been in the possession of any of the parties to the suit since the death of the deceased owner and the situation is fraught with the possibility of waste and mismanagement, it would eminently be a case for the appointment of a Receiver. We are further of opinion that the trial Court, with whom the discretion under O. XL, r. 1 of the Civil P. C. primarily vests, has not been shown to have exercised such discretion in an arbitrary fashion, illegally or improperly.

The result, therefore, is that we uphold the order of the lower Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

In addition to the directions given by the trial Court in its order we direct that as regards the property entered in list E of the plaint the Receiver shall renew the fixed deposit in the Allahabad Bank in the name of the lower Court for a period of one year in the first instance, and further the cash certificates shall remain invested as before.

The interim order dated November 25, 1930 passed by us is discharged, excepting in so far as it relates to the furnishing of the security by the Receiver and the rate of remuneration allowed to him.

Smt. SARBASUNDARI DASSI—PLAINTIFF

Receiver—Receiver, appointment of, in partition suit—Receiver considering his personal interest to the exclusion of those of parties—Removal of such Receiver—Commissioner—Costs—Appointment of Commissioner in partition suit—Whether can apply to Court for payment of costs—Bill of Commissioner of partition, if can be taxed—Court, if can order, in suit for partition, Receiver to pay costs of attorney of deceased party.

Where the attitude of a Receiver appointed in a partition suit is inconsistent with the attitude of a Receiver, that is, where he is considering his own personal interests to the exclusion of the interests of the parties whose representative he is and whose benefit should be his concern, such Receiver should be removed.

A stranger may apply in proper circumstances, for costs and a Commissioner of partition is justified in applying to the Court which appointed him for payment of costs if he is unable to receive payment of costs to which he is entitled. Brookbank v. East London Ry. Co. (1), explained.

The bill of a Commissioner of partition can be taxed by taxing officer.

In a partition case the Court can order against the Receiver for payment of costs incurred by an attorney of a deceased party.

Messrs. B. C. Ghosh and N. C. Chatterjee, for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. P. C. Ghosh and J. C. Sett, for the Defendants.

Order.—This is an application by the attorney of a deceased plaintiff, by a Commissioner of partition and special referee appointed in the suit, and by the Commissioner's clerk, for an order for taxation of the Commissioner's remuneration and expenses, for an order for taxation of the costs of the deceased plaintiff, for removal of the defendant Jogendra Nath Law as Receiver in the suit, for appointment of the Official Receiver, and for payment by him on appointment of the costs of the petitioner. The plaintiff brought a suit on June 20, 1933, for administration of the estate of Beni Madhab Law deceased, for construction of his will, for partition, and for possession. The plaintiff was a daughter-in-law of Beni Madhab, being the widow of his son Bhupen who died in 1921. Bhupen had three brothers, Jogendra, Mahendra and Nagendra. Jogendra is the Receiver. Jogendra and Mahendra were two of the defendants in the suit as were the sons of Nagendra who had died, and the other defendant was the widow of Beni Madhab. On April 6, 1936, there was a consent decree in which the shares of the parties were declared: "The plaintiff Smt. Sarbasundari Dassi was declared entitled as a Hindu widow to one fourth share. Jogendra was also entitled to one-fourth share, and he was appointed Receiver of the secular property belonging to the deceased Beni Madhab, and empowered to collect the rents, issues and profits, of the debutter property. One of the present applicants, Hemanta Kumar Mitra was appointed Commissioner and special referee, and there were directions for partition and division of the estate and for the usual enquiries and report. The decree further provided that the Receiver do out of the estate pay the costs of the respective parties to this suit up to this decree, to be taxed by the taxing officer of this Court as between attorney and client as of a defended suit, to their respective attorneys and that

"the costs and expenses of the Commissioner of partition, namely, of issuing and executing the same and of confirming the Commissioner's report of the respective parties be paid by the respective parties in proportion to the value of their respective shares and that the same be paid to the respective attorneys by the Receiver and be debited by the latter to the respective shares of the parties, with liberty to apply."

Hemanta Kumar Mitra was duly appointed, and held a number of meetings. With the consent of parties he appointed two surveyors, who are now supporting this application, and a clerk. The Commissioner held his last meeting on February 25, 1938 and he states that most of his duties had then been completed except for the actual framing of the scheme and making the allotments report. There were several interlocutory applications in which the plaintiff was awarded costs. On February 26, 1938, the plaintiff died. She left a will and her executors obtained probate and applied for substitution of their names in the place of the deceased plaintiff in the suit. That application has been adjourned from time to time and is still pending in circumstances which will be related hereafter. Nandarani, Beni Madhab's widow, died in 1939 and the other defendants contend that they are the sole reversioners and that the administration and partition suit which was brought by Sarbasundari was unnecessary. In December 1939 they brought a suit for a declaration that all causes of action and all rights to prosecute or further proceed with this suit had ceased on the death of Sarbasundari and had become vested in Jogendra and Mahendra, and further for a declaration that Sarbasundari had no right to dispose by her will of the rents, issues and profits, to which she was entitled as a Hindu widow. Having filed this suit, Jogendra then applied for an injunction restraining the executors from being substituted in the place of Sarbasundari in her suit. The result is that nothing further has been done in this suit, and the suit brought by Jogendra and Mahendra is still pending. The application for substitution has been directed to be heard after that suit is concluded.

The applicants point out that Jogendra as Receiver was directed to file his accounts half yearly. He failed to do so, and an order was made at the instance of the plaintiff during her lifetime ordering those accounts to be filed. In spite of that order which was made nearly three years ago, the accounts are still in arrears. Apart from the question whether the applicants should receive the payments for which they ask it appears to me quite clear that Jogendra should no longer be retained as Receiver. In addition to his failure to file his accounts his whole attitude is inconsistent with the attitude of a Receiver. He has his own personal interests, and it is clear from the attitude which he has adopted on this application, and in fact ever since the death of the plaintiff, that he is considering his own personal interests to the exclusion of the interests of the parties whose representative he is and whose benefit should be his concern. There will be an order that Jogendra do file his accounts within one month from the date of this order, that he be forthwith removed from acting as Receiver, and that the Official Receiver be appointed in his stead. The Registrar will report to this Court within five weeks from the date of this order whether the accounts have or have not been filed. If Jogendra fail to comply with this order the Court will consider the action that should be taken against him. The remainder of the application relates to the costs of the attorney and the Commissioner of partition who was appointed in the partition suit. It is argued on behalf of Jogendra that no costs should be payable on the ground that on the death of the plaintiff the suit no longer exists and that the question whether or no any costs or fees are payable will depend upon the result of the suit which he has filed and which is now pending.

It is argued further that the applicants are not parties to the suit, and therefore they have no right to any of the reliefs which they claim. In support of this contention reliance has been placed on the case in Brocklebank v. East London Ry. Co. (1) where it was held that a person who is not a party to an action is not entitled to apply by motion for payment of money to him by a Receiver appointed in the action. In the course of the argument it was pointed out by the learned Judge (Fry, J.) that the considerations might have been very different on that motion had the suit been, as it is here, an administration suit. The decision is a decision on the facts of that particular case, and to my mind it decided no more than that there is no general principle that a person who is interested in having money paid to him by a Receiver has for that reason alone a right to apply to Court for an order on the Receiver to pay his costs. In Halsbury's Laws of England, Edn. II, Volume 28, para. 99 of the general rule is stated:

"On any application by a stranger to enforce his rights, the Court will examine the claim and either give effect to it by an order in the action or, if this is impracticable, allow any necessary proceedings to be taken outside the action."

Clearly, a stranger may apply in proper circumstances, and a Commissioner of partition is amply justified in applying to the Court which appointed him, and in the suit in which he was appointed, if he is unable to receive a payment to which he is entitled. Furthermore, in the present instance there has been a consent decree so far back as April 1936, to which the Receiver was a party and by which the Receiver was ordered to pay the costs of the respective parties and the costs and expenses of the Commissioner of partition. Those costs were to be paid by the respective parties in proportion to the value of their respective shares and would be paid to the respective attorneys by the Receiver. It has been suggested that the Commissioner's bill cannot be taxed. Learned Counsel has however produced before me several bills of Commissioners which have been taxed by the taxing officer of this Court, and where the Commissioner has been appointed by this Court. I fail to see what objection there can be to the taxation of this bill. In fact, I should have thought that the Receiver would welcome taxation in order that he might be satisfied that the fees and expenses which he as Receiver has been ordered to pay were properly incurred. It is admitted that had the plaintiff been alive there would have been no difficulty in obtaining payment, but Jogendra argues that his share, which belonged to the plaintiff, has now vested in him and the other defendants in that suit. With regard to the attorney's costs, this matter was dealt with by this Court in Harnandroy Foolchand v. Gootiram Bhuttar (2). That was an application by a solicitor whose client had been awarded costs, and it was held that in a proper case the Court in the exercise of its discretion could make an order for payment of such costs to the solicitor by the opposite party. The applicant there was the solicitor for the defendant. The defendant died. But before his death he had obtained an order against the plaintiff for certain costs which had been taxed. On the death of the defendant no steps were taken to reconstitute the action, which was dismissed, and the solicitor for the defendant sought an order against the plaintiff in the action. In deciding that the solicitor was entitled to the relief which he prayed, Rankin, J. in the course of his judgment, said that he considered that it was a matter of settled law that when the Court had jurisdiction in an action it had jurisdiction not only as between the parties to that action but also as regards those officers of the Court who acted for the parties.

I can see no objection in the present instance to the payment by the Receiver to the applicant attorney and to the other applicants of the costs and expenses which have been incurred by them in the course of the partition suit. It may be that the partition suit will be held to have been misconceived, as Jogendra now suggests. The costs, however, have been incurred and

(2) 46 C. 1070; 54 Ind. Cas. 691; A. I. R. 1920 Cal. 122.

Jogendra himself, as one of the parties to that suit, consented to a decree under which he as Receiver was to pay the costs incurred and the costs and expenses of the commission. The surveyors appointed by the Commissioner have appeared in support of his application, although they are not parties to it. They were undoubtedly appointed with the consent of the parties and are also entitled to their fees. Jogendra having been discharged from acting as Receiver, the Official Receiver will be appointed and he will be directed to pay the taxed costs of the attorney for Sarbasundari, the costs incurred by or under the directions of the Commissioner of partition, including the costs of a clerk and surveyors. There will be an order in terms of cls. 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 of the notice of motion. Certified for two Counsel. The applicants are entitled to their costs certified for two Counsel. No costs are allowed either to Jogendra or to the learned Counsel appearing for the surveyors.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 10—Testator making legatee owner of decrees which might be acquired subsequently—Testator dying after obtaining decree for mesne profits—Legatee is entitled to be substituted in place of testator in proceedings for determination of mesne profits—Practice—Precedents—Right acquired not under statute but under deed—Cases of Hindu widow or widows of taluqdars cannot be relied on.

Where a person has obtained a decree for mesne profits he can make a will in respect of them. Where the will was made when there was no subsisting decree for mesne profits and it had made certain person owner not only of the movables and decrees in existence at the time of its execution but also of those which might be acquired subsequently and the testator dies after the decree for mesne profits is passed, the heir-at-law and legatee under the will is entitled to be substituted in the place of the testator in proceedings for the determination of mesne profits.

It would not be safe to rely on the cases of Hindu widows or the widow of taluqdars, where the right has come into existence under the deed and not under any statute.

Misc. A. against the order of the Additional Civil Judge of Lucknow, dated August 14, 1940.

Messrs. M. Wasim and B. P. Misra, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Niamatullah, G. D. Khare, Karti Krishna and Rameshwar Dayal, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from an order of the Additional Civil Judge of Lucknow, allowing the respondent's application under O. XXII, r. 10, Civil P. C.

There is a history behind this case and it is necessary to mention it in order to understand the points in question. There is in the city of Lucknow an Udasi shrine to the Mahant of which valuable taluqdari property and certain other property, movable and immovable belong. Sant Rain Das was the Mahant of the shrine. He died on January 8, 1922. Har Narain Das claimed the property as his chela. The mother of Sant Rain Das and the appellant Hari Saran Das alias Satgur Prasad were his rival claimants. The dispute was compromised by an agreement dated January 20, 1922, which in substance provided that Har Narain Das should hold the properties for life and Satgur Prasad alias Hari Saran Das should be the remainderman. In 1924 Hari Saran Das induced Har Narain Das to enter into an agreement dated November 25, 1924, whereby the whole of the properties were released to Hari Saran Das on certain terms. Under this agreement, Hari Saran Das in addition to the immovable property obtained possession of the cash at the Banks and estate treasuries together with the proceeds of War Bonds and other movables. Har Narain Das brought a Suit No. 1 of 1927 against Hari Saran Das impugning the agreement dated November 25, 1924, on the ground that it had been obtained from him by the fraud and undue influence of Hari Saran Das. That suit was decided by Mr. Justice Pullan of this Court on November 29, 1927. The deed of November 25, 1924, was set aside, the plaintiff was held entitled to the possession of the immovable properties and the cash and movables of Sant Rain Das. The cash and movables were found to be worth Rs. 1,83,000. It was also held that the plaintiff was entitled to mesne profits from the date of the agreement, November 25, 1924. There was an appeal to a Bench of this Court and it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to mesne profits not from the date of the agreement but from the date of the suit. There was a further appeal to the Privy Council and the judgment of the first Court in regard to mesne profits. was restored. Har Narain Das obtained possession under the decree and also executed his decree for Rs. 1,83,000 by attachment and sale of Hari Saran Das's interest in the property as remainderman. Hari Saran Das filed an objection that his interest as remainderman could not be attached. This objection was disallowed by the Civil Judge. Hari Saran Das then appealed to this Court on August 25, 1933, and during the pendency of the appeal, Har Narain Das, the decree-holder died. The question then arose between one Har Kishan Das and Hari Saran Das whether the former could be substituted as the respondent in the appeal. Har Kishan Das's contention was that he was the chela legatee of Har Narain Das and so he could be substituted in his place. Hari Saran Das's contention was that the rights of the decree-holder had passed to himself and so it could not be executed. The Chief Court found in favour of Hari Saran Das by upholding his contention that the sum of Rs. 1,83,000 vested in him. There was an appeal to the Privy Council and it was held that that sum passed to the legatee or legal heir of Har Narain Das and not to Hari Saran Das. The decision of the Privy Council that Har Narain Das was entitled to mesne profits from the date of the agreement was given in 1932. After it Har Narain Das applied for ascertainment of those mesne profits. When Har Narain Das died on December 26, 1933, Har Kishan Das applied under O. XXII, r. 3, Civil P. C. that he be substituted in place of Har Narain Das. That application was opposed by Hari Saran Das but has been allowed by the lower Court. The defendant Har Saran Das has appealed from that order.

The argument of the learned Counsel on behalf of the appellant is that Har Narain Das's interest in the decree in question ceased on his death and the said decree became part of the estate vested in the appellant. We have to decide whether the decree for mesne profits passed by the Privy Council devolved on the death of Har Narain Das on his heir or legatee or it became part and parcel of the estate vested in Hari Saran Das. The important clauses of the agreement dated January 20, 1922, are given in the judgment of the Privy Council in which it was decided that the sum of Rs. 1,83,000 devolved on the legal heirs or legatees of Har Narain Das. That case is reported in 1938 Oudh Appeals, 87. The following relevant clauses of the agreement are reproduced below—

2. The first party Mahant Har Narain Das shall remain owner and in possession of the immovable property, talugdari and non-talugdari for his lifetime without the power of transfer in any form.

4. After the death of Mahant Har Narain Das the first party Satgur Prasad alias Hari Saran Das shall own and possess the entire movable and immovable property, talugdari and non-talugdari.

9. As to the movable property it has been settled that Mahant Har Narain Das the first party shall be owner of the whole except the property specified below.

These clauses were interpreted by the Chief Court and their Lordships of the Privy Council. The question of mesne profits was also discussed by the Chief Court and the Privy Council. It is argued that the question of mesne profits was not before the Courts and so they could not come to a decision about them which could bind the parties. Hari Saran Das in reply to the application for ascertainment of mesne profits stated that the judgment of the Chief Court dealt not only with movable and immovable properties directly and specifically referred to in the family arrangement dated January 20, 1922, but also dealt with mesne profits and cash which had either been decreed to Mahant Har Narain Das or in respect of which the claim was still pending and the judgment operated as res judicata. It was held by the Chief Court that the decree for movables could not be executed against Hari Saran Das, because the rights of the original decree-holder had passed along with the rest of the property to Hari Saran Das. It was also held that the right to mesne profits, together with the estate out of which they arose, had on the death of Har Narain Das come into the ownership and possession of Hari Saran Das. The Privy Council observed that they could not accept the view of the Chief Court as to the nature of a life estate in immovable property and they discerned no merits in the novel doctrine propounded by the Chief Court that a tenant for life of immovable had only a limited interest in the rents and profits which had accrued in his lifetime and is not complete owner thereof. Accordingly, if there is res judicata it is against the appellant. At least we have the pronouncement of the Privy Council on the agreement of January 20, 1922. Their Lordships observed that "the entire movable and immovable property, talugdari and non-talugdari" in cl. 4 of the agreement could not in their opinion be stretched to cover all property whatsoever which Narain Das might acquire or which he might possess at the time of his death. It was also observed that it was not part of the purpose of the agreement to constitute Hari Saran Das the general heir of Narain Das, still less so to do this as to defeat the latter's right to leave the smallest legacy by will or to deal with accrued rents and profits as in his lifetime he might desire. The words "movable and" in cl. 4 were construed to mean that they referred to property in existence at the time of the agreement. It appears from the judgment of the Privy Council that Hari Saran Das was owner only of the movables which existed at the time of the agreement and that Har Narain Das was owner of the rents and profits which accrued in his lifetime. It was also held that Har Narain Das could transfer immovable property subsequently acquired by him by will or transfer inter vivos, and that Har Narain Das was full owner of Rs. 1,3,000 which he could dispose of by will and if he did not his heir-at-law would succeed him. There is no reason to distinguish that sum from the rents and profits which had not only accrued due to Har Narain Das but had also been realised though not by him in his lifetime. We think that the point in question before us is covered by the Privy Council decision.

The learned Counsel for the appellant has relied on Sarnam v. Bisheshwar Bakhsh Singh (7 O. W. N. 128) (1). This case was relied on by the Chief Court in the judgment reported in Hari Saran Das v. Har Kishan Das (11 O. W. N. 917) (2) which was set aside by the Privy Council in 1938 Oudh Appeals, 87. The argument of the learned Counsel for the appellant is that in that case the arrears of rent due to the widow of a taluqdar who was a life estate holder were held after her death to have passed to the estate and not to her personal heirs. We think it would not be safe in this case to rely on the cases of Hindu widows or the widows of taluqdars. In this case the right of Har Narain Das came into existence under the deed of January 20, 1922 and not under any statute.

Moreover, it appears that in the case of Sarnam the learned Judges of this Court decided the case as if the rights of a Hindu widow were in question. It was subsequently held in this Court in Bisheshwar Bakhsh Singh v. Jang Bahadur Singh (7 O. W. N. 173) (3) in respect of the same taluqdar's widow, that her rights were not those of Hindu widow but those of a taluqdar's widow and those rights were laid down in the Oudh Estates Act. It was observed that the provisions of the Oudh Estates Act would apply whether the taluqdar's widow was a Hindu, a Muhammadan or a Christian. The peculiarities of the estate of a taluqdar's widow do not appear to have been brought to the notice of their Lordships in the case of Sarnam Singh v. Bisheshwar Bakhsh Singh (1). The decision in that case was based on a dictum of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Isri Dut Koer v. Mst. Hensbutti Koerain (L. R. 10 I. A., 150) (4) which was a case of Hindu widow. In Sarnam's case it was held that a creditor of a taluqdar's widow cannot attach the arrears of rent due to her which were not realized by her in her lifetime. But that is not the position here. In the present case Har Narain Das obtained a decree for mesne profits against Satgur Prased on the ground that he was in wrongful possession of the property. Har Narain Das was certainly entitled to the rents and profits of the property which accrued in his lifetime and which were realized by Hari Saran Das from the tenants. Har Narain Das could make a transfer of the decree for mesne profits inter vivos and there was no reason why he could not make a will in respect of them. This was so held by the Privy Council. The rents had been realized by the defendant and so they had ceased to be part of the estate. We think we need not discuss the cases of Hindu widows cited before us and that on the interpretation of the agreement dated January 20, 1922, put on it by their Lordships of the Privy Council, Har Narain Das was the absolute owner of the rents and profits which had been realised in his lifetime and he could transfer them by transfer inter vivos. The lower Court has held that Har Kishan Das is the chela and legatee of Har Narain Das.

The will was made on December 8, 1931, when there was no subsisting decree for mesne profits but it made Har Kishan Das owner not only of the movables and decrees

We therefore hold that Har Kishen Das as the heir-at-law and legatee of Har Narain Das is entitled to be substituted in place of Har Narain Das and to proceed with the application for determination of mesne profits.

We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Mortgage—Suit on—One of defendants claiming paramount title and disclaiming any interest in equity of redemption—Question of title, if can be decided.

In a mortgage suit no question of title arises. The mortgagee clearly has no interest and in fact cannot, if he wishes to succeed, challenge the title of his mortgagor. All that the Court is concerned with in a mortgage suit is the question of redemption. Only the persons who are interested in paying in order to save the property are necessary parties to the suit. All other matters are irrelevant. Where, therefore, in a mortgage suit one of the defendants claims a paramount title and disclaims all interest in the equity of redemption, this defendant must be discharged from the suit for the question of his title cannot be tried in such a case. Where in such a case the lower Court passes a wrong order, the High Court can interfere because the question of parties and persons is fundamental and goes to the very root of jurisdiction. 130 Ind. Mr. A. L. Halve, for Non-applicants
Nos. 1 to 4.

Order.—The question here is whether a person who claims a paramount title in a mortgage suit should be discharged. The mortgage was executed by the 1st defendant. The plaintiff has joined the 2nd defendant to the suit alleging that the 1st defendant and the husband of the 2nd defendant (the husband is now dead) formed a joint Hindu family and that the mortgage was executed by the 1st defendant on behalf of the family. The 2nd defendant contests this and states that her husband was separate from the 1st defendant at all relevant times and that the property in suit was his exclusive property which the 1st defendant had no right or authority to mortgage. The lower Court holds that the 2nd defendant is a necessary party as it is necessary to have her here in order to give complete relief to the plaintiff.

I am not able to see how this case differs from one in which a person has mortgaged property which another claims as his exclusive property. It is to my mind evident that the title of that other to that property cannot be tried out in a mortgage suit unless all parties desire that or unless that other claims some interest in the equity of redemption either by way of an alternative case or in spite of his paramount title.

It is, I think, elementary that in a mortgage suit no question of title arises. The mortgagee clearly has no interest and in fact cannot, if he wishes to succeed, challenge the title of his mortgagor. All we are concerned with in a mortgage suit is the question of redemption. The mortgagee sues for the money which he has lent for the enforcement of his security if the money is not paid. Only the persons who are interested in paying in order to save the property are necessary parties to the suit. All other matters are irrelevant.

• Unless that were so it would be possible for complicated questions of title in relation to some vast estate to be decided in a trumpery mortgage suit concerned with a comparatively small sum of money. It would be possible for a person who wants to get property from another and have the question of title tried out to take a mortgage from a man of straw who has no possible interest in that property for some small amount and then to sue him on the mortgage and to join the real owner of the property on the ground that he claims a right to the property. The court-fees payable would be negligible on the mortgage and the complicated question of title would be tried out on payment of a small court-fee as a side issue in some trumpery mortgage matter. Clearly that is neither the object nor the intention of the law.

The learned Counsel for the non-applicant

however relies on Ishwardas v. Hirralal (1), Iqbal Begam v. Misrilal (2) and Motiram v. Lalchand Gulabchand (3). So far as the first of these three cases is concerned, it was a case in which all the defendants pleaded to the mortgage and desired to fight out the question of the mortgage. Of course if that is so, they are all necessary parties. It does not matter whether some one of them claims in addition a paramount title. If he wants to fight out the mortgage matter because he says he is interested in the equity of redemption and the plaintiff agrees that he is so interested, clearly he is a necessary party. The learned Counsel however relies on a somewhat wider pronouncement made by the learned Judge in that case which is to the effect that there is no inflexible rule either in law or in practice excluding questions of title from a mortgage suit and that such titles may be investigated in such a suit if it is necessary to give complete relief to the plaintiff or to secure to him, as a result of the decree in the mortgage suit, a quiet and unobstructed possession. Those observations read in conjunction with the facts of the case in which they were made are of course unexceptionable. But what does one mean by stating that all matters necessary to give complete relief to the plaintiff may be investigated? It is only matters in suit which can be investigated and not matters which are beyond the suit. The only relief claimed in a mortgage suit is the relief to enforce the security against persons interested in the equity of redemption. If a person is not interested in the equity of redemption, whatever else he may be interested in, forms no part of the relief claimed in the mortgage suit and it is not necessary to go into those other matters in order to give the plaintiff the relief which he claims, namely a right to enforce his security against those interested in the equity of redemption.

As regards Iqbal Begam v. Misrilal (2) that is a very short judgment in which no facts are given. Staples, A. J. C. merely states, after referring to a Patna ruling which has not been referred to here, that it would be just and convenient to join the applicant as a party to the suit before him and to adjudicate upon her claim. Unless one knows the facts on which the learned Judge proceeded it is quite impossible to comment on that decision. There are undoubtedly cases in which it would be proper to inquire into these matters. I have already mentioned some of them, namely when all parties desire this to be done, or when the person claiming a paramount title also pleads to the mortgage and claims a right to contest the mortgage on the ground that he is also interested in some way in the equity of redemption.

As regards Motiram v. Lalchand Gulabchand (3) that is a case which is not in favour of the non-applicant. The decision there is that a son is not a necessary party to a suit against his father on a mortgage of joint family property because the son can bring a suit for a declaration that the mortgage decree does not bind his share. The learned Judge, however, goes on to state that if the son should himself come in and ask to be joined on the ground that he is interested in the equity of redemption and wants to be given a chance to challenge the mortgage or redeem it in the alternative, then he ought to be joined. With that of course I agree, but that is not the case here. The 2nd defendant does not wish to be joined. She claims a paramount title and claims the right to be discharged. According to the ruling just cited, she is bound to be discharged in those circumstances.

It is next urged that whatever be the rights or wrongs of the matter, the lower Court, even if it has decided wrongly, had jurisdiction to do so and that the High Court cannot interfere in revision with a decision when a party who claims a paramount title is necessary to the case. Again reliance is placed upon Iqbal Begam v. Misrilal (2). As I have already said, so far as that decision is concerned, it is not possible for me to comment on it because I do not know what the facts there were. If a more general proposition was intended, then with respect I dissent from that view and have so dissented in a ruling published in the authorised reports. Devidas v. Nilkanthrao (4). When I say "dissent from that view" I do not mean that I have referred to the ruling of Staples, A. J. C. or indeed to the question of paramount title; but I have referred to and followed a number of decisions which state that the question of parties and persons is fundamental and goes to the very root of jurisdiction. This will be found at pp. 76 and 77 of my decision. As my decision is the later of the two, and as it is published in the authorised reports, and as no facts are given in the ruling of Staples, A. J. C. so that I cannot determine whether what he has said is obiter or not, I prefer, with respect, to follow my own view.

In my opinion the second defendant must be discharged from this suit on the ground that she claims a paramount title and disclaims all interest in the equity of redemption. The application is allowed, the order of the lower Court is set aside and an order will now be passed discharging the 2nd defendant from the suit. Costs of the revision will be paid by the plaintiff. Counsel's fee Rs. 25. Costs in the lower Court will also be paid by the plaintiff.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Execution sale set aside on ground of insufficiency of stamp—No appeal by decree-holder but application to Court to vacate its order under s. 151—Refusal by Court—High Court held could not interfere in revision.

A sale held in execution was set aside on the ground of insufficiency of stamp. The decree-holder took no steps to challenge that decision by an appeal but he applied to the Court to vacate its order under its inherent powers under s. 151 and the Court refused to interfere. The decree-holder applied in revision to the High Court against the order:

Held, that under the circumstances the High Court could not interfere in revision.

C. R. from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Bhagalpur, dated September 4, 1939.

Mr. S. N. Bose, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick, B. B. Sahay and Shambhu Nath, for the Opposite Party.

Harries, C. J.—This is a decree-holders' petition for revision of an order made by the learned Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur on September 4, 1939. The decree-holder petitioners had obtained a money decree in the Calcutta High Court which had been transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Bhagalpur for execution. In the execution proceedings twenty-four items of property were put up to sale severally, and the total price obtained for these twenty-four properties amounted to Rs. 1,755.

On April 21, 1930, the decree-holders filed a stamp as required by law, and the stamp was of the value of Rs. 30. That would have been sufficient if the sale had been a sale of one lot for Rs. 1,755; but there had been twenty-four sales, and the amount of the stamps, if calculated on each sale, came to Rs. 36-15-0, and, therefore, there was a deficit of Rs. 6-15-0. As in the view of the Court the stamp was insufficient, the Court had no alternative but to set aside the sale. No steps were taken by the decree-holders to challenge that order in this Court; but on May 15, 1939, the decree-holders petitioned the lower Court and asked it to vacate its previous order under its inherent powers under s. 151, Civil P. C., or to accept the stamp of Rs. 30 as sufficient for such items of property on the sale of which the stamp amounted to Rs. 30. It is to be observed that the Court had never been asked previously to confirm the sale of such items the stamps on the sale of which would amount to Rs. 30. The lower Court refused to interfere seeing no reason to exercise its inherent jurisdiction in the matter.

This petition for revision is directed towards the order of the learned Subordinate Judge refusing to exercise his inherent jurisdiction, and in my judgment this Court cannot interfere in the circumstances. If the decree-holders-petitioners felt aggrieved with the order setting aside the sale, they could, in my view, have challenged it in this Court. It was an order passed relating to execution and was, in my view, appealable. No steps, however, were taken to challenge that decision. In such circumstances, the learned Subordinate Judge was right in refusing to interfere even if he had inherent jurisdiction to do so, a point which I do not decide. As I have stated, he had never been asked to confirm the sale of only some of the items of property, and that being so he was perfectly right in refusing to adopt that course when the subsequent application was made to him.

In the circumstances of this case, I do not see that this Court can interfere in revision and accordingly this petition fails. I would, therefore, discharge the rule with costs, which I would assess at one gold mohur.

Fazl Ali, J.—I agree.

Raj Kumari KANIZ BAQAR—APPELLANT

Rani KANIZ ABID AND ANOTHER—

RESPONDENTS

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), ss. 152, 154—Suit by superior proprietor for arrears of under-proprietary rent—Mortgagee of under-proprietor not made party—Decree against under-proprietor and purchase of property by superior proprietor in execution—Mortgage-decree—Under proprietary rent, whether charge on mortgaged property—Liability of mortgagee, if came to end by satisfaction of rent decree.

It is true that under s. 154 of the Oudh Rent Act where an under-proprietor creates any incumbrance and fails to pay to the proprietor all or any part of the rent subsequently accruing in respect of the land subject to the incumbrance, the incumbrancer shall be liable to pay to the proprietor the whole or part of that rent as the case may be. This section lays down the liability of a mortgagee of any under-proprietary tenure for payment of arrears of rent due to the superior proprietor, but where the superior proprietor in his suit for rent did not make the mortgagee of the under-proprietor a party and sued the under-proprietor alone, obtaining a decree against him and in execution of that decree has purchased the property put up for sale, the decretal amount is satisfied and the liability to pay rent by the mortgagee thus comes to an end. Section 152 of the Oudh Rent Act provides that where a decree is for an arrear of rent due in respect of an under-proprietary right, the interest of a judgment-debtor in that right may be sold in execution of the decree. This shows that if the under-proprietary holding has been mortgaged by the judgment-debtor, the only thing that can be sold is the interest of the judgment-debtor, which in such a case would be his equity of redemption. The auction-purchaser therefore cannot claim priority against the mortgagee who is no longer liable for any payment under the provisions of s. 154. Hence in such a case the under-proprietary rent is not a charge on the mortgaged property and the mortgaged property can be sold in execution of the mortgage-decree. 117 Ind. Cas. 452 (1), distinguished.

Ex. D. A. against the order of the Civil Judge of Barabanki, dated August 4, 1937.

Messrs. Haider Husain and P. N. Bhatt, for the Appellant.

Mr. Akhlaque Husain, for Respondent No. 1.

Judgment.—This first execution of decree appeal has been filed on behalf of Raj Kumari Kaniz Baqar, who is the superior proprietor of half of the village Achecha in the Bara Banki District against the judgment and decree of the learned Civil Judge of Bara Banki, dated August 4, 1937.

The facts given in the judgment of the learned Judge are rather brief, but the following facts have been admitted by the learned Counsel for the parties:

It appears that one Ghazanfar Ali Khan was the under-proprietor of the plots in dispute and he on June 28, 1917, executed a mortgage-deed in favour of Raja Abul Hasan Khan, the taluqdar of Belahra estate. On his death and under a will executed by him he was succeeded by Rani Kaniz Abid, one of the respondents in this case. The Court of Wards on behalf of Rani Kaniz Abid obtained a preliminary decree on May 29, 1925, on the basis of the mortgage-deed of June 28, 1917, and this decree was made final on May 16, 1927.

On August 17, 1933, the mortgagee-decree-holder applied for sale of the mortgaged property, and as it was an ancestral property, it was sent to the Collector. In the meantime on September 24, 1933, the Court of Wards representing the superior proprietor of village Achecha obtained a decree for under-proprietary rent against Ghazanfar Ali Khan and in execution of that decree purchased the under-proprietary rights on September 20, 1934. It is important here to note that Rani Kaniz Abid or the Court of Wards which represented her was not made a party to the suit or to the execution proceedings.

On August 19, 1935, Rani Kaniz Abid (the mortgagee-decree holder) applied to the execution Court that the auction-purchaser of the under-proprietary rights (that is the Court of Wards) be made a party in her execution case. Her prayer was granted.

The auction-purchaser appealed to this Court against the said order, but the appeal was dismissed by a Bench of this Court on November 9, 1936, (vide Execution of Decree Appeal No. 19 of 1936).

After the decision of the appeal, the second objection of the auction-purchaser, which was to the effect that the under-proprietary rent was a charge on the mortgaged property and that the mortgaged property could not be sold in execution of the mortgage-decree was taken up and decided by the learned Civil Judge against the auction-purchaser on August 4, 1937, and it is this order which is now under appeal before me.

The contention on behalf of the appellant is that the arrears of rent being a statutory liability it cannot be wiped out on the ground that Rani Kaniz Abid was not made a party and that the mortgagee is liable to pay the under-proprietary rent as it is a prior charge on the property. Reliance is placed on a Bench decision of this Court reported in Bisheshar Dayal v. Rai Bajranj Bahadur Singh, (6 O. W. N. 469) (1). I regret I am unable to accept the contention of the learned Counsel. It is true that under s. 154 of the Oudh Rent Act where an under proprietor creates any incumbrance and fails to pay to the proprietor all or any part of the rent subsequently accruing in respect of the land subject to the incumbrance, the incumbrancer shall be liable to pay to the proprietor the whole or part of that rent as the case may be. This section lays down the liability of a mortgagee of any under-proprietary tenure for payment of arrears of rent due to the superior-proprietor, but in this case as I have mentioned the superior proprietor did not make Rani Kaniz Abid a party and sued Ghazanfar Ali Khan alone, obtaining a decree against him and in execution of that decree purchased the property put up for sale. The decretal amount was satisfied and the liability to pay rent by the mortgagee thus came to an end.

It was conceded by the learned Counsel on behalf of the appellant that no arrears of rent were due. Under s. 154 of the Oudh Rent Act the liability arises when the under-proprietor fails to pay the rent to the proprietor, in other words the charge which is sought to be declared on the mortgaged property is not due.

I am of opinion that the case reported in (6 O. W. N. 469) (1), relied on by the learned Counsel for the appellant is clearly distinguishable. In fact the learned Counsel frankly admitted that the facts were distinguishable, but he contended that there were observations in the judgment which helped the appellant. In that case the property had been sold under a mortgage decree and then a decree for arrears of rent was obtained and the superior proprietor then wanted to make the auction-purchaser a party to the execution proceedings for arrears of rent. The decree was still outstanding. In the present case as I have said the mortgagee was never made a party and nothing is due.

It is difficult to understand how the liability can be extended to Rani Kaniz Abid when once it has been discharged.

Section 152 of the Oudh Rent Act provides that where a decree is for an arrear of rent due in respect of an under-proprietary right, the interest of a judgment-debtor in that right may be sold in execution of the decree. This shows that if the under-proprietary holding has been mortgaged by the judgment-debtor, the only thing that can be sold is the interest of the judgment-debtor, which in a case like this would be his equity of redemption. The auction-purchaser, therefore, cannot claim priority against the mortgagee who is no longer liable for any payment under the provisions of s. 154 of the Oudh Rent Act.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the sum of Rs. 742-7-4 cannot be declared a charge. I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act (VI of 1876), ss. 3, 9—Word 'alienation' in s. 3, meaning of—Holder, whether prohibited from making testamentary disposition—Word 'heir', in s. 3 scope of—Object of the Act explained—Interpretation of Statutes—Restricted meaning, when to be given to words.

The word "alienation" ordinarily means alienation of all kinds but applying the principle of ejusdem generis as the general words in s. 3 follow specific words and again are followed by specific words, the word alienation means an alienation inter vivos only. In other words the prohibition against alienation in the Chota Nagpur Encum. Estates Act is a prohibition against alienation inter vivos and does not affect the testamentary power of the holder. 82 Ind. Cas. 886 (1), followed. [p. 25, col. 2; p. 30, col. 1.]

As the Act is obscure the word 'heir' has been loosely used in the Act and may be taken to include a person who has a right to succeed in law to the holder. [p. 26, col. 2.]

The object of Chota Nagpur Encum. Estates Act is that the manager shall have unfettered power of management and control over the property so that he may apply the rents and profits of the land to speedily relieve the holder's estate from the burdens created on it by the holder before the provisions of the Act were brought into operation for his benefit. The Act does not make the manager the holder of the estate but merely prohibits the holder in his own interest from exercising the acts of ownership so that they may not interfere with the wide powers given to the manager to manage the estate. [p. 25, col. 2; p. 26, col. 1.]

The words appearing in a statute must be given their natural meaning whenever possible, but a restricted meaning must be given in cases where it is clear that such restricted meaning was intended. [p. 28, col. 1.]

As from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Purulia, dated May 31, 1937.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick, R. S. Chatterji and Prem Lall, for the Appellant.

Messrs. P. R. Das, S. C. Mazumdar and Ramanugrah Narain Sinha, for the Respondents.

Manohar Lall, J.—This is an appeal by Mon Mohan Singh, who has been substituted in this appeal in place of the deceased plaintiff, against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Purulia dated May 31, 1937, by which he dismissed the suit instituted by the original plaintiff for a declaration of her title to the entire Raj Jaypur and for recovery of possession thereof together with mesne profits. Various issues of facts and law were raised in the Court below by the defendants who claimed title to remain in possession of the Rajas legatees under a will executed by the late Raja in their favour. But with the exception of one question they have all been decided in favour of the plaintiff. The sole question which remains for determination in this appeal is whether the will executed by the late Raja, who was the last holder of this Raj, in favour of the respondents was a valid will in view of the provisions of the Chota Nagpur Encum. Estates Act (VI of 1876) hereinafter to be referred to as the Act in the following circumstances.

It is common ground that the Raj was taken charge of by the Court of Wards under the provisions of the Court of Wards Act (Act IX of 1879) but subsequently in October 1916, when it was found that Raja Bhikhambar Singh, the last holder of the Raj, had become heavily indebted, the Raj came under the management of the authorities as provided by the Act. The Raja executed a will on September 24, 1919, by which he bequeathed 8 annas share in it to his fourth wife Rani Chandrabali and the remaining 8 annas to the first defendant who has now been found to be the illegitimate son of the Raja in the sense that he was not his real aurash son. The Raja died on February 25, 1921, and the Raj which has been found to be governed by the rule of impartibility was released from the charge as an Encumbered Estate on March 6, 1931, and handed over to the two legatees under the will which had been probated by the decision of the High Court in 1925. Rani Chandrabali, one of the legatees died on March 21, 1934. She was the last survivor of the four wives of the Raja, and, therefore, the plaintiff as the daughter of the second wife instituted the present suit on May 13, 1936, on the ground that the succession then opened out to her, she being the eldest surviving member in the family of the Raja. Defendant No. 2 as the daughter of Rani Chandrabali is in possession of the 8 annas share which had been bequeathed by the will to her mother.

The learned Subordinate Judge upon a consideration of the various provisions of the Act and in particular relying upon the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Protap Chandra Deo v. Jagadish Chandra Deo (1), rejected the contention advanced on behalf of the plaintiff that the Raja had no right to make a will. Hence the appeal by the plaintiff.

As has been observed by Viscount Haldane who delivered the judgment of the Board in Raja of Pachete v. Kumud Nath (2), the language of the Act is obscure but the preamble is material in order to construe its various provisions. The preamble defines the purpose of the Act which is intitulated "Chota Nagpur Encum. Estate Act" for the "relief of holders of land in Chota Nagpur who may be in debt, and whose immovable property may be subject to mortgages, charges, and liens." The Act by its various sections makes careful provisions for the management of the estate while it is in charge of the authorities appointed under the Act. Section 3 provides that the holder and his heir shall be incompetent to mortgage, charge, lease or alienate their immovable property, or to grant receipts for rents or profits and shall also be incompetent to enter into any contract which may involve them in pecuniary liability. The manager has by s. 4 been vested with large powers of management and for liquidating the debts due from the holder. By s. 8 he is entitled to determine the amounts of principal justly due to the creditors of the holders of the property and to the mortgagees on it. By s. 9 he may enquire into the consideration given for leases or rent free and maintenance grants (the grants were included in the section by an amendment made in 1909) and, regarding leases or grants of a later period if it appears insufficient, cancel them or cause the person so in possession to pay such consideration as the manager may think fit. By ss. 17 and 18 the manager has been granted the power to lease and to mortgage and sell (in the latter cases with the assent of the Commissioner). As observed by Viscount Haldane in Raja of Pachete v. Kumud Nath (2).

"After considering the Act as a whole, their Lordships have arrived at the conclusion that the primary intention to be collected from its language is that of providing, by a measure of local application, for the relief of the burdens affecting the land within Chota Nagpur owned by a class of landholders there."

By s. 23 the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is saved with regard to the determination of the question of succession which it was admitted before us must obviously include testamentary as well as non-testamentary succession.

Such being the purpose of the Act namely, to vest the management of the estate in the manager appointed under the Act with the object of relieving the burdens affecting the land owned by the holder it is provided in the Act that after the holder has been relieved of the burdens the estate shall be restored to him if he is alive at the time or to his heir (see s. 12). But in order to provide against the contingency that the holder may not again burden the estate after it is released to him and thus defeat the very object of the Act provision has been made that if the holder again burdens the estate or attempts to burden it the Collector may with the approval of the Commissioner again resume possession of the estate, but the estate shall thereafter not be restored to the holder even after the new debts have been paid off (see s. 12, proviso).

The question, therefore, is, whether by reason of the words used in s. 3 of the Act namely,

"So long as such management continues the holder of the said immovable property and his heir shall be incompetent to mortgage, charge, lease or alienate their immovable property or any part thereof or to grant valid receipts for the rents and profits arising or accruing therefrom"

the holder is prohibited from making a will. The argument advanced by the appellant was that if the scheme of the Act is carefully examined the holder should be held to be incompetent to make a will firstly because the word 'heir' has been used in the Act as meaning an heir on intestacy and the word devisee or legatee is not to be found in it and is repugnant to the whole scheme of the Act; secondly because the word 'alienation' used in s. 3 must include alienation by means of a will.

It is needless to refer to the large number of cases cited by the learned Advocate for the appellant which lay down that the owner of an impartible Raj, whether it is governed by the Mitakshara or the Dayabhaga School of Hindu Law, is not debarred from making a will with respect to it, the reason for the rule so laid down being that the power of alienation by gift inter vivos carries with it a testamentary power. But the only question is whether the Act contemplates alienations which are prohibited by it as being alienation inter vivos or alienations by will also which come into operation only on the death of the testator.

It is argued on behalf of the respondent that although the word "alienation" ordinarily means alienation of all kinds but applying the principle of ejusdem generis the general words in s. 3 following specific words and again being followed by specific words compel us to interpret the meaning of the word alienation as being an alienation inter vivos only. In my opinion this argument is sound. The preamble of the Act as already indicated is to give relief to the holders whose property may be subject to "mortgages, charges and liens". All these three kinds of alienations are alienations inter vivos. The Act by its several provisions already referred to forbids the holder to create these kinds of alienations and empower the manager to cancel these alienations. It will be noticed that the word "lease" is not mentioned in the alienations in the preamble, but as the manager has to administer the estate in the sense of paying off the liabilities and debts due on it he has been given power under s. 9 to enquire into the consideration for the leases and if they appear insufficient to cancel them. If the holder on the other hand during the course of the management creates a mortgage, charge, lien or grants a valid receipt for the rents and profits arising and accruing therefrom these acts of the holder are also avoided by s. 3. The combined effect of the provisions of ss. 3 and 9 as construed in the light of the preamble induces me to hold that the object is that the manager shall have unfettered power of management and control over the property so that he may apply the rents and profits of the land to speedily relieve the holder's estate from the burdens created on it by the holder before the provisions of the Act were brought into operation for his benefit. The Act does not make the manager the holder of the estate but merely prohibits the holder in his own interest from exercising the acts of ownership so that they may not interfere with the wide powers given to the manager to manage the estate.

It must be admitted that a will speaks from the death of the testator and so long as the testator is alive the will is merely an expression of his intention how the property should devolve on his death. It is, therefore, difficult to see how the mere execution of a will is an alienation of the property—as was sought to be contended at one stage of the argument—when it can in no way affect the possession of the estate by the manager.

But a more serious argument was advanced that in any case a will amounts to an alienation operating at the time of the death of the testator and, therefore, it was argued that where the debts and liabilities due from the holder have not been paid off at that time the will would then amount to a disturbance of the possession of the manager and thus render several provisions of the Act nugatory. But the answer to this contention is that the possession of the manager is not at all affected by the succession to the estate created by the testator. The manager is required by the statute to continue in possession of the estate of the holder so long as the debts and liabilities are not paid off and as provided by s. 12 must give up possession as soon as the debts and liabilities are paid off. The question as to who succeeds to the Raj is a question which can only be determined in the case of a dispute by the civil authorities as specially provided by s. 23. It may be observed that by an amendment made in 1909 the requirement that in all such suits the manager shall be a party has been omitted. It is obviously undesirable that such a serious question should be decided by the revenue authorities.

Again, I do not see what difficulty arises if the word 'heir' is taken to mean an heir on intestacy only as contended for by the learned Advocate for the appellant. It only means that the manager when he comes to relinquish the estate will relinquish it to the heir, and if some body else has a better title as a devisee under a will that question will be determined by the Civil Courts under s. 23 and such a person if he is successful will recover possession from the heir. But I am inclined to take the view that as the Act is obscure the word 'heir' has been loosely used in the Act and may be taken to include a person who has a right to succeed in law to the holder. In the present case I notice that the manager relinquished the estate to the legatees and not to the heirs only. No body has suggested that the present suit is incompetent by reason of the fact that the manager has relinquished the estate to the legatees. The question of title is always open to be decided by the Civil Courts in a proper proceeding.

An examination of the terms of s. 12A lead to the same conclusion. By s. 12A (4) the Deputy Commissioner has power to ascertain on enquiry (with a view to resume possession of the estate of the holder with the approval of the Commissioner) if the holder since the estate was restored to him has made or attempted to make any alienation or charge without the previous sanction of the Commissioner. But in the course of the enquiry he is bound to consider and place on record all representations made by the person in whose favour such alienation or charge is made. A devisee under a will has no present right till the testator is dead. Now can such a person make any representation to the Deputy Commissioner? Obviously not. This strongly suggests to my mind that the word alienation in this section means alienation inter vivos.

In the case reported in Protap Chandra Deo v. Jagdish Chandra Deo (1), a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court examined the provisions of the Act with great minuteness and came to a similar conclusion and held that the restrictions as to the alienations mentioned in the provisions of the Act referred only to alienations inter vivos having present operation and not to testamentary dispositions. It was argued on behalf of the learned Advocate for the appellant that the observations of the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court were in the nature of obiter dicta because the will in that case was executed on May 11, 1905 about three months before the notification was made under the Act vesting his property in the manager. I do not agree that these observations were obiter dicta because no matter when the will is made whether before or after the property went in charge of the manager under the Act the alienations would take effect at a time after the estate had come under the charge of the manager. I respectfully agree with these observations of the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court.

In Mohammad Sayeed v. Muhammad Ismail (3), the question arose for decision whether a will (a gift at the time of death to a Muhammadan) was an alienation falling within the prohibition in section 325A of the Civil P. C. (Act XIV of 1882) which corresponds to Sch. III, para. 11 of the present Code. In the Third Schedule provision is made for execution of decrees by Collector. By s. 68 the Local Govt. may declare by notification in the local official gazette that in any local area the execution of decrees in cases in which the Court has ordered immovable properties to be sold shall be transferred to the Collector. Then by para. 11 of Sch. III it is provided that

"so long as the Collector can exercise or perform in respect of the judgment-debtor's immovable property, or any part thereof, any of the powers or duties conferred or imposed on him by paras. 1 to 10, the judgment-debtor, or his representative-in-interest shall be incompetent to mortgage, charge, lease or alienate such property or part except with the written permission of the Collector".

It will be noticed that the words which impose these restrictions on the judgment-debtor or his representative-in-interest during such time are exactly the same as in the provision of the Act which we are considering.

It was argued before the Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court that a will comes within the term alienate as mentioned in these words but they overruled the contention in these words at p. 235* :

"We are unable to agree with this contention. The word 'alienate' in our opinion was used ejusdem generis with the words preceding, namely, mortgage, charge, lease, and manifestly contemplates a transfer which would have present effect and not a devise which can only have operation after the death of the testator. In this view the will was not void and the lady was not incompetent to make it."

This decision in my opinion helps a fortiori to construe the terms of s. 3 of the Act where it will be noticed the word alienate follows the words used in the Allahabad decision and is also succeeded by the words "to grant a valid receipt for the rents and profits arising or accruing therefrom" indicating to my mind that the import of the word "alienate" should be construed on the ejusdem generis principle.

It may also be pointed out that whenever it is intended to restrict alienation by will or to prevent adoption of a ward it is expressly so provided, for instance in the Mad. Court of Wards Acts s. 34 (c) and (d) of Act I of 1902. in the Ben. Court of Wards Act IX of 1879, s. 61. in the Bom. Act I, of 1905, s. 38 and in s. 37 of the U. P. Court of Wards Act.

After this judgment was prepared I have come across the case of Hukum Chand v. Ran Bahadur Singh (4). In that case their Lordships of the Judicial Committee had to construe the provisions of the Act in order to consider what are the position, legal status and rights of the manager appointed by virtue of the Act. Lord Shaw of Dunfermline in delivering the judgment of the Board examined most of the provisions which I have examined above, namely, ss. 2, 3, 10, 12, 13 to 18 and came to the conclusion at p. 213* that "It is clear that the owner is disabled not only from acts of management but from mortgaging, charging, leasing or alienating the property, whereas on the other hand the manager is vested and alone vested with such powers".

The importance of this observation is that it indicates very strongly that the interpretation which I have endeavoured to put upon the meaning of the word 'alienation' is correct. Again at p. 214* after referring to the effect of ss. 19, 20 and 21 His Lordships observed :

"In the opinion of the Board it is necessary to give very full and careful effect to the position of a manager vested under the Act, in the management of the property of the nature already described. It is, in their Lordships opinion, clear that the owner of such property is expressly disabled from making any effective contract with regard to it and it is equally clear that no other officer, whether political or departmental, could occupy the place, or enjoy or exercise the rights, of the disposal of the estate the management of which estate is vested in the manager and the manager alone."

This passage again shows that the Act is prohibiting the owner from making any effective contract with regard to his property. The execution of a will by the owner is in no sense any contract with regard to the property.

For these reasons I agree that the learned Subordinate Judge has taken a correct view and hold that the Raja was not incompetent to make the will of Feb-

August 25, 1921, by reason of any prohibition in the Act.

Some argument was finally advanced on the question of mesne profits. The learned Subordinate Judge dealt with this matter under issue No. 10. He found that after the estate was released the legatees have been in possession and that the defendant No. 1 and the mother of defendant No. 2 who died in March, 1934, got their name mutated in the land registration department and they are in possession since then. The plaintiff claimed mesne profits from March 21, 1934 from the defendants when the succession opened out to the plaintiff, is their view. But as the plaintiff has not been able to establish his title no enquiry into the amount of mesne profits can be gone into in these proceedings. I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Harries, C. J.—I agree. It was conceded by Counsel for the appellant in this case that in the events that had happened Raja Bhikhambar Singh, the last holder of the Raj, could have disposed of the property by will but for the provisions of the Chota Nagpur Encum. Estates Act. It was however, strenuously argued that Act deprived the Raja of the power to make a will and that the will which he made was, therefore, invalid.

It is to be observed that the Act does not expressly deal with testamentary power; but it was urged that the Raja's power to make a will was taken away by s. 3 of the Act. That section provides that when the management of an encumbered estate is taken over under s. 2 of the Act the holder of the Estate and his heir shall be incompetent to mortgage, charge, lease, or alienate their immovable property or any part thereof, or to grant valid receipts for the rents and profits arising or accruing therefrom. It was contended that this provision expressly prohibited all forms of alienation and that it covered a devise of property by will. There can be no doubt that a devise operates as an alienation of the property at the testator's death; but it was urged on behalf of the respondents that this provision only prohibits alienation during the life-time of the holder of the encumbered estate. The words appearing in a statute must be given their natural meaning whenever possible, but a restricted meaning must be given in cases where it is clear that such restricted meaning was intended. The word "alienate" in this provision follows the words "shall be incompetent to mortgage, charge, lease" immediately following them must be construed as alienation inter vivos. Following the phrase "alienate their immovable property or any part thereof" follow these words "or to grant valid receipts for the rents and profits arising or accruing therefrom." This latter provision applies to acts inter vivos because receipts for rents and profits can only be granted by the person who is the actual landlord or holder of the land. It will, therefore, be seen that the word "alienate" appears in a provision which otherwise applies to acts done in the lifetime of the holder or his heir. The word "alienation" also appears in s. 12-A of the Act, which provides for the continuance of certain disabilities after the restoration of the property to the owner thereof. Sub-s. (1) provides that in which circumstances the owner shall not be competent without the previous sanction of the Commissioner (a) to alienate such property, or any part thereof, in any way, or (b) to create any charge thereon extending beyond his life-time. The prohibition here is against alienation of the property in any way, and at first sight that is wide enough to cover not only alienations inter vivos but alienations by will. However, on consideration of the other subsections of s. 12A, it appears tolerably clear that the prohibition against alienation in this section is directed against alienations inter vivos. The prohibition is against alienation without previous sanction of the Commissioner. As a devise of property does not operate as an alienation until the date of death, it is difficult to understand how previous sanction of the Commissioner could be obtained for such alienation. It is true that the Commissioner could be asked for his sanction to a proposed alienation by will; but such alienation might never take effect by reason of the revocation of the will or a transfer of the property inter vivos. Sub-s. (4) of s. 12-A provides that the Deputy Commissioner may, on obtaining information that the owner of the estate has made or attempted to make any alienation in contravention of that section, conduct an inquiry, and in that inquiry he has to hear any representations made by the holder and by the person in whose favour such alienation is alleged to have been made. This, in my view, suggests that the alienation referred to in the section is an alienation inter vivos. The devisee has no interest in the property until the death of the testator, and the inquiry contemplated in sub-s. (4) could not be made upon the Deputy Commissioner obtaining information that the holder has made a will. There would be no person in whose favour an alienation had been made until the death of the testator and then it would be impossible for the Deputy Commissioner to hear any representation made by the holder of the estate who made the will. Sub-section (5) of s. 12A provides that if after inquiry the Deputy Commissioner is satisfied that the holder has made or attempted to make an alienation, he may request that the provisions of the Act be re-applied to the holder, and the provisions of the Act may be so applied and the manager re-appointed. This sub-section also, in my view, contemplates an alienation inter vivos, because a will does not operate till death, and then it would be too late to re-appoint the manager and vest in him the property of the holder. In my judgment the words "alienate" and "alienation" used in s. 12A mean alienation inter vivos, and in my view the same meaning must be given to the word "alienate" in s. 3 of the Act.

The preamble of the Act sets out its object and purpose and that is to relieve holders of land in Ohota Nagpur who may be in debt, and whose immovable property may be subject to mortgages, charges and liens. The Act divests the holder of the property for the time being of all powers of management and vests the same in a manager appointed under the Act. The holder of the encumbered estates still remains the owner, but he cannot interfere with the management. To give the manager complete freedom of management, it was essential to take away from the holder all powers of mortgaging, leasing, charging or selling the land. Otherwise, it would be impossible for the manager to arrange satisfactorily for the payment of debts. A devise in a will could not possibly affect the management of the estate as it would not take effect until the death of the holder. Section 12 provides that the manager may continue in possession after the death of the holder until all the debts are paid, and then he must restore the property to the heir. It was urged that as the heir is mentioned in this section it is clear that the Act contemplated that the estate should in every case go to the heir, and such could not happen if the holder of the encumbered estate retained his testamentary capacity. It is true that the word "heir" appears in a number of sections in the Act; but, in my view, there is nothing to suggest that the legislature intended that in every case in which an encumbered estate was taken over under the Act the heir and the heir alone should be the person entitled to it on the death of the holder. Section 23 of the Act makes it clear that neither the manager, Deputy Commissioner or Commissioner have anything to do with deciding claims to succession and the jurisdiction of the Courts of Ohota Nagpur in respect thereof is not affected by the act. It may be that after the debts have been paid the Deputy Commissioner must restore the property to the heir; but that does not mean that the heir would be entitled to it as against a devisee under a valid will. The various sections of this Act were very minutely examined by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Pratap Chandra Deo v. Jagadish Chandra Deo (1). That Bench came to the conclusion that a will executed by an owner of an impartible estate at the time when his estate had not come under the Encum. Estates Act, is valid though at the time of his death the estate had not been released from management under that Act. If the Act takes away the holder's power to make a will, it must also invalidate a will made before the estate of the holder was taken over under the Act. As a will speaks from death s. 3 of the Act would invalidate wills made either before or after the Act came into operation in cases where the holder died whilst the estate was still under management contemplated by the Act. I agree with Manohar Lal, J. that the case in Pratap Chandra Deo v. Jagadish Chandra Deo (1), is a direct authority in favour of the validity of the will, and, in my view, should be followed.

Words very similar to those appearing in s. 3 of the Act were given a restricted meaning in Muhammad Sayeed v. Muhammad Ismail (3), in which it was held that the restriction against alienation contained in what is now para. 11 (1) of the Third Schedule to the Civil P. C. meant alienation inter vivos. That schedule deals with execution by Collectors and provides that the Collector may manage the property for a period to enable decrees for payment of money to be liquidated. To prevent interference in such management on the part of the judgment-debtor para. 11 (1) provides:

"So long as the Collector can exercise or perform in respect of the judgment-debtors immovable property, or any part thereof, any of the powers or duties conferred or imposed on him by paras. 1 to 10, the judgment-debtor or his representative-in-interest shall be incompetent to mortgage, charge, lease or alienate such property or part except with the written permission of the Collector, not shall any Civil Court issue any process against such property or part in execution of a decree for the payment of money."

In this paragraph "the judgment-debtor or his representative-in-interest" is made incompetent to mortgage, charge, lease or alienate, whereas in s. 3 of the Encum. Estates Act the holder or his heir is made so incompetent. A Bench of the Allahabad High Court held that the prohibition against alienation in this paragraph referred to alienation inter vivos and could not prevent the judgment-debtor making a will which would operate as an alienation at the date of his death. It is true that it is often dangerous to apply a construction given to a section in an Act to a similar section in a different Act. However, the provisions of the Third Schedule are in many ways similar to those of the Encum. Estates Act. Both provide for a period of management of an estate to enable debts to be paid without the destruction of the estate. The purpose of para. 11 of the Third Schedule is similar to the purpose of s. 3 of the Encum. Estates Act, and in my view the reasoning of the learned Judges in the Allahabad case applies equally to the facts of this case. Further there is an added reason in the present case for restricting the meaning of the word "alienate" in s. 3 of the Encum. Estates Act, because it appears immediately after words which refer to alienations inter vivos and is immediately followed by words which clearly relate to other acts which can only be done in the life time of the holder or his heir. That being so, it must, in my view, be held that the prohibition against alienation in the Chota Nagpur Encum. Estates Act is a prohibition against alienation inter vivos and does not affect the testamentary power of the holder. That being so, the will made by Raja Bhikhambar Singh was not invalid and the defendants, who were the beneficiaries under the will, are entitled to the property.

For these reasons I agree with Manohar Lal, J., that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 341—Wrongful restraint—Complainant on tumtum—Accused obstructing it and preventing complainant from proceeding on his way—Offence under s. 341, held committed.

Where the complainant was proceeding on a road on tumtum and by obstructing the tumtum the accused prevented the complainant from proceeding on his way and assaulted him:

Held, that the facts constituted the offence of wrongful restraint under s. 341, I. P. C. Jaggeshwar Das v. Koylash Chandra Chatterjee (1) and 155 Ind. Cas. 444 (1) (2), distinguished.

Cr. Rev. App. against an order of the Appellate Magistrate, Muzaffarpur, dated January 15, 1941.

Mr. G. P. Shahi, for the Petitioners.

The Govt. Pleader, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—The petitioners have been convicted of offences under ss. 323 and 341 of the I. P. C., and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 20 each in respect of the conviction under s. 323 and to undergo a month's rigorous imprisonment in respect of the conviction under s. 341.

The facts were that the complainant, who is a Pleader living in the same village as the petitioners, was proceeding on a road on tumtum when the petitioners appeared, stopped the tumtum, abused the complainant and assaulted him with umbrella, slippers and slaps. In the course of this occurrence they wrongfully stopped the complainant for about 15 minutes. The evidence with regard to this occurrence has been found by both the Courts below to be reliable; but it is contended in this Court that the acts committed do not establish a charge of wrongful restraint. It is contended that what was restrained was the tumtum and not the complainant. Reference was made to two cases which, however, do not support this contention. In Jaggeshwar Das v. Koylash Chandra Chatterjee (1) the facts were that the complainant had loaded certain goods upon a cart for the purpose of removing them when the accused came and unyoked the bullocks and turned the goods off the cart. It was held on these facts that the accused could not be convicted under s. 341. In Durgapada Chatterjee v. Nil- mony Ghosh (2) the facts were that one Kalipada purchased paddy which was loaded on the carts of the complainant. The accused prevented these carts from proceeding along the public way with the object of compelling the payment of certain dues to the landlord of the village. There is no evidence in that case that the complainant or anybody else was on the cart at the time they were obstructed. In the present case the complainant was on the tumtum and by obstructing the tumtum the accused prevented the complainant from proceeding on his way. These facts constitute the offence of wrongful restraint.

With regard to the sentence, however, I would maintain the sentence of fine under s. 323 and change the sentence of imprisonment passed for the conviction under s. 341 to a fine of Rs. 20 each or in default simple imprisonment for one week each.

KO KYE AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 107—Rice mill leased for one month—If after expiry of lease unmilled paddy was left, fixed monthly rent was payable for five years—Lease held for over one year—Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 49—Lessees admitting lease but pleading inadmissibility of lease-deed for want of registration—Court, if can go behind lease and determine validity—Plea taken by one of lessees—Lease found invalid—It is invalid against all lessees—Admission—Defendant admitting execution of document but pleading it to be of no effect—It is no admission of liability.

Where a lease of a rice mill is executed for one month with a condition that if there was paddy left unmilled at the expiry of the lease a fixed monthly rent would be paid every month for five years, the lease is a lease for over one year and requires registration.

Where the lessee admits the lease but pleads that the lease deed is inadmissible in evidence for want of registration, the Court is fully entitled to go behind the lease and determine its validity. 35 Ind. Cas. 18 (4), relied on. 49 Ind. Cas. 278 (5), referred to.

And where such a plea of inadmissibility is taken only by one of the lessees and the lease is found to be invalid, it is invalid against all the lessees.

An admission by a party that he had executed the document on which the plaintiff relies, accompanied by a pleading that the document is of no effect, is no admission at all of the defendant's liability.

F. A. against the decree of the District Court, Pyinmana, dated December 16, 1939

Mr. P. K. Basu, for the Appellant.

Messrs. E. Hay and K. N. Dangari, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2, respectively.

Moseley, J.—This appeal can be shortly disposed of. The plaintiff-appellant, U Min Sin, sued the two defendant-respondents, Ko Kye and his son E Maung, on, it was said, two agreements of lease of December 21, 1935 and January 2, 1936. The first one was a lease of a rice mill for one month from January 15, 1936 to February 15, 1936 at Rs. 350 for the month. The second document recited that if there was paddy left unmilled on February 15, Rs. 350 monthly rent would be paid every month for five years. The lease then was a lease for over one year and required registration: vide s. 107, T. P. Act. In a previous suit (No. 1 of 1937 of the Sub-Divisional Court) the plaintiff obtained a decree against the defendants for nine months' rent, Rs. 1,950. The present suit was filed in the District Court and was for Rs. 8,750, rent for 25 months from October 15, 1936 to November 14, 1938.

The first defendant in his written statement admitted the allegations in para. 1 of the plaint, that is to say that he hired the mill on those two agreements. His defence was that he had given up the mill at an oral compromise relinquishing his claim to compensation against the plaintiff for not allowing night work. How defendant No. 1's Advocate, an experienced Advocate, Mr. S. Roy Chowdhury, came to overlook the fact that Ex. B was unregistered I am totally at a loss to conceive. However this defect was remedied in the written statement of defendant No. 2 filed by a different Advocate, U Hla Maung. This defendant merely said as regards these leases that he was assured that he would be under no liability and so signed them. In para. 8 he said that these leases or deeds of agreement were inadmissible in evidence. What he obviously meant by this is that he executed the leases but that they were bad leases for lack of registration and that the plaintiff could not sue on them. The diary of March 15, 1939 recites that the Advocate for the parties were present, (I presume this means all the Advocates were present), when issues were framed, but for some extraordinary reason the Judge failed to frame an issue as to whether the leases were valid or not. When it came to judgment, however, it appears that this point was raised in argument for the defendants, and it also appears from the heading of the judgment that Mr. Chowdhury was the only Advocate who argued the case for the defendants, so the point must presumably have been raised by Mr. Chowdhury. The Judge decided, inter alia, that the suit for rent did not lie on this unregistered lease, Ex. B.

It is now argued before us that the lease or leases, having been admitted, need not have been proved. This might have been so had defendant No. 1 only been concerned and had the point not been taken up for him and had the leases not been proved, but the leases were actually sought to be proved on behalf of the plaintiff. The rulings cited in this connection are Maung Kat v. Maung So (1), Maung Wala v. Maung Shwe Gun (2), at p. 475 and Mallappa v. Matum Nagu Chetty (3). Per contra, I note Kotamreddi Septamma v. Krishnaswamy Row, 35 Ind. Cas. 18 (4), where a Bench of the Madras High Court had previously held in the case of an unregistered lease that the Court should not act on admissions made by parties in their pleadings when the documents whose execution or contents are thus admitted are not receivable in evidence and when the admissions are accompanied by denial of liability on the ground of such defect. This appears to me to go for granted, because an admission by a party that he had executed the document on which the plaintiff relies, accompanied by a pleading that that document is of no effect, is no admission at all of the defendant's liability. But it was also held (Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.):

"If the legislative provision (here s. 49, Regis. Act) declaring such a document to be inadmissible in evidence or ineffectual for certain purposes is based on reasons of public policy, a Court ought to go behind the admissions in the pleadings and refuse to act on the admitted facts in favour of either party."

This ruling is not cited in Mallappa v. Matum Nagu Chetty (3); see also Muniappa Chettiar v. Vallachamy Munnadi, 49 Ind. Cas. 278 (5). In my opinion, the trial Court, which could and ought to have framed a formal issue as to the validity of the document was fully entitled to go into its validity in view of the pleadings and to come to the decision it did, which was obviously a correct decision. If the document is found to be invalid against one party it was rightly held to be invalid against both. As regards the contention of res judicata, it having apparently been held in the previous suit that Ex. B was a valid lease, it is only necessary to point to the words of s. 11, Civil P. C. The Sub-Divisional Court was not competent to come to a finding in this suit subsequently filed in the District Court which was for subsequent rents of the value of Rs. 8,750. The suit was one for rent, not for damages for use and occupation. This appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Mya Bu J.—I agree not only in the decisions of my learned brother but also in the expression of amazement at the failure of Mr. Roy Chowdhury to raise a question as to the validity of the lease sued upon in the written statement of his client, defendant No. 1.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 72 (2) 75—Before directing prosecution, notice to insolvent; if essential—Decision to prosecute—Insolvent has right of appeal—Court's refusal to prosecute on creditor's application—Creditor, if has right of appeal—Power to prosecute under s. 72 (2)—Purpose and scope of—Bar of res judicata against Court—Insolvency Court, if can reconsider its decision not to prosecute in light of second application by creditor—Court prosecuting undischarged insolvent under s. 72 (2)—Before dismissal of appeal, insolvent obtaining discharge—Proceedings against him, if made void—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Mere question whether Court's order is wise or unwise cannot be gone into.

Substantially the provisions of s. 72 (2), Prov. Insol. Act, are analogous to those of s. 476, Criminal P. O., and the Insolvency Court should ordinarily give notice to the insolvent before directing his prosecution.

An insolvent has a right of appeal similar to that provided by s. 476-B, Criminal P. O., against the order of the Court directing his prosecution.

Where the Court refuses to prosecute the insolvent under s. 72, Prov. Insol. Act on a creditor's application it is doubtful whether the creditor has a right of appeal.

Under s. 72 (2), there is a power given, not to the interested party, but to the Court itself on being satisfied that an offence of the kind contemplated had been committed, to send the case to the Magistrate. This is a power conferred not in the interests of this or that party, but in order that the Court itself may prevent an offence against the insolvency law. Hence there can be no question of a bar of res judicata operating against the Court. The Insolvency Court can, therefore, consider a decision of its own not to prosecute in the light of a second application from the creditor, although the Court, will not ordinarily prosecute on the strength of information on which it has previously declined to act.

Where the Insolvency Court prosecutes an undischarged insolvent under s. 72 (2), and before the dismissal of his appeal against the prosecution the insolvent obtains his discharge, the discharge cannot render the proceedings against the insolvent void. 151 Ind. Cas 1026 (4), distinguished.

A mere question whether the order of the Court is wise or not cannot be gone into in revision.

O. R. P. to revise an order of the District Court, Guntur, dated March 7, 1939.

Mr. K. Bhimasankaram, for the Respondent.

Order:—This civil revision petition is preferred against a decision in appeal against an order directing the prosecution of an insolvent for an offence under s. 72, Prov. Insol. Act. A preliminary objection was taken by the respondent on the ground that the appeal itself was incompetent. The objection is based on English decisions, vide In re Marsden (1), and Ex parte Brown In re Appleby (2), where it is held that under the corresponding provisions of the English Bankruptcy Act, no notice should be given to the bankrupt before directing the trustee to prosecute for the offence of obtaining credit without disclosing the fact of bankruptcy and no right of appeal exists in favour of the person to be prosecuted. It seems to me that the above decisions throw very little light on the question which I have to decide. The provisions of the English Bankruptcy Act, though similar, are not identical with those of the Prov. Insol. Act and the main reason, which influenced the English Courts in denying a right of appeal or a right of notice to an insolvent are that the concession of such rights would be contrary to English criminal procedure and would imply that the person to be prosecuted had to state his defence and submit to decisions in appeal before his case was heard in the Criminal Court. It cannot be urged that such a procedure is foreign to criminal procedure in India.

Substantially the provisions of s. 72 (2), Prov. Insol. Act, are analogous to those of s. 476, Criminal P. O., and there is nothing unreasonable in supposing that the insolvency Court should ordinarily give notice to the insolvent before directing his prosecution or in holding that the decision to prosecute is a decision against which the aggrieved party has a right of appeal similar to that provided by s. 476B, Criminal P. O. I note that s. 75, Prov. Insol. Act, gives a right of appeal to a person aggrieved not merely by an order made but by a decision come to. When the Court decides to prosecute an insolvent for an offence under s. 72 of the Act, does it not make a decision which aggrieves the person to be prosecuted? Whether the creditor who moves the Court to prosecute has a grievance is another matter. There is a Nagpur decision reported in Pursingh v. Aladadkhan (3), to the effect that he has no right of appeal. But it is unnecessary for me to go into that question though it may be noted as a matter of interest that in the present case there had been a prior refusal to prosecute reversed on appeal at the instance of the creditor. However that may be, I hold that there was a right of appeal to the District Judge by the insolvent against the order of the Court directing his prosecution. It follows therefore that the correctness of the dismissal of the appeal by the District Judge can be canvassed in revision.

Two main grounds have been urged in revision. The first is that the application of the creditor is barred by res judicata by reason of the previous decision. On September 6, 1935 the creditor moved the Court to prosecute the insolvent for obtaining credit without disclosing that he was an undischarged insolvent. The then subordinate Judge refused to prosecute, directing the creditor first to establish the fact of his debt in a Civil Court. The creditor appealed to the District Judge. As I have indicated, it is doubtful whether such an appeal lay. Nevertheless, it was entertained and the District Judge took the reasonable view that the Subordinate Judge should himself have found out whether there was a prima facie case on the facts before refusing to order prosecution. The matter was therefore remanded to the Subordinate Judge who was directed to hold an inquiry into the facts. On the day when the inquiry should have been commenced the creditor was absent and on the insolvent denying his indebtedness, the petition was dismissed. An application for restoration was made by the creditor, but was rejected with an observation that perhaps it is open to the creditor to file a fresh petition. The creditor did file a fresh petition and the Subordinate Judge held that there was no bar by reason of the previous order which was one for default. The reasoning of the learned Subordinate Judge is perhaps defective, but his conclusion is, I think, sound. It was upheld by the District Judge in appeal.

The point, as I understand it, is not whether the previous application was dismissed in default or dismissed on the merits. Under s. 72 (2), there is a power given, not to the interested party, but to the Court itself on being satisfied that an offence of the kind contemplated had been committed, to send the case to the Magistrate. This is a power conferred not in the interests of this or that party, but in order that the Court itself may prevent an offence against the insolvency law. Presumably a creditor who has been wrongfully induced to give credit could himself complain to the Magistrate under s. 72 (1) without obtaining the leave of the insolvency Court. We are not therefore concerned with the question whether there is a bar of res judicata against the individual who gives the information on which the insolvency Court acts, but whether the Court should or should not reconsider a decision of its own not to prosecute in the light of further information. There can be no question of a bar of res judicata operating against the Court. The most that can be said is that the Court cannot prosecute for an offence of which an accused person has already been acquitted and the Court will not ordinarily prosecute on the strength of information on which it has previously declined to act. In the present case owing to the absence of the person who laid the information, the Court declined to proceed with the prosecution. On the subsequent occasion, the Court had before it far more materials and reasonably came to the conclusion that a prosecution was desirable in the interests of the maintenance of the insolvency law. It is no longer a question whether the creditor should succeed or the insolvent should succeed. It is the question whether the Court had materials before it which placed upon it a duty to take action. In such circumstances no question of res judicata arises and if it is a mere question whether the order of the Court is wise or unwise, it is not a matter that should be gone into in revision.

The second contention is based on a decision of the Calcutta High Court reported in W. D. Jorden v. Mahadeo Lal and Bros. (4), to the effect that after an insolvent has obtained a discharge, the insolvency Court has no jurisdiction to direct prosecution under s. 72 (2), Prov. Insol. Act. Assuming that this decision is correct—though there are criticisms which might be urged against the reasoning with which it is supported—it has to my mind no bearing on the present case. When the insolvency Court directed this complaint to be filed, the present petitioner was an undischarged insolvent over whom the insolvency Court certainly had jurisdiction. The complaint therefore was filed by the Court empowered to institute proceedings.

(4) 61 O 605; 151 Ind. Cas. 1028; A I R 1934 Cal. 764; 59 C L J 399; 7 R O 201.

When the insolvent appealed to the District Judge, there was presumably a complaint pending before the Magistrate and that complaint had been regularly instituted. During the pendency of the appeal before the District Judge, the insolvent obtained his discharge. It is argued that the judgment of the District Judge dismissing the appeal amounts to an order under s. 72 (2), Prov. Insol. Act, directing the filing of a complaint and that having been passed after the discharge of the insolvent, that order is without jurisdiction. I cannot accept this contention. We are not here concerned with a decree of the trial Court becoming merged in the decree of the Appellate Court. We are concerned with the act of the insolvency Court in filing a complaint which act is subject to review by an Appellate Court under s. 75, Pr v. Insol. Act. It cannot be contended that when the Appellate Court declines to stop the proceedings instituted by the insolvency Court, it is for the first time instituting those proceedings. The proceedings have already been instituted, and all that has happened is that an attempt to get them stopped has failed. They were instituted when the Court directing them had jurisdiction and the subsequent discharge of the insolvent before the appeal was dismissed cannot make those proceedings void. In the result, therefore, I dismiss the civil revision petition with costs.

Messrs. Binode Charan Deb and Sailendra Nath Mitra (Jr.), for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The judgment-debtor is the appellant in this case and the decree-holder is the Chatra-Serampore Co-operative Credit Society Ltd. It appears that in 1932 a dispute arose between the judgment-debtor and the Co-operative Credit Society, which was referred to the Registrar under the provisions of r. 22 of the statutory rules framed under s. 43, Co-operative Societies Act (II of 1912). The Registrar referred the matter to the Assistant Registrar who on May 31, 1932 recorded an order in favour of the Society which entitled the latter to realize the sum of Rs. 114-12-0 from the judgment-debtor together with interest at the rate of 9½ per cent. per annum. No steps appear to have been taken to communicate this award officially to any of the persons affected thereby until October 13, 1935, when it was forwarded to the Society with the Assistant Registrar's letter No. 13449-B of that date. Admittedly, awards under r. 22, Co-operative Societies Rules, are executable as decrees and this being the case, the provisions of Art. 182 (1), Lim. Act, will apply. It therefore follows that the Society should have applied for execution within three years of the date of the award. Actually they instituted execution proceedings on October 26, 1938, which was the re-opening date after the Civil Court vacation of 1938. In these circumstances, the execution proceedings taken by the Society are within time if limitation runs from the date of the Assistant Registrar's letter, by which the award was communicated to the Society, but will be out of time if limitation is held to run from the date of the order which was made on May 31, 1932. The question therefore which requires consideration is whether the date of the award should be deemed to be the date of the decision of the arbitrator or the date on which such decision is communicated to the party concerned.

Rule 22 of the rules under the Co-operative Societies Act, which prescribes the procedure to be followed in connexion with matters of this sort, does not provide that the decision of the Registrar or the award of an arbitrator appointed under the rule should be communicated to any of the parties directly interested in that decision or award. But obviously it must be taken to be the intention of the framers of the rules that a decision of this nature should be communicated to the parties affected thereby. In this connexion, it may be noted that there is also no provision in the rules contained in Sch. II, Civil P. C., that, in connexion with an arbitration without the intervention of the Court, an award should actually be communicated to the parties concerned. In such matters, limitation as regards the filing of the award, runs from the date of the award under Art. 178, Lim. Act, and it has been held by this Court in Sreenath Chatterjee v. Kylash Chunder (1) and Dutto Singh v. Dosad Bahadur (2), that in such a case the date of the award does not mean the date written therein, but the time when it is handed over to the parties, so that they may be able to give effect to it. Similarly, in connexion with the matter with which we are now dealing, it is clear that the party in whose favour an award has been made, cannot give effect to it until it has been communicated to him, and, in my view, the principles laid down in the above mentioned cases should be applied in calculating the period of limitation for executing as a decree an award made under r. 22 of the rules framed under the Co-operative Societies Act. In this view of the case, the date of the award should be regarded as the date on which such award is officially communicated to the person or persons affected thereby. That date in the present case was October 10, 1935. As the last date for taking execution proceedings under Art. 182 (1), Lim. Act, fell within the Civil Court vacation of 1938, the requisite application for execution was made on the re-opening date, viz., on October 26, so it must be regarded as within the time. The decision of the lower Appellate Court is, therefore, correct and it will be affirmed. This appeal is consequently dismissed. I make no order with regard to costs. Leave to appeal under cl. 15, Letters Patent, is refused.

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (IV of 1938), ss. 11, 19—Interest on costs, if excluded from scaling down operation.

There is nothing in the Act which excludes from the scaling down operation interest on costs. There is nothing in s. 19 which is inconsistent with the view that the appropriation therein provided for was intended to be only in respect of the principal sum for costs or that this provision had any other object than to give effect to the provisions of s. 11. When there is a decree for costs which forms part of a decree being scaled down under s. 19, the provisions of the decree relating to interest on costs should be amended by the process laid down in ss. 8 and 9.

O. R. P. to revise the order of the Sub-Judge, Coimbatore, dated November 15, 1938.

Mr. S. Ramachandra Ayyar for Mr. M. Krishna Bharathi, for the Petitioner.

Mr. A. C. Sampath Iyengar, for the Respondent.

Wadsworth, J.—The petitioner was defendant No. 3 in a mortgage suit and he applied under ss. 8 and 19, Mad. Act IV of 1938, to scale down the decree. The learned Subordinate Judge has given decree for the principal amount of the debt with interest at 6 per cent. from October 1, 1937 and also for Rs. 1,855-3-0 for costs and has provided that this amount awarded for costs shall carry interest at 6 per cent. from the date of the decree which is March 12, 1932. Petitioner seeks to revise this order by applying to the decree for costs the scaling down provisions of the Act so as to cancel the interest as on 1-10-1937. There is nothing in the Act which excludes from the scaling down operation interest on costs. The principal sections dealing with costs are ss. 11 and 19. Section 11 states that where a debt includes any sum decreed as costs by any Court or sums lawfully expended by a mortgagee or other person in order to preserve the property mortgaged such sum or sums shall be recoverable in addition to the sum recoverable under the provisions of ss. 8 and 9. We doubt whether this section was intended to safeguard not only costs but interest thereon, for the section couples costs with sums recoverable as having been lawfully expended by a mortgagee. Such sums would normally be added to the principal amount of the mortgage and would bear interest at the contract rate. If it had been the intention to exclude interest on such sums due to the mortgagee from the scaling down provisions, surely there would have been an express indication of the fact. We are constrained to the view that there was no intention to safeguard interest on sums payable to a mortgagee and if there was no such intention, similarly there can be no intention to exclude from the scaling down provisions interest on any sum decreed as costs.

The other main provision relating to costs is found in the proviso to s. 19 which is to the effect that payments in respect of a decree shall first be applied in payment of all costs as originally decreed to the creditor. It is contended that the phrase "costs as originally decreed" means costs without any scaling down. It is equally likely that the phrase was intended to mean the principal amount of costs and to exclude interest thereon. At any rate, there is nothing in s. 19 which is inconsistent with the view that the appropriation therein provided for was intended to be only in respect of the principal sum for costs or that this provision had any other object than to give effect to the provisions of s. 11. We are of opinion that when there is a decree for costs which forms part of a decree being scaled down under s. 19, the provisions of the decree relating to interest on costs should be amended by the process laid down in ss. 8 and 9. In the present case, the result will be that the amount decreed for costs will carry interest at 6 per cent. per annum with effect from October 1, 1937. The revision petition is allowed with costs and the decretal order of the lower Court will be amended in the light of this judgment.

Misc. C. O. for revision of the order First Additional District Judge, Akola, dated November 20, 1939.

Mr. W. B. Peadharkan, for the Applicant.

Order.—This is an application for revision against an order passed by the lower Court on November 20, 1939, discharging the defendants Nos. 2 to 9 from the suit. In the application for revision Counsel for the applicant prayed that this Court may be pleased to set aside the finding and the order of discharge and to send the case back for further trial and for passing if possible a decree against the defendants and it was also prayed in the alternative that assuming that no revision lay this petition might be accepted by way of appeal and justice be done to the plaintiff as prayed. This led the office of this Court to see as to whether an application for revision lay or it should be treated as an appeal. The application was also accompanied by a copy of the judgment and decree. That judgment showed that after discharging defendants Nos. 2 to 9 from the array of defendants the Court proceeded to decide the case against the defendant against whom the suit was tenable and decreed the claim against him. The office note suggests that as a decree has been passed in the case it is open to the applicant to agitate the question regarding the discharge of the other defendants in an appeal which can be filed by him against the decree that has been passed and in that view it was suggested that the revision application that has been filed was not tenable. The office also wanted a decision from the Court as to whether this application should be treated as a revision or an appeal.

If it is treated as an appeal, the office is of opinion, that it is not properly stamped. Counsel for the applicant urged before me as this is an application against an order discharging the defendants the order must be treated as one passed under O. I. r. 10, and as no appeal is provided for such an order an application for revision is tenable. He relied upon Shanker Rao v. Raghunathrao (1) and Raghubans Puri v. Jyoti Swarupa (2) and some other All India Reporter cases in support of his contention.

I think it proper to decide first the question as to whether the office is right in stating that the question that is being raised in the application could be raised by the applicant in an appeal against the decree that has been passed against defendant No. 1. I think this is not correct. The judgment and decree of the Court below does not contain any adjudication regarding the liability of defendants Nos. 2 to 9 who were discharged by a separate order passed by the Court. The decree in the case which has been actually drawn up is a decree which can be said to be adjudicating the questions as between the plaintiff on the one hand and defendant No. 1 on the other only. In an appeal from such a decree it was not possible for the plaintiff applicant to have raised the contention regarding the liabilities of defendants Nos. 2 to 9. Bose, J., in Chetanlal v. G. S. Gupta (3) has very clearly shown that such a question could not have been raised in an appeal against such a decree which adjudicated the rights of defendant No. 1 only. This leaves me to decide as to whether the present application for revision should be registered as an application for revision or as a memorandum of appeal. This in its turn depends upon the construction of the order that has been passed. It may be an order under O. I. r. 10 of the Civil P. O., but I find from the body of the order that the Court ordered the discharge of defendants Nos. 2 to 9 from the case as there was no cause of action against them and the Court has given its reasons for coming to the conclusion as to how there was no cause of action against these defendants. Such an adjudication will fall within the definition of a decree as given in s. 2 (2) of the Civil P. O. That is a formal expression of an adjudication which so far as regards the Court expressing it conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit. As it is a decree it has to be appealed against if it is intended to be challenged. In Mulla's Civil Procedure Code, p. 47, this point is made clear and it is stated that where the name of a defendant is struck out under O. I. r. 10, Civil P. O., on the ground that the plaint does not disclose any cause of action against him, the order operates as a decree and is appealable as such. Cases relied on are Rama Rao v. Raja of Pittapur (4) and Sher Ali v. Jagmohan Ram (5). The Judicial Commissioner's Court, Nagpur also has taken a similar view in Punjaji v. Jairam (6) and Bose, J., in Chetanlal v. G. S. Gupta (3) had followed Punjaji v. Jairam (6) in preference to Shanker Rao v. Raghunathrao (1).

I am of opinion that this application for revision must be treated as a memorandum of appeal and should be laid before the Division Bench for further decision regarding court-fee and other matters.

Section 192 (1) refers not merely to take cognizance of offences but to cases of which cognizance has been taken and the language used is wider in its character than that which has been employed in s. 190 (1). Therefore, cognizance can be taken by a Magistrate of any matter in respect of which an enquiry or trial may be held under the provisions of the Criminal P. O., and in taking cognizance of an offence or other cases, for example, cases under ss. 107, 110 or 145 of the Code, a Magistrate merely takes seisin of the matter for the purpose of exercising the specific powers with which he has been vested under the Code in connection with the case in question. As soon as a Magistrate duly empowered has taken cognizance of a matter, there is a case before him which he is competent to transfer to a Subordinate Magistrate under the provisions of s. 192 (1) of the Code. Although s. 192 appears in Part VI of the Code relating to proceedings in prosecutions, nevertheless it is sufficiently wide to cover cases under the Code other than criminal cases. [ibid]

Consequently the Magistrates mentioned in s. 192 (1) have power to transfer cases to Subordinate Magistrates either for the purpose of holding a trial for example under Chaps. XX or XXI of the Code or for enquiry, for example under Chaps. VIII, XII or XVII of the Code. 6 Ind. Cas 8 (1, referred to, Satish Chandra Panday v. Rajendra Narain Bagchi (2), Lalit Mohan Moitra v. Surja Kanta (3) and Chintamon Singh v. Emperor (4), relied on.

The term "inquiry" in s. 192 (1) is used with special reference to such inquiries as are held in connection with proceedings under Chaps. VIII, XII and XVIII of the Code. The inquiry which is contemplated by s. 202, on the other hand, is merely for the limited purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsehood of a complaint in order to enable the Magistrate to decide whether an accused person should be summoned or the complaint against him should be dismissed under s. 203. The plain meaning of s. 192 (1) of the Code is that a case which is transferred to a subordinate Magistrate under that section is transferred to him in order that he may complete the inquiry or trial to be held in connection with the case and take all requisite steps to that end. The holding of an inquiry under s. 202 in a suitable case is merely one of such requisite steps to be taken by a Magistrate who has taken cognizance of a case or to whom a case may have been transferred for trial under s. 192 (1). It is clear that a Magistrate who orders an inquiry under s. 202 of the Code does not transfer the case at all. Ordinarily he merely retains the case on his own file and directs some suitable person to hold an inquiry and send the report to him. It follows, therefore, that an order for an inquiry under s. 202 of the Code cannot operate as a transfer under s. 192 (1). [p. 42, col. 2.]

If ss. 192 (1), 202 and 204 are read together, it is clearly competent for the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to transfer the case as soon as the accused has appeared or at any time thereafter when the case becomes ready for the inquiry or the trial. It would be equally competent for the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to transfer the case to a subordinate Magistrate immediately after the complainant had been examined. [p. 43, col. 1.]

When a case has been transferred to a Magistrate under s. 192 (1, Criminal P. O.), that Magistrate has the same authority to deal with the case which has been transferred to him, as regards the issuing of processes and other matters connected with the inquiry or trial, as is vested in the superior Magistrate from whom he received the case on transfer. When once a case has been validly transferred to a subordinate Magistrate under s. 192 (1) of the Code, such Magistrate has no authority to return the case to the transferring Magistrate in order that the latter might issue process under s. 204 and his duty is to complete the trial according to law. The superior Magistrate has no jurisdiction to issue any orders connected with the case except such as are contemplated under the provisions of s. 528 or Chap. XXXII of the Code. [p. 43, cols 1 & 2.]

The legality of the piecemeal transfer of a case under s. 192 (1), Criminal P. O., is doubtful. Even if such piecemeal transfer is in certain circumstances valid, that portion of the case which has not been transferred must be clearly indicated in the order of transfer recorded by the transferring Magistrate who acts under s. 192, Criminal P. O. In the absence of a clear indication as to which part of the case is retained on the file of the transferring Magistrate or some further indication to the effect that such Magistrate intended to dismiss the complaint against those accused persons in respect of whom he did not issue process, it must be taken that the whole case had been transferred to the subordinate Magistrate not only as against the accused persons actually summoned but against all other persons whom the subordinate Magistrate might consider to be implicated in the offence. [p. 44, col. 2.]

It is not necessary that the opinion that there is sufficient ground for issuing process against certain accused persons under s. 204 should be based on evidence in the case nor that the reasons for such an opinion should be recorded. When the sworn statements, the reports of the enquiring officers under s. 202 of the Code and the petitions of complaint are before the Magistrate it must be presumed that he had perused these documents and the other papers on the record and that, after having done so, he was of opinion that there was sufficient ground for proceeding against some of the accused persons other than those in respect of whom process had originally been issued. [ibid]

Where a Magistrate summons only one of the accused persons mentioned in the complaint and transfers the case under s. 192 (1), the death of the aforesaid accused subsequent to the transfer does not terminate the proceedings in the case against the other accused persons unless the Magistrate to whom the case is transferred thinks fit to conclude the proceedings against him.

Where the Magistrate applies his mind to the evidence and in finding that the accused had caused mischief to the complainant he must have been satisfied that the ingredients of the offence defined in s. 425, I. P. O., were present "the finding is sufficient to warrant a conviction. It is not necessary in a case of this sort to embody in the judgment the precise expressions which have been used in the section of the I. P. O., which defines the offence of which the accused person is convicted. [p. 45, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appreciation of the evidence is a matter for the Courts which deal with the facts of the case. The conviction cannot be set aside on revision merely because of inadequate evidence. [p. 45, col. 2.]

Order.—References Nos. 60 and 61 of 1940 have been made to this Court by the learned Sessions Judge of Chittagong with his letter, dated March 14, 1940. They arise with reference to two accused persons who were convicted respectively in two separate cases under ss. 427, and 447 I. P. O. In the first of these cases Nurul Huq was convicted by Rai Saheb Aparna Charan Ray, Honorary Magistrate of Chittagong on February 5, 1940 and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 40 and in the second case Aminoal Haque was convicted by the same Honorary Magistrate on the same date and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 25. These two references have been heard together with a rule issued in Criminal Revision Case No. 437 of 1940 as the main points for consideration in the two references and the rule are similar.

In the first of these cases a man named Hafizar Rahman had filed a complaint on February 19, 1939 against certain persons in respect of alleged offences under ss. 427, 447 and 352, I. P. O. The main allegation was to the effect that the accused persons had committed mischief in respect of the complainant's land while they were engaged in cutting a khal. An enquiry was held under the provisions of s. 202, Criminal P. O., and thereafter one of the accused persons, Aminoal Rahman, was summoned. He appeared on June 9, 1939 and the case was then transferred to the learned Honorary Magistrate for disposal. Aminoal Rahman died on August 15, 1939. Thereafter, on August 18, 1939, the complainant filed a petition in which he stated that the other accused persons were taking advantage of Aminoal Rahman's death and were threatening to take possession of the complainant's land by force. He also stated that there was ample evidence against all the accused persons and in these circumstances he asked that the other accused might be summoned. The learned Honorary Magistrate then directed that one of the other accused persons, Nurul Haque, should be summoned. The case then proceeded to trial and this person was duly convicted under s. 427, I. P. O.

The second case related to a portion of the same land that was in dispute in the case under s. 427, I. P. O. It arose with reference to a complaint filed on April 17, 1939 by Hafizar Rahman against eight accused persons in which it was alleged that they had committed offences on April 12, 1939 under ss. 447, 404 and 143, I. P. O. In this case it was alleged that the accused persons had trespassed into Plot No. 7323, which was in the possession of Hafizar Rahman, and had encroached on the same by putting a fence round it, ploughing it and planting trees thereon. In this case also the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate directed an enquiry under s. 202, Criminal P. O., and he summoned Aminoal Rahman on June 1, 1939. Thereafter, on June 9, 1939, he transferred the case to the learned Honorary Magistrate for disposal. After Aminoal Rahman's death on the August 15, 1939 the complainant filed a petition similar in terms to the one which was filed in the case under s. 427, I. P. O. with the result that the learned Honorary Magistrate summoned one of the other accused persons, Aminoal Haque who was in due course convicted under s. 447, I. P. O. In referring these two cases to this Court under the provisions of s. 438, Criminal P. O., the learned Sessions Judge of Chittagong expresses the opinion that in the first case the findings recorded by the learned Honorary Magistrate were insufficient to warrant a conviction whereas in the second case he was of opinion that the accused had been convicted on inadequate evidence. The main ground, however, upon which the learned Judge referred these two cases was that, in his view, the learned Honorary Magistrate had no jurisdiction to summon persons against whom process had not been issued by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate before the cases were transferred to him. In this connexion, he refers to s. 204, Criminal P. O., and states that:

"It would prima facie appear that the 'case' is, for issue of summons upon the accused, to go back to the file of the Magistrate who took cognizance of the 'offence.' It would, therefore, also seem that a Magistrate who has not taken cognizance of an 'offence' has no jurisdiction to summon an accused person."

He goes on to say :

"In my view, when a case has been transferred for trial to a subordinate Magistrate, with one accused summoned and appearing, the death of that accused terminates the case and the jurisdiction of the Magistrate. The complainant's remedy is to make another complaint before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. I submit that the subordinate Magistrate has no jurisdiction to summon another accused.

The learned Judge concludes his letter as follows:

"In all the circumstances I consider that the convictions should be quashed, and I request that the Hon'ble High Court will rule whether a subordinate Magistrate whether with or without taking evidence, has jurisdiction to summon and prosecute, in a case which has been transferred to him for disposal after the accused who was summoned by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate has appeared, a person other than the accused before him."

Criminal Revision Case No. 437 of 1940 relates to three petitioners who were convicted under ss. 426 and 447, I. P. C. by Babu Bhupendra Nath Ghosh, Honorary Magistrate of Tippera, on January 17, 1940. Originally, two other persons had been summoned in this case by the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Tippera who on June 7, 1939, transferred the case to the learned Honorary Magistrate for disposal. On July 25, 1939 the complainant was absent and the learned Honorary Magistrate acquitted the accused persons before him under s. 247, Criminal P. C. Later, on the same day the complainant filed an application in which he asked that process might issue against the other accused persons who had not been summoned by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and the learned Honorary Magistrate thereupon summoned the petitioners under ss. 447 and 426, I. P. C. and in due course convicted them under those sections. The only ground upon which the rule was issued in this case was that the learned Honorary Magistrate had no jurisdiction to summon the petitioners. The main point for consideration in these cases is whether a Magistrate to whom a case is transferred under the provisions of s. 192 (1), Criminal P. C., by reason of such transfer becomes vested with the same powers in respect of the case transferred to him as may be exercised by the Magistrate from whom he receives it on transfer. Section 192 (1) of the Code is in the following terms:

"Any Chief Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate or Sub-Divisional Magistrate may transfer any case, of which he has taken cognizance, for inquiry or trial to any Magistrate subordinate to him."

It is, of course, obvious that the Magistrate to whom a case is transferred under

s. 192 must be empowered to try it otherwise the trial would be void under the provisions of s. 530 of the Code. In these cases, however, there can be no doubt that the learned Honorary Magistrate had jurisdiction to try the cases under ss. 426, 427 and 447, I. P. C. The expression cognizance has not been defined in the Code. This expression is also used in s. 190 (1), Criminal P. C., which empowers certain Magistrates to take cognizance of offences. On this point Stephen and Carnduff, JJ. pointed out in Emneror v. Sourindra Mohan (1) that "taking cognizance does not involve any formal action, or indeed action of any kind, but occurs as soon as a Magistrate, as such, applies his mind to the suspected commission of an offence."

Section 192 (1) however refers not merely to take cognizance of offences but to cases of which cognizance has been taken and the language used is wider in its character than that which has been employed in s. 190 (1). It would, therefore, appear that cognizance may be taken by a Magistrate of any matter in respect of which an enquiry or trial may be held under the provisions of the Criminal P. C., and in taking cognizance of an offence or other case, for example, cases under ss. 107, 110 or 145 of the Code, a Magistrate merely takes seisin of the matter for the purpose of exercising the specific powers with which he has been vested under the Code in connexion with the case in question. As soon as a Magistrate duly empowered has taken cognizance of a matter, there is a case before him which he is competent to transfer to a subordinate Magistrate under the provisions of s. 192 (1) of the Code. Although s. 192 appears in Part VI of the Code relating to proceedings in prosecutions, it has nevertheless been held from its terms that it is sufficiently wide to cover cases under the Code other than criminal cases. In this connexion Macpherson and Gordon, JJ., observed in Satish Chandra Panday v. Rajendra Narain Bagchi (2) that "the power of transfer conferred upon Magistrates and Sub-Divisional Magistrates is a general power, and unless cases under Chap. XII are expressly excluded, it must extend to them also. It is argued that s. 192 applies only to criminal cases, as it occurs in a chapter which deals with offences, and the preceding section relates to the cognizance of offences. The words are, however, quite wide enough to include cases under Chap. XII. We may observe also that in the Code of 1872, s. 44, which is the section corresponding to s. 192, provided only for the transfer of 'criminal cases.' By the Amending Act XI of 1874, the word 'criminal' was struck out, and it has been omitted from all the subsequent enactments."

(1) 37 C 412; 6 Ind. Cas. 8; 14 O W N 512; 11 Cr. L. J 217.

Again, in Lolit Mohan Moitra v. Surja Kanta (3 Ghose J. holds that a Magistrate taking cognizance of a case under s. 145 is a Criminal Court within the meaning of the Code and he also refers to cases under ss. 10 and 110 of the Code as criminal cases which District Magistrates or Sub-Divisional Magistrates would have jurisdiction to transfer under s. 192 of the Code. Further, in Chin'amon Singh v. Emperor (4) Rampini and Sharfuddin, JJ. said:

"It is to be observed that the expression used in s. 192, cl. (1), Criminal P. O., is 'any case,' and not any 'criminal case.' It has been contended that s. 192, Criminal P. O., applies only to criminal cases, as it is part of a chapter which deals with offences, and the preceding section relates to the cognizance of offences. The words are however quite wide enough to include cases under Chap. VIII, Criminal P. O."

It is therefore clear that the Magistrates mentioned in s. 192 (1) of the Code have power to transfer cases to subordinate Magistrates either for the purpose of holding a trial, for example, under Chap. XX or Chap. XXI, of the Code, or for inquiry, for example, under Chaps. VIII, XII or Chap. XVIII of the Code. It is however argued that in view of the terms of s. 204, Criminal P. O., the only Magistrate who has power to issue summons for the attendance of accused persons is the Magistrate who takes cognizance of the offence and that, in this view of the case, the learned Honorary Magistrates had no jurisdiction to issue process against any persons other than those who had been summoned by the Sub-Divisional Magistrates before the cases were transferred by them. It is however clear from the provisions of s. 202 of the Code that the Magistrate who takes cognizance of an offence is not vested with an exclusive jurisdiction as regards the issue of process, as s. 202 provides that a Magistrate to whom a case has been transferred under s. 192 may, if he thinks fit, for reasons to be recorded in writing, postpone the issue of process for compelling the attendance of the person complained against."

It follows therefore by implication that, if such a Magistrate has power to postpone the issue of process against an accused person, he has also power to issue process and that this power is not limited by the terms of s. 204. In this connexion, it was argued that the inquiry for which a case may be transferred under s. 192 (1) of the Code means an inquiry under s. 202 and that the latter section merely empowers the subordinate Magistrate who has been directed to hold the inquiry to postpone the issue of process by the transferring Magistrate pending the result of the inquiry. The learned Advocate contends that, if a prima facie case is made out, the subordinate Magistrate should send the case back to the transferring Magistrate who may then issue process under s. 201 of the Code and it is suggested that, if the superior Magistrate then wishes to transfer a case for trial, he may again transfer it under s. 122 (1) of the Code and at this stage the Magistrate to whom the case is transferred would follow the procedure laid down in Chaps. XX and XXI of the Code.

I am not prepared to accept the above argument. I have already pointed out that the term "inquiry" in s. 192 (1) is used with special reference to such inquiries as are held in connexion with proceedings under Chaps. VIII, XII and XVIII of the Code. The inquiry which is contemplated by s. 202, on the other hand, is merely for the limited purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsehood of a complaint in order to enable the Magistrate to decide whether an accused person should be summoned or the complaint against him should be dismissed under s. 203. The plain meaning of s. 192 (1) of the Code is that a case which is transferred to a subordinate Magistrate under that section is transferred to him in order that he may complete the inquiry or trial to be held in connexion with the case and take all requisite steps to that end. The holding of an inquiry under s. 202 in a suitable case is merely one of such requisite steps to be taken by a Magistrate who has taken cognizance of a case or to whom a case may have been transferred for trial under s. 192 (1). It is clear that a Magistrate who orders an inquiry under s. 202 of the Code does not transfer the case at all. Ordinarily he merely retains the case on his own file and directs some suitable person to hold an inquiry and send the report to him. It follows therefore that an order for an inquiry under s. 202 of the Code cannot operate as a transfer under s. 192 (1). Another step requisite to the completion of the trial is the issue of process against the person or persons whom it is intended to prosecute, and I have already pointed out that the language of s. 209 of the Code shows that a subordinate Magistrate to whom a case has been transferred under

(3) 28 O 709; 5 O W N 749.

(4) 35 O 243; 7 Or. L J 146; 12 O W N 299; 7 O L J 177.

s. 192 (1) has the power to issue such process. It therefore follows that, when once a case has been validly transferred to a subordinate Magistrate under s. 192 (1) of the Code, such Magistrate would have no authority to return the case to the transferring Magistrate in order that the latter might issue process under s. 204 and his duty would be to complete the trial according to law. It is true, as pointed out by the learned Sessions Judge that the usual practice throughout Bengal

"is that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate retains the case in his own file until after the accused summoned by him has appeared, and then transfers it for disposal to a Magistrate subordinate to him."

The learned Judge seems to hold the view that this is not the procedure contemplated by the Code. If, however, ss. 192 (1), 202 and 204 are read together, it is clearly competent for the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to follow this procedure and to transfer the case as soon as the accused has appeared or at any time thereafter when the case becomes ready for the inquiry or the trial. It would be equally competent for the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to transfer the case to a subordinate Magistrate immediately after the complainant had been examined and having regard to the provisions of s. 202 of the Code, it would then be for such subordinate Magistrate to decide whether he would issue process immediately or postpone the issue of such process for the purpose of holding a preliminary investigation under that section for the purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsehood of the complaint. When however a case has been transferred under s. 192 (1) it is transferred for all purposes from the file of the superior Magistrate to that of the subordinate Magistrate and thereafter the superior Magistrate has no jurisdiction to issue any orders connected with the case except such as are contemplated under the provisions of s. 52 or Chap. XXXII of the Code. This was the view adopted by this Court in Golapdy Sheikh v. Queen-Empress (5) in which it was held that, where cognizance had been taken of an offence on a Police report and the case had been made over to a subordinate Magistrate, so long as the case connected with that offence remained with the subordinate Magistrate, no other Magistrate was competent to deal with it and applications for warrants against other persons concerned in that offence should be made to the Magistrate to whom the case had been transferred and to no other Magistrate. A similar view was adopted by Stevens and Mitra, JJ. in Radhabullav Ray v. Benode Behari (6) in which the learned Judge observed that :

"We think that when once the District Magistrate made the case over for disposal to the Deputy Magistrate, it was out of his hands and he was not competent to pass any order relating to it other than an order such as might have been made by him under Chap. XXXII, of the Code."

It was also pointed out by Chotzner and Gregory, JJ. in Hemendra Nath Sen v. Emperor (7), that, in a case in which after issue of process the case had been transferred to another Magistrate who discharged the accused person against whom process had issued and then suo motu issued process against another person under s. 191 (c) of the Code, the trying Magistrate stood in the shoes of the Magistrate who had originally issued process and had full authority to deal with the case as if he himself has taken cognizance of it. From the abovementioned cases it follows that, when a case has been transferred to a Magistrate under s. 192 (1), Criminal P.O., that Magistrate has the same authority to deal with the case which has been transferred to him, as regards the issuing of processes and other matters connected with the inquiry or trial, as is vested in the superior Magistrate from whom he received the case or transfer.

It is, however, argued that the only cases which had been transferred were the cases against those persons who had originally been summoned by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, namely Aminar Rahaman in the cases under ss. 447 and 427, I. P. O., and Asaruddin and Tamijuddin in the case under s. 447 read with s. 426, I. P. O. It is argued that, as a result of the preliminary investigations under ss. 202 of the Code, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate who took cognizance of the cases was satisfied that there was sufficient ground for proceeding against those persons only and as he issued process only against them, it must be taken that he did not wish to proceed against the other accused persons and therefore, transferred to the learned Honorary Magistrate merely the cases of those persons whom he had summoned. In the first two cases the order of transfer was that "the case is transferred to Rai Sahib A. C. Ray for favour of disposal." in the other case the order of transfer was to Babu B. N.

(6) 30 O 449.

Ghosh, Honorary Magistrate "for disposal." It was, however, held in Ajab Lal v. Emperor (8), that orders of this nature mean that the whole case is transferred so that it is competent for the subordinate Magistrate to issue process for the attendance of any persons whom he may consider to have been concerned in the commission of the offence. Henderson, J. pointed out that :

"It is not necessary in a matter of this kind that the entire case should be transferred. Whether such a transfer has been made is a question of fact depending on the intention of the officer making the order, which intention must be gathered from the order itself. Where no reservation is made, as in the case cited and in the case before us, I should certainly conclude that the entire case (in the sense abovementioned) had been transferred."

A similar point came under consideration in In re Azim Sheikh (9). In that case a complaint had been lodged against several persons, and the Sub-Divisional Magistrate after examining the complainant issued summons against one of the accused only. He passed no order with regard to the others. He then transferred the case to an Honorary Magistrate who, after taking evidence, acquitted the person who had been summoned, but issued process against one of the other accused persons. The learned Judges held that, as regards the question whether the Honorary Magistrate could take cognizance of the case as against Azim, it appeared that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate took cognizance of the whole case and transferred it under s. 192 to the Honorary Magistrate. They observed that "the fact, that he did not summon Azim, did not amount to a dismissal of the case as against Azim, nor could it annul the cognizance which he had already taken of the case as a whole. We think that the case must be regarded as having been transferred as a whole to the Honorary Magistrate, and indeed, it appears to us open to considerable doubt whether under the section a case can be transferred piecemeal."

The law with regard to this point seems now to be well-settled and, as pointed out by Macpherson, J. in Deonarain Singh v. Emperor (10) :

"Since 1900 when the decision in Golapdy Shaikh v. Queen-Empress (5), was given there has been a curtus curia that once the Sub-Divisional Magistrate having taken cognizance of an offence on a charge-sheet submitted by the Police in circumstances like the present, has made over to a subordinate Magistrate the charge-sheet and the accused forwarded by the Police in custody or bail with an order that the transfer is 'for disposal' he has made over the judicial investigation into the offence and not merely the judicial investigation into the offence so far as regards the particular accused.....In the present instance, the order itself appears to show that the whole case was made over. If the whole case was made over, the Deputy Magistrate had full seisin of it."

I myself share the doubts expressed in Azim Sheikh's case (9), as to the legality of the piecemeal transfer of a case under s. 192 (1), Criminal P. O. subject to the authority of a Magistrate who takes cognizance of an offence on complaint to dismiss the complaint as against some of the persons whom it is sought to prosecute and to leave the case open as against others. But, it is clear that even if such piecemeal transfer is in certain circumstances valid, that portion of the case which has not been transferred must be clearly indicated in the order of transfer recorded by the transferring Magistrate who acts under s. 192, I. P. O. In the absence of a clear indication as to which part of the case is retained on the file of the transferring Magistrate or some further indication to the effect that such Magistrate intended to dismiss the complaint against those accused persons in respect of whom he did not issue process, it must be taken that the whole case had been transferred to the subordinate Magistrate not only as against the accused persons actually summoned but against all other persons whom the subordinate Magistrate might consider to be implicated in the offence. In the cases with which we are now dealing, it is argued that the learned Honorary Magistrate had no material before them from which it was possible for them to reach an opinion that there was sufficient ground for issuing process. It is not necessary that the opinion to this effect within the meaning of s. 204, Criminal P. O., should be based on evidence in the case nor that the reasons for such an opinion should be recorded. In all the three cases the sworn statements, the reports of the enquiring officers under s. 202 of the Code and the petitions of complaint were before the learned Honorary Magistrates. It must be presumed that they had perused these documents and the other papers on the record and that, after having done so, they were of opinion that there was sufficient ground for proceeding against some of the accused persons, other than those in respect of whom process had originally been issued.

Further, I am not prepared to hold that the death of Aminar Rahaman in the cases under ss. 447 and 427, I. P. O., had the effect of terminating the proceedings in those cases. The cases against the other accused persons mentioned in the petitions of complaint remained undecided until the Magistrate to whom the cases had been transferred thought fit to conclude the proceedings against them. There is nothing on the record to indicate that he did so and, in my view, the orders in the two cases (References Nos. 60 and 61 of 1940) which have been referred to this Court by the learned Sessions Judge of Chittagong and the other order which is the subject-matter of Criminal Revision Case No. 437 of 1940 were legal. The entire cases relating to the alleged offences covered by the complaints were transferred to the learned Honorary Magistrate and the proper procedure was adopted by them in all these cases. Finally, as regards the cases which are the subject-matter of the references made by the learned Sessions Judge of Chittagong it has been argued that the references should be accepted having regard to the defects in the judgments to which reference is made in the first part of the learned Judge's letter. As regards the case against Nurul Haque under s. 427, I. P. O., the learned Judge states that there is no finding in the judgment to the effect that the accused intended to cause loss to the complainant. He also refers to the insufficiency of the evidence. I have perused the judgment recorded by the learned Honorary Magistrate and it appears that the main finding is in the following terms:

"I, therefore, hold that the accused party are not in possession of the eastern half of the R. S. plot No. 7323 as claimed by them. As to R. S. plot No. 7334 the defence has no answer to make and it is admittedly in possession of the complainant. The position, therefore, is that the complainant is in possession of both the R. S. plots Nos. 7323 and 7334 in full and upon the evidence adduced by the prosecution I hold that the accused party cut portions of those two plots and included the same in the khal as newly opened and thereby caused mischief to the complainant to the extent of about Rs. 60 as alleged by the prosecution."

In my view, this finding is sufficient. It is not necessary in a case of this sort to embody in the judgment the precise expressions which have been used in the section of the I. P. O. which defines the offence of which the accused person is convicted. In this case it is clear that the learned Magistrate applied his mind to the evidence and in finding that the accused had caused mischief to the complainant he must have been satisfied that the ingredients of the offence defined in s. 425, I. P. O., were present. As regards the case under s. 447, I. P. O., the main ground as regards the merits of the case upon which the learned Judge recommends that the conviction should be set aside is that of inadequate evidence. Admittedly, a ground of this sort is not one on which this Court should interfere in revision. Appreciation of the evidence is a matter for the Courts which deal with the facts of the case. It is clear that there were materials before the learned Magistrate, which if believed would justify the conviction of the accused under s. 447, I. P. O. No appeal lies against this decision and the conviction is one with which I am not prepared to interfere. The result is that References Nos. 60 and 61 of 1940 are rejected and the rule issued in Criminal Revision Case No. 437 of 1940 is discharged.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 58, s. 47—Transferee of transferee from judgment-debtor is not his representative—Objection by him to attachment falls under O. A transferee of the properties by a sale-deed and sudbharna deed executed in his favour by a transferee from the judgment-debtor, is not the representative of the judgment-debtor and hence his objection to the attachment falls to be determined under O. XXI, r. 58, and not under s. 47, Civil P. O.

A judgment-debtor executed a deed of gift which was a colourable transaction, and the judgment-debtor after this deed of gift continued to be in possession of the property so long as he was alive and this transaction was entered into in order to put obstacles in the way of the decree-holder or to defraud him;

Held, that the transfer was void against the decree-holder. Ishan Chunder Das Sarkar v. Bishu Sardar (1) and Harrods, Limited v. Stanton (2), distinguished.

As from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Muzaffarpur, dated May 26, 1939.

Mr. P. B. Ganguly, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. N. Pail, for the Respondents.

Manohar Lall, J.—This is an appeal by Ram Behari Safai and others who objected to the execution of a decree which was passed against one Kamla Prasad who died on September 2, 1938, the execution having been started on August 27 of the same year. The appellants are the transferees of the properties by a sale-deed and sudbharna deed executed in their favour by one Moti Bibi who was also a transferee from the judgment-debtor Kamla Prasad by a deed of gift executed on July 21, 1938. The attachment, which was objected to by the appellants, was effected after their objection was filed on December 12, 1938, the attachment having been actually effected on February 8, 1939.

On the above statement of facts it is clear that the appellants are not the representatives of the judgment-debtor Kamla Prasad, and, therefore, their objection falls to be determined under the provisions of O. XXI, r. 5, Civil P. O. and not under s. 47 of the Code. It follows, therefore, that the appeal is not maintainable and the appellants can succeed only if they can induce us to revise the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge, dated May 26, 1939, by which he held that although the appellants were in possession of the properties they were in possession without any title.

The learned Advocate for the appellants then requested us to treat the appeal as an application in revision and took us through the entire judgment in order to satisfy us that he ought to be granted relief in revision. The facts found, however, are clear, namely, that the deed of gift, which was executed in favour of Moti Bibi on July 21, 1938, was a colourable transaction, and that the judgment-debtor after this deed of gift continued to be in possession of the property so long as he was alive and that this transaction was entered into in order to put obstacles in the way of the decree holders or to defraud them. It is argued by the learned Advocate for the appellants that inasmuch as they are bona fide transferees from Moti Bibi, who was a donee from the judgment-debtor, the appellants are not affected by any decision arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge to the effect that their transferor had no title in the property in dispute. But there is a fallacy in this argument. The finding of the learned Subordinate

Judge is not that the judgment-debtor did actually execute a real deed of gift in fraud of the creditors but his finding is that the judgment-debtor did not ever intend to pass the property out of his hands and that the deed of gift executed was a mere colourable transaction which was never intended to be acted upon. In the face of these facts the authorities cited by the learned Advocate, namely, Ishan Chunder Das Sarkar v. Bishu Sardar (1) and Harrods, Limited v. Stanton (2), have no application whatsoever.

Having considered the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge, it is impossible to interfere in revision. The learned Subordinate Judge was entitled upon the evidence to take the view which he did, and he has not exercised any jurisdiction which he did not possess nor has he failed to exercise any jurisdiction vested in him, nor has he acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity.

For these reasons the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 2
—Plaintiff directed to file process fees by certain date—Part of process fees paid—Court fixing certain date for disposal of suit—Full process fees not paid—Court held had no jurisdiction to dismiss suit—Plaintiff not depositing sufficient fees for service on all defendants but wishing Court to issue notice to some of them—He must specify which of them he desires to serve.

A person instituted a suit for rent and was directed to file process fees amounting to Rs. 3/6 by October 7, 1939. There were five defendants in the suit of whom one was a minor. On October 7, the plaintiff filed only Rs. 3. The Court pointed out that annas six was still due and fixed November 16, for the disposal of the suit. On that date the plaintiff applied for the appointment of a guardian ad litem for the minor defendant and filed a fee of Rs. 2 for that purpose. The defendants were not present. The balance of six annas due from the plaintiff was not paid and the suit was dismissed for default.

Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction to dismiss the suit. 179 Ind. Cas. 563 (1), distinguished.

Held, further that even if the three rupees which the plaintiff deposited were sufficient at least to pay the process fees for service on the adult defendants, the suit could not proceed as against the adult defendants. 60 Ind. Cas. 377 (2), distinguished.

It is not for the Court to decide which of the defendants are to be served. If the plaintiff does not deposit sufficient fees for service on all the defendants and wishes the Court to issue notice to some of them he must specify which of them he desires to serve otherwise it would be open to him to complain afterwards that the persons whom the Court had served were not substantial defendants while the substantial defendants had not been served and that the Court had exercised an unwise discretion in serving notice on the unsubstantial defendants and omitting to serve notice on substantial defendants. The plaintiff cannot be allowed to put the Court in such a position.

O. R. against an order of the Munsif, 3rd Court, Gaya, dated December 9, 1940.

Mr. Raj Kishore Prasad, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Naimul Huq, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This application arises in the following circumstances: The plaintiff instituted a suit for rent for the years 1343 to 1346 Fasli and was directed to file process fees amounting to Rs. 3/6 by October 7, 1939. There were five defendants in the suit of whom one was a minor. On October 7, the plaintiff filed only Rs. 3. The Court pointed out that annas six was still due and fixed November 16, for the disposal of the suit. On that date the plaintiff applied for the appointment of a guardian ad litem for the minor defendant and filed a fee of Rs. 2 for that purpose. The defendants were not present. The balance of six annas due from the plaintiff was not paid and the suit was dismissed for default. An application for restoration of the suit was filed. The plaintiff now comes in revision and contends, in the first place, that the Court had no jurisdiction to dismiss the suit on November 16, as no date had been fixed for appearance of the defendants. Reliance was placed on the decision in Sripati Saran Prasad Singh v. Indarjit Mahlon (1). It was there held that where the Court calls upon the plaintiff to file process fees and copies of the plaint by a certain date but on that date nothing is done, the Court has no jurisdiction to dismiss the suit. The reason given was that the Court acted illegally in calling upon the plaintiff to file process fees before fixing the date for the appearance of the defendant. That case is distinguishable from the present. November 16, was fixed for the disposal of the suit, that is to say, it was the date which the Court fixed for hearing the parties. The reason why the defendants were not present was that the process fees had not been paid.

It is next contended that out of the three rupees which the plaintiff deposited there was sufficient at least to pay the process fees for service on the adult defendants and that the suit should, therefore, not have been dismissed as against them. Reference was made to Ramanand Singh v. Chandrama Singh (2). The facts of that case, however, are clearly distinguishable. The adult defendants had entered appearance but suit was dismissed because there was no appearance on behalf of the minor defendants owing to the process fees and the costs of the guardian ad litem not having been deposited. In these circumstances it was held that the Court acted illegally in dismissing the suit, as against the adult defendants. It is contended that in the present case the Court should have out of the process fees already filed, served notice on the adult members. But it is not for the Court to decide which of the defendants are to be served. If the plaintiff does not deposit sufficient fees for service on all the defendants and wishes the Court to issue notice to some of them he must specify which of them he desires to serve otherwise it would be open to him to complain afterwards that the persons whom the Court had served were not substantial defendants while the substantial defendants had not been served and that the Court had exercised an unwise discretion in serving notice on the unsubstantial defendants and omitting to serve notice on substantial defendants. The plaintiff cannot be allowed to put the Court in such a position.

The last point raised is that as the Court has inherent powers to restore a suit and as the result of this dismissal will be that a part of the claim of the plaintiff will be barred by limitation the Court should have exercised its inherent power to restore the suit. Reference was made to Ram Narain v. Ramdhan Singh (3) where it was held that when a suit has been dismissed in the absence of both parties there is no prejudice to the defendants if it is restored and the Court ought to exercise its inherent powers in such a case especially if the claim is a substantial one and would become barred by time if the suit is not restored. The amount of the claim in this case is about Rs. 18 p. a. It could hardly be considered that this was a substantial claim as to require the Court to exercise its inherent powers. In the result the application fails and the rule is discharged. As there is no appearance on behalf of the major defendants and the costs of the guardian ad litem having been already deposited there will be no order for costs.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 17, 25—Child of tender years—Custody of—Considerations in the matter—Mother preferable to father—Persons interested in minor can apply to Court at any time for change of custody.

The paramount consideration in the matter of a custody of a minor of tender years is the interest of the child, rather than the rights of the parents. Human nature is much the same all the world over, and if the mother is a suitable person to take charge of the child, it is quite impossible to find an adequate substitute for her for the custody of a child of tender years. Hence in such a case the mother is preferable to the father 68 Ind. Cas. 518 (1), relied on.

Orders as to the custody of a child are always of a temporary nature. Those interested in the minor are at liberty to apply to the Court at any time for the change of the minor's custody.

Mr. K. M. Munshi, for the Appellant.

Sir Jamshedji Kanga, for the Respondent.

Beaumont, C. J.—This is an appeal from a decision of Kania, J., on a petition presented by the father of a minor under s. 25, Guardians and Wards Act. Under that section, the Court can return the custody of the minor to his father who is his natural guardian, if it is of opinion that to do so will be for the welfare of the minor ward.

The parents of the minor were married in February 1936 and the minor, a boy, was born in October 1938. After the birth the mother unfortunately contracted tuberculosis, and she had to go away for treatment and the child was taken by the father and kept at his mother's house. The mother of the minor was discharged from the sanatorium at the end of July 1939, but she was advised to remain at hill stations for a time in order to complete her cure, and she came back to Bombay, considering herself to be cured, at the end of May 1940. On May 29 the child was out with a servant in attendance and was taken round to the house of the mother and her parents, and it has been retained by the mother ever since. The circumstances in which the child was taken by the mother are in dispute. The father says that it was virtually kidnapped by an uncle of the wife. The uncle, however, has put in an affidavit denying that he kidnapped the child and saying that it was taken by the servant to the mother's house. As the servant in charge of the child, when it is alleged to have been kidnapped, has not put in an affidavit, it is probable that the mother's story is true. However, that is not very material. The fact is that from the end of May 1940 the child has been in the custody of the mother and the father now asks to have it returned to him. As I have said, under the Act we have to consider what will be in the best interests of the minor.

I think the law on questions of this sort is the same in this country as in England, though of course social habits may be different. The modern view of Judges in England is that it is impossible, in the case of a young child, to find any adequate substitute for the love and care of the natural mother. If the natural mother is a suitable person, the Courts in England will as a general rule hand over the custody of a child of tender years to the mother. The mother's position is regarded as of much more importance in modern times than it was in former days, when a wife was regarded as little more than the chattel of her husband. The view of society in India as to the position of woman may not have advanced so far or so fast as in England, but at the same time the right of the mother to the custody of her young children is undoubtedly recognized in this country: see for example Bai Tara v. Mohanlal (1). However the paramount consideration is the interest of the child, rather than the rights of the parents. Human nature is much the same all the world over, and in my opinion if the mother is a suitable person to take charge of the child, it is quite impossible to find an adequate substitute for her for the custody of a child of tender years.

It is suggested here that the mother's health has not recovered. It might be dangerous to send a child to live in the custody of a woman suffering from tuberculosis. But the evidence before the Court is that the mother has recovered. She was discharged from the sanatorium about a year and a half ago, and the doctor says in his letter, Ex. 1, that she was discharged as an arrested case. The subsequent examination of her sputum has not shown any change, and Dr. Billimoria in Ex. 3 reported on June 13, 1940, that no T. B. was detected. On the evidence before the Court, there is no reason for supposing that the health of the child will suffer if its custody is handed over to the mother. Orders as to the custody of a child are always of a temporary nature. Those interested in the minor are at liberty to apply to the Court. In this case the father can apply to the Court at any time: and if he thinks that the health of his child is suffering, he can ask the Court to appoint a doctor to examine the child. I do not think that on the evidence before us there is at the moment any necessity to appoint a doctor to examine the state of the mother's health, but if at any time there is any reason for supposing that her ailment has returned, the father can apply to the Court to get her examined by an independent doctor, and submission to such an examination could be made a condition to her retention of the custody of the child. There is no question here of removing the child from the guardianship of the father. The father is the natural guardian, and there is no application to remove him from that position. He remains the natural guardian, but in the interests of the child itself we are satisfied that its custody ought, for the present, to be with the mother.

The parents unfortunately are not living together, and probably will not live together, because the father has contracted marriage with another woman. That under Hindu Law he is entitled to do but it is difficult to suppose, that a step-mother, whose age we are told is about 17, is likely to be a good substitute for the natural mother; whilst the father himself will have other occupations and will have to entrust the actual upbringing and charge of a child of this age to somebody else. In my opinion, there is not the slightest doubt that the natural mother is the proper person to have the custody of the child, and there is no evidence before the Court to justify us in thinking that she is not a proper person to have that custody. Her parents appear to have adequate means to maintain her and the child. The father is, of course, entitled to access to his child. Probably there will be no difficulty in arranging that. If there is, he will have to apply to the Court to arrange the circumstances in which he can see his child. I think the learned Judge in the Court below went wrong in the exercise of his discretion, because he did not recognize that the paramount consideration in a case of this sort is the interest of the minor. He refers to the interest of the minor as being a vague ground for exercising his discretion. That is the paramount ground, and prima facie it is in the interest of the child that it should be brought up by the mother. We, therefore, direct that the custody of the child, until further order, be with the mother. The appeal is allowed.

B. J. Wadia, J.—I agree with the order proposed by the learned Chief Justice. No doubt it is laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Annie Basant v. Narayaniah (2), that among Hindus, as in England, the father is the natural guardian of his children during their minorities and that the guardianship is in the nature of a sacred trust. That natural right of the father has received statutory recognition in s. 19 (b), Guardians and Wards Act, VIII of 1900. But s. 19 is in my opinion controlled by s. 17 of the same Act according to which the paramount consideration is the welfare of the minor. The father of the minor has married again. That in itself may not be a ground for depriving him of the custody of his minor child. But the Court has got to consider all the circumstances of the case, and taking human nature as the same here as elsewhere, a step-mother cannot be expected to be very much interested in the welfare of a minor step-son, nor likely to give him the attention, love and sympathy which the child naturally requires. It is not the welfare of the father, nor the welfare of the mother, that is the paramount consideration for the Court. It is the welfare of the minor and of the minor alone which is the paramount consideration; and I agree with Shab, J., in Bai Tara v. Mohanlal (1) where he observed as follows (p 722*):

"The boy is of tender age and I think that at present the personal care of the mother is a paramount consideration."

In that case the boy was seven years old. In this case the boy is just about two years of age and what was urged in Bai Tara v. Mohanlal (1) can be applied with even greater force to the boy who is two years old. Taking all these circumstances into consideration, I think that at present the custody of the child should be with the mother. But that will not, as has been pointed out by the learned Chief Justice, prevent the father from making a further application to the Court at any later date, under the liberty reserved to him to apply, when he may be able to satisfy the Court that it will then be in the interest and for the welfare of the minor child on account of the mother's health or the child's health, or on account of want of means for maintenance, or any other just and reasonable ground, that it should leave the mother's custody and instead live with the father. For these reasons I agree that the appeal should be allowed, and I agree with the order proposed.

Per Curiam—As the wife is not asking for costs, there will be no order as to costs throughout. The notice of motion is discharged. The mother should not remove the child from the jurisdiction of the Court without an order of the Court. The mother should send the child to the father's house twice a week at times convenient to the mother for a couple of hours on each occasion, subject to the consideration of the child's health, the father undertaking to make arrangements for conveying the child back to the mother. Liberty to both parties to apply to the Chamber Judge for further directions.

Adverse possession—Question as to, is mixed one of law and fact—Whether proved facts substantiate plea of adverse possession is matter of law—If can be challenged in second appeal—Burden of proof—Permissive possession not set up—Question, how to be approached—Essentials of adverse possession—Onus of establishing essentials—Hostile and notorious possession—Situation, user and nature of property to be considered—Acts of temporary and flimsy character cannot destroy real owner's title.

The question of adverse possession is a mixed question of fact and law. Though the facts found by the Court of first appeal must be accepted as final in second appeal, the question whether the proved facts substantiate the plea of adverse possession is a matter of law which can be challenged in second appeal. Lachmeswar Singh v. Manowar Hossein (2), 55 Ind. Cas. 48 (3) and 155 Ind. Cas. 23 (4), referred to. [p. 54, col. 1.]

It is the duty of the plaintiffs claiming title by adverse possession to establish affirmatively that they had acquired statutory title to the property by reason of adverse possession for the requisite period. Where no case of permissive possession has been set up by defendant in the pleadings, and the permissive character of possession has never arisen as an independent issue calling for a decision in the case, it is wholly wrong to approach the question of adverse possession by determining whether the defendant has proved a case of permissive possession or not and hold adverse possession upon the weakness of that case. *Radhamoni Debi v. The title of the owner must be deemed to carry with it the legal possession and must be deemed to subsist, unless and until there is an open and hostile assertion of title accompanied by exclusive possession of an effective nature to the knowledge of the actual owner. To constitute a plaintiff's title by adverse possession, the possession required to be proved must be adequate in continuity, in publicity, and in extent, and is displaced by evidence of partial possession by the defendant, and the onus of establishing these essential elements is upon the adverse possessor. Radhamoni Debi v. The Collector of Khulna (5), followed. [p. 55, col. 1.]

In determining the question whether possession is hostile and notorious so as to charge the real owner with notice of the adverse claim the nature, the situation and the user of the property must be considered. [ibid.]

Where a house has fallen in ruins for a long time and the land has presented the appearance of a mere akhata with a dalan bounded on all sides by the houses of neighbours, such acts of possession as tethering of cattle, using the land as a play ground, cooking food on the occasions of ceremonies and even planting trees by the persons who are no other than the members of the real owner's family, cannot possibly arouse the notice of the real owners even if the real owner has been living in the same town; much less would they constitute adverse possession against him if he has been living away from the land since very long time, since occasional acts are acts of a temporary and flimsy character which do not destroy the title of the real owner. [p. 55, col. 2.]

Judgment.—This is an appeal by defendant No. 1 under s. 12 (2) of the Oudh Courts Act against the decision of the late Mr. Justice Smith.

A short pedigree table, in so far as it is material to explain the situation of the parties, is set out below. The pedigree is undisputed:—

QADIR ALI

The facts giving rise to this litigation are fully set forth in the judgments of the two lower Courts and in the judgment of our learned brother, Smith, J.

Briefly they are as follows:—

On July 22, 1891, Sarwat Ali executed a mortgage (Ex. 5) in favour of one Hasan Jafar, the father of defendant No. 2, as benamidar for Fazal Husain, the father of the plaintiffs, in respect of three houses in Golaganj, Lucknow, which are now admitted to have been situate on plots Nos. 237, 236 and 237. On March 8, 1893, Sarwat Ali purchased house No. 261 from Amjadi Begam the widow of Himayat Ali. The mortgagee under Ex. 5 obtained a preliminary decree for sale on August 16, 1896. This decree was never made final. Sarwat Ali was a practising lawyer and had shifted to Hyderabad Deccan. He died there some time in 1905. On January 21, 1927, Sarwat Ali's heirs applied for redemption under the old s. 89 of the T. P. Act, now corresponding to O XXXIV, rr. 5 and 8 of the Civil P. O., against the heirs of Saiyid Hasan Jafar benamidar and the heirs of Saiyid Fazal Husain, who was the real mortgagee. The application was allowed by the lower Court but the decision was reversed on appeal by this Court on March 24, 1930, (vide Humayun Qadar v. Suraiya Begam, 7 O. W. N. 538) (1). The heirs of Fazal Husain had set up an oral sale of the mortgaged property in their favour after the preliminary decree for sale and had also pleaded adverse possession over the mortgaged property. The plea of oral sale was rejected, but the plea of adverse possession was upheld by this Court. The heirs of Sarwat Ali had obtained possession of the mortgaged property after the decision of the lower Court in their favour but this possession was restored to the plaintiffs after the decision of this Court. In the course of the restitution proceedings a dispute arose as regards the possession over plot No. 261 which the plaintiffs contended was covered by the mortgage deed, but they were resisted by defendant No. 1, and this led to a criminal litigation between the parties. Ultimately, however, the parties came to a provisional settlement under which plot No. 261 was, pending the adjudication of title by Civil Court, put in the possession of defendant No. 1, barring a small portion which went to the other party who in return gave defendant No. 1 a portion of plot No. 236. The plaintiffs instituted the present suit on May 23, 1933, for possession. The number of the plot was not given in the plaint, but it is no longer disputed between the parties that the suit related to plot No. 261 and that part of plot No. 236 which was given to defendant No. 1 under the provisional settlement. In case the plaintiffs succeeded in establishing their claim to plot No. 261, they would be entitled to get back that portion of plot No. 236 which they had surrendered to defendant No. 1 in return for a portion of plot No. 261. Defendant No. 2 is the son of Hasan Jafar, who was admittedly the benamidar for Fazal Husain in the mortgage executed in 1891. Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 are the sisters of the plaintiffs and have been impleaded as pro forma defendants. The only contesting party in the case therefore is the defendant No. 1. The plaintiffs asserted themselves in the plaint as owners of land along with the building, of which the boundaries were given at the foot of the plaint but which must now be deemed to refer to plot No. 261, since September 14, 1898. The plaint refers to the fact of Sarwat Ali's heirs having taken possession of the said plot in 1928 after their application for redemption was granted by the lower Court, and that the plaintiffs regained possession of the same on May 31, 1930. On July 7, 1930, defendant No. 1 is alleged to have taken unlawful possession of the said plot, and this, according to the plaint a legation, gave rise to the suit for possession against him along with damages to the extent of Rs. 50 for allowing a dalan, in the land in suit to fall into disrepair during the period of his possession.

Defendant No. 1 pleaded that plot No. 261 was not the subject-matter of dispute in the redemption case which he lost in the Chief Court, that he was the owner in possession of the said plot and that the plaintiffs had no title whatsoever to the same. In the oral pleadings before the Court Counsel for the plaintiffs stated on August 26, 1935, as follows :—

"I claim title to the property by virtue of the decree in foreclosure and redemption suit and also on the ground of adverse possession which has been established against defendant No. 1 by the judgment of the Hon'ble Judges of the Chief Court. Defendant No. 1's possession over the property was always permissive."

Counsel for the defendant No. 1 replied that the property in suit was not included either in the foreclosure decree of 1898 or in the redemption suit lost by defendant No. 1 against the plaintiffs in the Chief Court. The property in suit appertains to Ahata No. 261, which originally belonged to Himayat Ali, whose heirs sold it to Sarwat Ali, and after the death of Sarwat Ali his heirs who succeeded to the property transferred the same to defendant No. 1.

On November 25, 1933, the plaintiffs filed a replication in which they stated that they had become owners of the land in suit by adverse possession for a long time. On November 27, 1933, Counsel for the plaintiffs stated that the whole of the land was previously in the possession of the plaintiffs and his predecessors-in-interest since the year 1898 and that with the exception of a dalan shown in the Commissioner's map there was no other building in the land in suit since 1898.

The trial Court appointed a Commissioner, who prepared a plan of the land in suit. In an elaborate judgment the trial Court held that plots Nos. 232, 236 and 237 were the only plots in suit in the redemption case, and that plot No. 261 was not included in it. It held that the land in suit so far as it was enclosed by the letters "al bl Cl. Gl d8 el fl" in the map of the Commissioner was included in the redemption case, and the rest of the land in suit was not included. This finding was accepted by the learned Subordinate Judge and was not challenged in the appeal to this Court. Issue No. 2 related to adverse possession and ran as follows :—

"Has the land in suit been in adverse possession of the plaintiffs and their predecessors in interest since the year 1898, and have they perfected their title to it?"

The trial Court split up the question of adverse possession into two parts, one relating to deorhi shown in the Commissioner's map and the other relating to the ahata, which included the dalan towards the south. It held that the deorhi formed part of the house of Mir Himayat Ali which was sold to Sarwat Ali, but that it had been in the possession of the plaintiffs for a long time who had connected it with their own house and had settled a tenant therein. As regards the ahata which was coloured red in the Commissioner's map its view was that it had been a vacant land from the year 1909 or 1910. No building existed on the land, and there was a dalan which was in a dilapidated condition. The trial Court enumerated the following acts of possession which were alleged to have been exercised by the plaintiffs over the land in suit, namely, that the plaintiffs used to keep their cattle and hens, that singing parties used to be arranged in the dalan and the ahata occasionally and that plaintiff No. 2 used to fly kites in the ahata and that on occasions of ceremonies food used to be cooked in the ahata. Its view was that the aforesaid acts did not prove ouster of the owner, much less any adverse possession over the land in suit. It disbelieved the evidence of the plaintiffs who had stated that in the year 1915 the widow of Sarwat Ali wanted to take possession of the ahata but was prevented from doing so. Certain post-cards were relied upon on behalf of the defendant No. 1, Exs. A-11 to A-14, which were written by the plaintiff No. 2 and his brother-in-law Afzal Husain to Suraiya Begam in 1906-1908. The trial Court came to the conclusion that these letters show that the plaintiffs were on cordial terms with Suraiya Begam, and consequently there could be no question of any adverse possession till that date. The trial Court further disbelieved and story set up by the plaintiffs that they had been in possession of the entire ahata under an oral sale. This latter finding was confirmed in appeal and has not been challenged. The trial Court made an inspection of the spot with a view to better understand and appreciate the evidence recorded by him in the case. This the Court was entitled to do under O. XVIII, r. 18 of the Civil P. C. The trial Court further found that since the year 1905 no relation of Sarwat Ali or his brother resided in the ahata in suit, and the walls of the house situate therein had fallen down and disappeared, and the only structure left was a dalan in a dilapidated condition. The ahata was now surrounded by the houses of neighbours and the condition of the ahata was attributed to the course of nature. There was no defined boundary, and the boundary walls of the ahata on three sides belonged to different persons, who are the plaintiffs' neighbours. Three passages led to this ahata, one from the deorhi, the other from the east of the ahata connected with a lane and the third from a window of the plaintiffs' house. Neither of these passages was opened by the plaintiffs or their predecessors, but the position as it stood showed that they were controlled by the plaintiffs. Upon this finding the trial Court decreed the suit for possession of that portion of the land in suit which appertains to plot No. 236 and is enclosed by letters "a1 b1 C1 G1 d1 e1 f1" in the map prepared by the Commissioner and dismissed the rest of the claim.

The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal observed

"When the possession of the appellants over the deorhi is adverse and the Hon'ble Chief Court has recognised their title by adverse possession in respect of plot No. 236, when they have purchased the land of the ahata towards north (not in suit) from Mst. Bibi Jan in 1905 and 1906 as Exs. 8 and 9 show and when appellants have full control of the three passages leading to the land in suit which is in the shape of one ahata and is a vacant land enclosed by walls and it is also admitted that they have been in possession for a long time, I think there can be no other conclusion except that their possession over the land in question is also adverse".

The result was that the learned Subordinate Judge decreed the plaintiffs' suit for possession of the land coloured red in the map prepared by the Commissioner. He did not however decree the claim for damages.

This decision was affirmed in second appeal by our learned brother, Smith, J. The learned Judge observed in his judgment:—

"The sole question at issue between the parties has been whether the plaintiffs and their predecessor have been in adverse possession of this plot and of the buildings standing on it for over twelve years, or whether their possession was simply permissive".

At another place he says that "the whole question is, however, whether the nature of the possession of the plaintiffs and their predecessor was such as to constitute it adverse possession."

After referring to the evidence of the two plaintiffs and quoting passages from their evidence he came to the conclusion that the evidence given by Saiyid Humayun Qadar was neither consistent nor clear, and he was not prepared to hold on that evidence that Fazal Husain's possession of the plot No. 261 and the house standing thereon was in the first place permissive. The learned Judge summed up his conclusions in the following passage :—

"Taking into consideration the weakness of the appellant's case on this point, and also the fact that this case of permissive possession on the part of Fazal Husain was not the case originally set up by him, (the learned Subordinate Judge said in his judgment that even before him S. Iqbal Ali did not set this up as a definite case), I think that the case of the appellant based upon permissive possession must be held to have failed, and on the facts as a whole alleged on the side of the plaintiffs-respondents I am of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge was justified in finding the plaintiffs entitled to succeed on the basis of title by adverse possession".

After having heard arguments at considerable length in this case we regret we are unable to uphold the decision of our learned brother. At the outset it may be pointed out that the question of adverse possession is a mixed question of fact and law. Though the facts found by the Court of first appeal must be accepted as final in second appeal, the question whether the proved facts substantiate the plea of adverse possession is a matter of law which can be challenged in second appeal vide Lachmeswar Singh v. Manowar Bossain, (I L R 19 Cal. 253 P O) (2), Satgur Prasad v. Raj Kishore Lal (I L R 42 All. 152 P C) (3) and Mst. Rajana v. Musaheb Ali (I L R 11 Lucknow, 82) (4).

In the well known case of Radhamoni Debi v. The Collector of Khulna (L R 27 I A 136) (5), their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in a case resting firstly on title and secondly on adverse possession observed that it is necessary to remember that the onus is on the appellant (plaintiff), and that what she has to make out is possession adverse to the competitor.

This principle was further confirmed in Secretary of State for India in Council v. Chelikani Rama Rao, (L R 43 I A 192) (6), where it was held :—

"Nothing is better settled than that the onus of establishing property by reason of possession for a certain requisite period lies upon the person asserting possession. It is too late in the day to suggest the contrary of this proposition. If it were not correct, it would be open to the possessor for a year or a day to say I am here; be your title to the property ever so good, you cannot turn me out until you have demonstrated that the possession of myself and my predecessors was not long enough to fulfil all the legal conditions." Such a singular doctrine can be well-illustrated by the case of India, in which the right of the Crown to vast tracts of territory, including not only islands arising from the sea, but great spaces of jungle lands, necessarily not under the close supervision of Govt. Officers, would disappear because there would be no evidence available to establish the state of possession for sixty years past. It would be contrary to all legal principles thus to permit the squatter to put the owner of the fundamental right to a negative proof upon the point of possession."

Having regard to the principle enunciated above regarding the onus in such cases, we are of opinion that the issue framed by the trial Court was perfectly correct, and it was the duty of the plaintiffs to establish affirmatively that they had acquired statutory title to the property by reason of adverse possession for the requisite period. No case of permissive possession was admittedly set up by defendant No. 1 in the pleading, and it seems to us that the permissive character of possession never arose as an independent issue calling for a decision in the case. In these circumstances it was wholly wrong to approach the question of adverse possession by determining whether the defendant No. 1 had proved a case of permissive possession or not and hold adverse possession upon the weakness of that case. Defendant No. 1 never set up the case that the plaintiffs had been in possession of the land in dispute by leave or licence of his predecessor-in-title. The question seems to have agitated the minds of the Courts upon the statement in cross examination made by the plaintiff No. 1 Saiyid Humayun Qadar, which was as follows :—

"While going back to Hyderabad in 1898, Sarwat Ali sent for my father. My father was busy, so he sent his clerk Sardar Husain to Sarwat Ali. Sarwat Ali told Sardar Husain that he was going to Hyderabad, Fazal Husain should come and take possession of the house. When Sardar Husain intimated this to Fazal Husain, the latter replied that the houses of Sarwat Ali were of little value and they may be looked after."

This statement was relied upon by the defendant as indicating permissive possession, but the learned Subordinate Judge did not uphold this contention. We are of opinion that this statement may well have been relied upon as destructive of the case of adverse possession set up by the plaintiffs, but it by no means follows that the defendant No. 1 was setting up a definite and substantive case of permissive possession which was legally not permissible through the evidence of a plaintiff in the witness box. We do not think it necessary to rest our decision upon the meaning to be attached to the above statement of the plaintiff in order to hold that the possession of the plaintiff was of a permissive character. Having regard to the acts of possession found by the two lower Courts on the land in suit, we are of opinion that these occasional acts in the circumstances of the present case are acts of a temporary and flimsy character which do not destroy the title of the defendant or his predecessor-in-interest. The title of the defendant or his predecessor-in-interest must be deemed to carry with it the legal possession and must be deemed to subsist, unless and until there is an open and hostile assertion of title accompanied by exclusive possession of an effective nature to the knowledge of the actual owner. According to the classical definition of "adverse possession" by Lord Robertson in Radhamoni Debi v. The Collector of Khulna (L R 27 I A 136), (5), constitute a plaintiff's title by adverse possession, the possession required to be proved must be adequate in continuity, in publicity, and in extent, and is displaced by evidence of partial possession by the defendant, and the onus of establishing these essential elements is upon the adverse possessor. We are of opinion that the plaintiffs have failed to satisfy the test essential to the proof of adverse possession. In determining the question whether possession is hostile and notorious so as to charge the real owner with notice of the adverse claim the nature, the situation and the user of the property must be considered. "It is impossible", says Lord Halsbury in Marshall v. Taylor, (1895, 1 Ch. 641 at 645), (7).

"to speak with exact precision about the degree of possession or dispossession that will do unless you have regard as Lord Justice Cotton said in Leigh v. Jack (1879, 5 Exch. D 264) (8) to the nature of the property."

Sarwat Ali never visited Lucknow since 1898, and Suraiya Begam, one of his daughters, stayed with him in Hyderabad. Neither Munni Begam, the mother of defendant No. 1, nor Altaf Begam, who is married in Hardoi District, ever lived in Lucknow. Defendant No. 1 himself did not come to Lucknow till the year 1927. The house which Sarwat Ali acquired in 1893 evidently fell in ruins before 1898 and no permanent structure worth the name has been in existence on the spot at any rate since the year 1898, and the land in suit has presented the appearance of a mere ahata with a dalan bounded on all sides by the houses of neighbours. Such acts of possession as tethering of cattle, using the land as play ground, cooking food on the occasions of ceremonies and even planting trees could not possibly have aroused the notice of the real owners—who are no other than members of the plaintiffs' own family—even if they had been living in Lucknow, much less would they constitute adverse possession against Sarwat Ali and his family, who have been away from the land in dispute since 1898. Exhibits A-11 to A-14 are post-cards written in the year 1906 to 1908. Exhibit A-11 was written by Afzal Husain, brother-in-law of the plaintiffs, to Suraiya Begam, while Exs. A-12 to A-14 were written by the plaintiff No 2 to Suraiya Begam. We agree with our learned brother that these post-cards do not show that the plaintiffs acknowledged the claims of Sarwat Ali's heirs to the property in dispute, but at the same time we are of opinion that they do show that cordial relations existed between the heirs of Sarwat Ali and the plaintiffs. Plaintiff No. 1 admits in his evidence that he was on good terms with Mst. Suraiya Begam when Exs. A-11 to A-14 were written by him to her. There is no evidence on the record to show that at any time before the application for redemption was filed in 1927 the relations of the parties became hostile. We do not think it will serve any useful purpose to refer to decide cases upon the point, as in our opinion the principles governing the acquisition of prescriptive title have been laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council, and the only question that arises for consideration before us is whether in view of these principles the plaintiffs have succeeded in discharging the heavy onus which lay upon them to prove the essential elements of adverse possession. We may, however, refer to two cases, Framji Cursetti v. Goculdas Madhewji (I. L. R. 16 Bom 338) (9) and Chokkalinga Naicken v. Muthusami Naicken (I. L. R. 21 Madras 53) (10), which have frequently been referred to in subsequent decisions of the various High Courts in India.

small piece of land being of no present use to its owner and being convenient in many ways to his neighbour, the latter made use of it, in various ways, without objection for more than 12 years. A privy and sheds for cows and goats, fowls, etc. and a hut for a ghariwallah—all, however, structures of a flimsy and purely temporary character—were said to have been constructed and maintained for many years on the said piece of land. Such user, it was contended, amounted to adverse possession.

It was held that such user as this was insufficient to give a title to the land by adverse possession. User of this sort, under similar circumstances, is common in this country and excites no particular attention. It is neither intended to denote, or understood as denoting—on the one side or the other—a claim to the ownership of the land, and, where this, and no more, is the case it would be wrong to hold that a claim by adverse possession has been made out.

I. L. R. 21 Madras 53 (10). In this case the defendant had used, as a backyard a small piece of land situated between his house and that of the plaintiff, who was his brother, for a period of more than twelve years. In 1894 the defendant began to build on it, whereupon the plaintiff protested and sued for possession. It was held that the use of the land for the purpose of a backyard would not be sufficient to constitute adverse possession.

Learned Counsel on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents has cited (Suna Pana Chena Voona) Sevugan Chetty v. Koovanna Kana Nana Kana Kannappa Chetty (A. I. R. 1931 Madras 282) (11), *U. A. I. R. 1931 Madras 282 (11). The plaintiff not only relied upon the presumption of possession arising from title over waste land in his favour but actually put forward a case of effective possession and adduced evidence in support of it. It was held that he had not succeeded in proving possession within limitation and he was not entitled to fall back upon the presumption of possession in face of the case that he had put forward.

U Maung Gyi v. Maung On Bwin (A. I. R. 1929 Rangoon 153) (12). In this case the plaintiff definitely put forward a case that he himself had given possession to the defendant over the land in suit. This case failed on the other hand it was proved that the defendant had been in possession for the last 15 or 20 years. It was held that it was the duty of the plaintiff to prove his possession within limitation and therefore the suit fell within Art. 142 of the Indian Lim. Act.

Subramania Pillai v. The Secretary of State for India (I. L. R. 34 Madras 353) (13). In this case it was held that acts done on parts of a tract of land will only be evidence of possession of the whole where the said tract of land possesses a defined boundry. As we have already held that is not the case here.

Nizam Din v. Ali Mohammad (A. I. R. 1927 Lahore 753) (14). It was held that though ordinarily speaking the doctrine of constructive possession cannot be used in favour of the trespasser, nevertheless, in a case where the plot in dispute forms part of a larger plot with defined boundaries over which larger plot there have been physical acts of ownership in portions and where there has been an assertion of title over the whole plot throughout, such circumstances are relevant evidence as to the possession of the waste land. In this case the plot had lain waste, and the predecessors of the plaintiffs purported to mortgage the whole of the plots and purported to sell portions of the whole plot, and therefore it could fairly be held that they had an animus possidendi even over the plots now in dispute and consequently they had acquired title by adverse possession over the plots now in dispute.

Nageshwar Bux Roy v. Bengal Coal Company, Limited (L. R. 58 I. A., 29) (15). In this case a coal company, who held a mukarrari lease of a village and believed that they were entitled to the subjacent minerals, openly carried on for twelve years mining operations in various parts of the village by working pits and making trial bore-holes; it was not clear whether any one pit had been worked continually for twelve years. The zamindar sued the coal company claiming the minerals under the village. It was held that the company had been in adverse possession of the minerals under the whole village for more than 12 years and the right of the zamindar was, therefore, barred. It was further observed that as a general rule where title is founded on adverse possession the title will be limited to that area of which actual possession had been enjoyed. But the extent of possession enjoyed may be an inference of fact, and in applying the rule to the case of a mineral field regard is to be had to the nature of the subject and the possession to which it is susceptible.

Having given our best consideration to the facts and circumstances of the present case, we are satisfied that the plaintiffs have failed to establish the plea of adverse possession set up by them over plot No. 261 except with regard to the deorhi over which the trial Court upheld the adverse possession of the plaintiffs.

We, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decree passed by our learned brother unholding the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decree of the trial Court. As regards costs, we maintain the order passed by the trial Court but we allow costs to the defendant-appellant in all the other Courts on the ground that he has substantially succeeded.

Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 171—Decree in favour of company—Appeal by judgment-debtor—Company wound up—Appeal proceeded with—Judgment-debtor, if proceeding with legal proceeding against company—Leave of Court, if necessary.

Where a decree has been passed in favour of a company and the judgment-debtor has appealed from the decree and goes on with his appeal at the date of the winding up of the company, he should be regarded as proceeding with legal proceedings against the company and this he cannot do without the leave of the Court. Humber & Co. v. John Griffiths Cycle Co. (3), explained, 47 Ind. Cas. 392 (2), disapproved. 36 Ind. Cas. 618 (1), approved.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. J. Swarup, for the Respondent.

Order.—This is a little application in the matter of the Benares Bank Ltd., (in liquidation). It is a very usual form of application, under s. 171, Companies Act. The facts, so far as they are material, are that in August 1939 the company obtained a decree—it does not matter what kind of a decree—against the applicant. On December 13, 1939 the applicant filed an appeal to this Court against that decree, making the company, of course, a respondent. On March 1, 1940 the company was ordered to be wound up by the Court and an official liquidator was appointed. The present application is an application by the appellant to the appeal for the leave of the Court to proceed with his appeal. That involves a consideration of s. 171, Companies Act. Section 171 of the Act is in these terms :

"When a winding up order has been made or a provisional liquidator has been appointed no suit or other legal proceeding shall be proceeded with or commenced against the company except by leave of the Court, and subject to such terms as the Court may impose."

"I confess that I should myself have little doubt, upon the ordinary use of language, as to the meaning of this section, had it not been for a decision of a Full Bench Court at Lahore to which my attention had been drawn and to which I shall refer more particularly in a moment. It would have appeared to me to be beyond controversy that an appeal from a decree was a "legal proceeding." And I should have thought that it was equally plain that it was in this case a legal proceeding "against the company." Moreover, when an appellant goes on with his appeal at the date of the winding up order, I think he must be said to be "proceeding" with it. Upon the language of the section, therefore, I should have thought that it was plain that the prosecution of an appeal to which the company was a respondent and which was pending at the date of the winding up order was a proceeding for the prosecution of which the leave of the winding up Court was necessary under the section. That appears to have been the view which was taken in a case in 1916 in the Chief Court in Milawa Ram v. People's Bank of India. (1), at p. 278. That case has reference to a revision proceedings, but there is, I think, no distinction to be drawn between a revision proceeding and an appeal for the present purpose. The learned Judges in that case say :

"In this case the suit was by the company : the revision however is against the company and we hold that it was a proceeding against the company within the meaning of the action."

It is a proceeding intended to wrest from the company the decree obtained by it in the Courts below, a decree which but for the present revision would establish the company's title in the property in dispute. The present revision is a proceeding against the company to defeat that title."

Two years later, however, the matter was reconsidered by a Full Bench of the Punjab Chief Court Kisan Singh v. Industrial Bank of India (2), which included the Hon'ble Shadi Lal J., as he then was. This Bench, the judgment of which is of course, entitled to the greatest respect, took the view that the earlier case to which I have already referred was wrongly decided, although they make a concession to it by admitting that there is prima facie considerable force in the view taken by it. The Full Bench were, however, greatly influenced by a decision in the House of Lords in England in Humber & Co. v John Griffiths Cycle Co. (3), and, founding themselves, as I think, upon that case, they came to the conclusion that no leave of the winding up Court was necessary for the prosecution of an appeal or a revision pending at the date of the winding up order and arising out of a suit in which the plaintiff was the company. With the greatest respect, and I need hardly say only with great diffidence, I think that the learned Judges who composed that Full Bench have misunderstood the case in the House of Lords upon which they relied. To understand it, it is necessary, I think, to look closely at its facts. A company, John Griffiths Cycle Co., had in the first place brought an action against the defendant prior to the winding up in which they (the company) had been unsuccessful. The company then appealed to the Court of Appeal and it was during the pendency of that appeal that the winding up order against the company was passed. In that appeal the defendant to the suit, who was the respondent to the appeal, appealed to the House of Lords and it was in respect of the appeal to the House of Lords that the question arose whether the leave of the winding up Court was necessary. Now, in my view, the thing to observe about this case is that at the date of the winding up order the "proceeding" which was then on foot was a proceeding, not against, but by the company and was one for the further prosecution of which no leave of the company Court, whatever was required. The proceeding on foot at the date of the winding up order was the appeal by the company and it was open to the company to go on with that appeal without the leave of the Court. With that introduction it is possible to see what it was that Lord Davey in his speech actually said. He said this :

"... "The respondents, that is to say the company, "now" object that the present appellant cannot proceed with their appeal without the leave of the Court in Ireland. I am of opinion that the objection cannot be maintained. It was the respondents who themselves proceeded with the action after the winding up order, by prosecuting their appeal in the Court of Appeal, and when once an action by the company itself has been proceeded with, there is necessity for the defendants in the action to obtain leave for any defensive proceeding on their part. ... "

The italics are, of course, my own, but, in my view, the words they cover afford the clue to what it was that the House of Lords really said in this case. His Lordship, as it seems to me, said no more than that when you find that at the date of the winding up order there is a proceeding already on foot, which proceeding requires no leave of the Court to prosecute it, then that proceeding may go on to its logical conclusion without leave of the Court. In other words, he said that, inasmuch as the appeal which was pending at the date of the winding up order in that case was an appeal by the company itself and, as such, was one which needed no leave to prosecute it, it was a proceeding which might go on to its ultimate conclusion—including an appeal to the House of Lord—notwithstanding s. 87, Companies Act of 1862, which was the Act then in force. Now reverting to the Full Bench case of the Punjab Chief Court it appears to me with great respect that the learned Judges have overlooked that the decision in Kishan Singh v. Industrial Bank of India (2), was limited in the way I have pointed out. It is not, I think, an authority which decides, in general terms, that wherever you find an appeal from a suit in which the company itself was the plaintiffs, that appeal may be either proceeded with or commenced without the leave of the Court. In the case before me, at the date of the winding up order, a proceeding was pending. But, unlike Kishan Singh v. Industrial Bank of India (2), it was a proceeding by the defendant against the company and it was, therefore, a proceeding which, according to what I conceive to be the plain meaning of the language used in s. 171, Companies Act, could not go on without the leave of the Court. For these reasons, in my view, the present case is one in which the leave of the winding up Court is necessary to the prosecution of the appeal and I give that leave accordingly.

s. Order accordingly.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

Applications in Suit No. 36 of 1939

April 22, 1940

L. RT. WILLIAMS, J.

In re EAST BENGAL SUGAR MILLS

(IN LIQUIDATION)

Company—Articles of association—Persons consenting to become share-holders on condition of their suggestions being included in memorandum and articles—Despite non-fulfilment of conditions, usual application for shares and for becoming share-holders signed—Proper time for objecting to become share-holder—Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 156—New liability under, when arises—Previous calls made and becoming time-barred—Effect of.

Where persons consented to become share-holders on condition that their suggestions were included in the memorandum and articles of association, but subsequently it was found that the memorandum and articles of association were different to the draft memorandum and articles of association which had been shown to them, and did not embody their suggestions and despite this, they signed the usual application for shares and became share-holders:

Held, that it was not open to them subsequently to object to their being share-holders on the ground of the condition as to alteration of the memorandum and articles of association, not having been fulfilled. The proper time to object was at the time of incorporation of the company.

New liability to contribute under s. 156, Companies Act arises for the first time upon the winding up and is unaffected by the fact that previous calls have been made by the Company and have become barred by limitation. In re Whitehouse & Co. (1), relied on, 142 Ind. Cas. 7(3), distinguished.

Mr. J. C. Moitra, for the Official Liquidator.

Mr. S. K. Basu, for two Contributories, Applicants.

Order.—These are two applications on behalf of Kazi Abdul Rashid Khan Bahadur and Barada Kanta Ganguli Bahadur respectively who have been included in the list of contributories made by the Official Liquidator in the matter of the East Bengal Sugar Mills Ltd., (in liquidation). They are numbered 27 and 28 in that list. They object to their inclusion in the list on somewhat similar grounds, namely the representations were made to them by Ramanath Das, who was the promoter of this company, and that they were induced by those representations to become share-holders, the allegation being that prior to the incorporation of the company Ramanath Das showed each of them a draft memorandum and articles of association with regard to which they made various suggestions for amendment. They consented to become share-holders on condition that these suggestions were included in the memorandum and articles of association, but subsequently found that the memorandum and articles of association eventually filed were different to the draft memorandum and articles of association which had been shown to them, and did not embody their suggestions. The answer to all this is that whatever happened, happened prior to the incorporation of the company. At the time of incorporation it was the duty of these two gentlemen to satisfy themselves that the memorandum and articles of association were in accordance with their views. There was the time to object to become share-holders. Instead of that, both of them signed the usual application for shares which were allotted to them and both of them became share-holders of this company. Kazi Abdul Rashid Khan Bahadur, in a letter written by his Pleader on his behalf dated July 16, 1935, set up entirely different objections to the demand then made upon him for payment of Rs. 1,841-14-11. In this he said that he had never agreed to purchase 200 shares in the company. That Ramanath Das had asked him to be a signatory to the memorandum and articles of association saying that a Muhammadan gentleman's name should be on it. That Ramanath Das gave him a distinct assurance that he would not have to purchase any share or shares or pay any money out of his own pocket and on account of his importunities he signed the memorandum and articles telling Ramanath he would on no account purchase more than one share. These allegations have been answered by Ramanath Das in two affidavits in which he gives a complete denial to each and all of the allegations made by Kazi Abdul Rashid (Khan Bahadur) and Rai Barada Kanta Ganguly. Bahadur and I accept his version of what happened.

Earned Counsel on behalf of these two shareholders, in addition to relying upon the facts stated in the affidavits, has raised a point of law, namely that a number of calls had been made from time to time by the company prior to the winding up and had not been paid by either of these shareholders and had become barred by limitation. Therefore, he argued that it would not be proper to put their names upon the list of contributories because they were no longer liable to subscribe anything to the assets of the company in respect of calls or otherwise. The answer to this is that s. 156, Companies Act, creates a new liability which provides that in the event of a company being wound up, every member shall be liable to contribute to the assets of the company to an amount sufficient for payment of its debts and liabilities and the costs, charges and expenses of the winding up, etc., with the qualification inrer alia that in the case of a company limited by shares no contribution shall be required from any member exceeding the amount unpaid on his shares in respect of which he is liable as a member. This new liability arises for the first time upon the winding up and in my opinion unaffected by the fact that previous calls have been made by the company and have become barred by limitation. That this is the correct interpretation of the section is confirmed by the judgment of Jessel, M. R. in In re Whitehouse & Co. (1), in which he said at p. 599 as follows:

"First of all, it must be remembered that the 38th section of the Act, which directs what is to be paid in the case of a winding up by the shareholders of a limited company, creates new rights, and rights which did not exist before the passing of the Companies Act, 1862, and rights which do not exist till there is a winding up. That point was decided by the House of Lords in Webb v. Whiffen (2), that it was in fact a new right or rather a new liability as regards the shareholders; and that section alone, for this purpose, regulates their liability."

The section to which he referred is as follows:

"In the event of a company formed under this Act being wound up, every present and past member of such company shall be liable to contribute to the assets of the company to an amount sufficient, for payment of the debts and liabilities of the company" the terms for all practical purposes being (1) (1878) 9 Ch. D 595 (599); 47 L J Ch. 801; 39 L T 415; 27 W R 181.

the same as in s. 156, Companies Act. The learned Master of the Rolls went on to say as follows:

"That is a new liability he is to contribute; it is a new contribution. It is a mistake to call that a debt due to the company. It is no such thing. It is not as has been supposed in any shape or way a debt due to the company, but it is a liability to contribute to the assets of the company; and when we look further into the Act, it will be seen that it, is a liability to contribution to be enforced by the liquidator. It is quite true that a call made before the winding up is a debt due to the company, but that does not affect this new liability to contribution. But there are certain limits to the liability. This being a limited company the only limit which it is necessary to refer to is that stated in the 4th subsection of the 38th section. 'In the case of a company limited by shares, no contribution shall be required from any member exceeding the amount unpaid on the shares in respect of which he is liable as a present or past member.' Now, first of all as regards the calls made in the winding up they being calls for something unpaid on the shares that is a contribution due by the member under the Act and is not a debt due to the company. The contribution also under this section applies to the unpaid calls made before the winding up, because, though that is a debt due to the company it is not the less an amount unpaid on the shares in respect of which he is liable and therefore he must be liable to contribute all that is unpaid on his shares. As I said before, it is as much unpaid if he had not paid the calls made before the winding up, as it is in respect of the amount unpaid on the shares in respect of which no call has been made before the winding up. It seems to me that the contributories' liability created by the 38th section being only limited to the amount unpaid, it is immaterial for the purpose of this section, whether the call was made before or after the winding up, provided the amount is unpaid."

The case in Hansraj Gupta v. Dehra Dun and Mussorie Electric Tramways Co. Ltd. (3), is not in any way inconsistent with the judgment to which I have just referred. Their Lordships of the Privy Council were therein dealing with a case under s. 156 of the Act, and Lord Russell of Killowen on p. 300* specifically distinguished and excluded from his judgment questions arising out of the statutory liability created under s. 156. The result is that these objections must be disallowed and the names of these two shareholders must be included in the list of contributories. The liquidator is entitled to costs against both the shareholders, the taxing officer will bear in mind that there has been only one hearing with regard to both the applications.

OUDH CHIEF COURT

First Civil Appeal No. 55 of 1937

February 26, 1941

YORKE AND AGARWAL, JJ.

Pt. MOHAN LAL AND ANOTHER—

PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

Pt. RAM DAYAL AND OTHERS—

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS

Hindu Law—Ancestral property—Property inherited from maternal grandmother, if ancestral—Joint family—Presumption as to—Burden of proof—There can be joint family without joint family property—Brothers having separate earnings but living house for family—House, whether joint family property—Separation—Proof of—Two brothers keeping their earnings separately, if proof of separation—Brothers in service living separately—Effect—Res judicata—Hindu Law—Joint family—Previous decision that family was not joint at particular time, whether res judicata in subsequent suit where question is whether family was joint before such time.

Property inherited by two Hindu brothers from their maternal grandmother is not ancestral property and the brothers get it as tenants-in-common and not as joint tenants.

There can be a joint family without any joint family property and there is a presumption of joint family though there may not be a presumption of joint family property without a nucleus. The burden of proof is on those who allege that the joint family terminated, to establish it. 112 Ind. Cas. 387 (4) and 154 Ind. Cas. 634 (5), referred to [p. 63, col. 1.]

Where two brothers of a joint Hindu family who were in service and had separate earnings built a house for the family, both thinking it to be a family house without regard to the amount contributed by each, the house is joint family property and the brothers are not sharers in it according to their contribution.

The members of a joint family can have separate property and the fact that two brothers used to keep their earnings separately is not enough to show that they had separated. [p. 65, col. 1.]

Where two brothers are in service and hence they have to be at the places where they are posted, their living separately affords very little evidence of separation. [p. 65, col. 2.]

The previous decision that a Hindu family was not joint at a particular time, cannot operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit in which the question is as to whether the family was joint or not before such time.

F. C. A. against the order of the Civil Judge of Kheri, dated January 15, 1937.

Mr. L. S. Misra, for the Appellants.

Mr. H. S. Gupta, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs appellants for partition of a house in Lakhimpur. They claimed that they and their father had contributed Rs. 6,780-13-0 and the defendants' father Rs. 2,493 in its construction and the shares in the house were in proportion to the amounts contributed by them.

The lower Court held that the plaintiffs' share was one-half only.

The following genealogical table shows the relationship of the parties:

Beche Lal was a resident of village Kutahar in the Shabjehanpur district. He married Mst. Munni, daughter of Kanhai and Mst. Maina, in Lakhimpur and went to live there. One Makhan had made a gift of kachcha house in Lakhimpur to his sister Mst. Maina. Beche Lal lived in that house and died about the year 1880 leaving two sons, Badri Narain who was then in service in Bhinga estate, and Chhabnath who was at that time six years old. These two brothers inherited the kachcha house of Mst. Maina their maternal grandmother. Chhabnath entered service in 1895 in the education department and went to Ghazipur. Badri Narain was also in Govt. service. Chhabnath died on October 21, 1913, and Badri Narain in July 1914. Chhabnath's son Shambhu Dayal from his first wife had predeceased him in 1911. The plaintiffs' case is that Badri Narain and Chhabnath were separate and not members of a joint Hindu family after 1895 when Chhabnath entered service, that there was no ancestral property and each brother was separate owner of his earnings, that in 1903, the major portion of the house in question was built on the site of the old kachcha house and some other land taken from the Mahewa estate, that Badri Narain spent Rs. 3,415 and Chhabnath Rs. 2,493 on the construction and that further constructions were made in 1912 and 1913 by the plaintiffs at a cost of Rs. 3,365 13-0. The plaintiffs claim that as their father and the defendants' father were separate each was owner in proportion to the amount contributed by him over the construction of the house.

The defendants' case is that Badri Narain and Ohhabnath were both members of a joint Hindu family and the house was built in 1908 with joint capital and even if Badri Narain spent more than half the money, it was never his intention that the house be not considered to be joint family property, that after the death of Ohhabnath, Badri Narain realized Rs. 4,000, the insurance money and provident fund of Ohhabnath and so even if he had spent more than half over the house he had been paid off and that if the plaintiffs' father had spent more money, the defendants' father and their deceased brother Shambhu Dayal spent more time over the supervision and, on that ground, also the plaintiffs were not entitled to more than a half-share. The plaintiffs' allegation that the constructions in 1912 and 1913 were made by them with their own money was not admitted by the defendants and it was said that the defendants' father had also contributed towards those constructions.

The learned Civil Judge framed six issues—

1. Were Badri Narain and Ohhabnath members of a separated Hindu family?
2. If it be found that the family was joint, then was it the intention of the parties that the property in suit should belong to the members in proportion to their contributions?
3. If it be found that the family was separate then are the plaintiffs entitled to a share in the house according to their contributions?
4. What is the amount of contribution made by the plaintiffs' father and the plaintiffs in the house in suit?
5. Can the plaintiffs not claim a share of the house equal to their contributions for reasons alleged?
6. To what relief are the plaintiffs entitled?

He held that Badri Narain and Ohhabnath were members of a joint Hindu family. He decided Issues Nos. 2 and 3 in favour of the defendants and held that it was not proved that excepting the amount of Rs. 3,415 spent by Badri Narain, anything more was spent on the house by Murlidhar himself. These findings are challenged in appeal.

The first point which arises for our decision is whether Badri Narain and Ohhabnath were members of a joint Hindu family when the house in question was built, that is from 1908 to 1913. The learned Counsel for the appellants took pains to show that there was no ancestral property and Beche Lal was in straitened circumstances when he died but it does appear from Exs. A-51 and A-52 the Wajib-ul-arz of village Naurangabad and extract from the khasra kishtwar of that village respectively that Beche Lal and one Lala Kurmi got three kathal trees and a grove under an order dated July 20, 1869. It was also contended on behalf of the respondents that the house received by Badri Narain and Ohhabnath from Mst. Maina their maternal grandmother was ancestral property. Reliance was placed on Venkayamma Garu v. Venkataramanayamma Bahadur Garu, (I. L. R. 25 Mad., 678) (1) for the proposition that two brothers who inherited property from their maternal grandfather took it as joint tenants with benefit of survivorship and not as tenants-in-common. That case was distinguished by the Privy Council in Muhammad Husain v. Bibu Kishva Nandan Sahai, (A. I. R. 1937 P. O., 233) (2), and it was held that the estate which is inherited by a father from his maternal grandfather cannot be held to be ancestral property in which his son has an interest jointly with him. The above is discussed in Mulla's Hindu Law, 9th edn. at pp. 240 and 241—

"It is submitted that the decision in the earlier case must be confined to its own facts, and it was not necessary thereto to decide, nor was any opinion expressed on the precise question whether the property which a Hindu inherits from his maternal grandfather is ancestral property in the technical sense. Should this question arise hereafter, it will have to be answered in accordance with the decision in the later case."

In this case the property was inherited from a maternal grandmother and not from a maternal grandfather. Mulla at p. 241 has observed—

"Excluding the doubtful case of property inherited from a maternal grandfather, it may be said that the only property that can be called ancestral property is property inherited by a person from his father, father's father or father's father's father."

We are of opinion that the old kachcha house inherited by the two brothers from Mst. Maina was not ancestral property and the two brothers got it as tenants-in-common and not as joint tenants. We therefore hold that the only immovable property which can be called ancestral in the possession of the two brothers was that obtained under the order dated July 20, 1869, that is a share in three kathal trees and a grove. The point whether the two brothers had any joint property or not is not of any importance because it is not necessary for a joint family to have joint family property also. Mulla's Hindu Law s. 212 cl. 2 runs as follows—

"The joint undivided family is the normal condition of Hindu society. An undivided family is ordinarily joint not only in estate but also in food and worship. The existence of joint estate is not an essential requisite to constitute a joint family and a family which does not own any property may nevertheless be joint."

It was held in Janakiram Chettu v. Nagamony Mudaliar, (I. L. R. 49 Mad., 98) (3) that under the Hindu Law, possession of joint family property is not a necessary requisite for the constitution of a joint family.

Dr. Gour in his Hindu Code, 3rd Edn. Art. 1174 p 590 says—

"The strength of the family lies in the joint family property. Without such property a joint family is conceivable but then this jointness would have no meaning, since such families may possess certain personal rights in common but they are comparatively of little account. The importance of a joint family therefore lies in the fact that it possesses all its property in common. As such, members have mutual rights and obligations with reference to it. But while Hindu Law postulates and presumes the existence of joint family, it does not either postulate or presume the existence of joint family property."

We are of opinion that there can be a joint family without any joint family property and there is a presumption of joint family though there may not be a presumption of joint family property without a nucleus. The burden of proof was on the plaintiffs to establish that the joint family of Badri Narain and Ohhabnath terminated in 1895 when Ohhabnath entered service. The plaintiffs' Counsel stated in the trial Court that he alleged separation on the ground that there was no ancestral property in the family and Badri Narain had his own earnings and he simply brought up Ohhabnath and got him educated and employed and after employment Ohhabnath remained separate from Badri Narain with his wife and children and never contributed anything towards the funds of Badri Narain.

(3) 49 M 98; 93 Ind. Cas. 662; A I R 1926 Mad. 273; 22 L W 801; 50 M L J 413.

It was admitted that there was no occasion for partition and so no partition was ever effected. There was admittedly no partition even of the small joint property, the kathal trees and the grove, which the two brothers had. The plaintiffs have relied on some oral and documentary evidence to prove that the two brothers were separate. Murlidhar plaintiff stated that there was partition of the family movable property between Badri Narain and Ohhabnath. He further stated that his father handed over all the property belonging to his uncle Ohhabnath and aunt at the time of the latter's departure to Ghazipur where he was posted in the year 1895 and later on when they came back to Lakshmipur they kept their belongings with them and that was the only partition which was effected between his father and uncle. He admitted that there was never any division between his father and uncle in the way that the property was divided half and half between them and that his father gave away the ornaments which he had given to his aunt at the time of her marriage and also the utensils which his uncle had got in his first marriage at Kheri, when he left for Ghazipur. If Ohhabnath took away the ornaments of his wife and the utensils which he had got in his first marriage when he left for service it cannot be said that he became separate from his elder brother. He took away his own property and even if he had taken some joint family property when he went to take up service in another district, it cannot be said that he had separated. The plaintiff Murlidhar also stated that if two members of a family live at different places and earn their own independent livelihood and if they do not mix their incomes, they form a separate family in spite of the fact that before they began to earn, they lived together and formed a joint family and it was only in this sense that he said that his father and the latter's brother were separate. This statement of the plaintiff does not show that the two brothers had separated.

One Mst. Lachhmin was also examined on behalf of the plaintiffs. She admitted in cross-examination that when the house was built, there was common mess of those persons residing in the house at the time and that during the lifetime of Pandit Badri Narain and Pandit Ohhabnath, one "Baina" used to be sent to their house and she used to treat them as one family. She also admitted that she joined the marriages of two sons and one daughter of Badri Narain and the marriage ceremonies of all the sons of Ohhabnath and all these ceremonies were performed by the family as one and undivided and further that she never saw anything in the lifetime of Badri Narain and Ohhabnath which would go to show that they were living separately. She stated that the mess of all the inmates of the house was common till about eight years after the death of Ohhabnath and till then she and other members of the biradri treated the family as one. The statement of this lady shows that the family was joint rather than separate.

Another lady Ganga Dei examined on behalf of the plaintiffs admitted that so long as Badri Narain was alive, she treated the family as one with common business, that Badri Narain was considered to be the karta and mukhia during his lifetime, that there was common mess and ceremonies were performed jointly and that the family was joint in mess for about ten years after the death of Ohhabnath. She admitted that she used to understand the family as one and it was treated in like manner by relations and biradri as long as the mess was joint.

Nand Kishore another witness produced by the plaintiffs states that as long as Ohhabnath was a minor, he was joint with Badri Narain but when he attained majority he became separate. In cross-examination, he stated that one reason for his saying that Badri Narain and Ohhabnath were separate was that they lived in separate places during service.

'Badri, plaintiffs' witness admitted that he always understood Badri Narain and Ohhabnath and their children as constituting a joint family.

Mohanlal plaintiff has stated that it was a fact that as long as Pandit Ohhabnath and Pandit Badri Narain lived in Lakhimpur before joining service they formed a joint Hindu family and the only reason for his saying that his father and uncle became separate was that they went to different places after taking up service. The other reason which he gives for thinking of Ohhabnath as being separate is that Badri Narain had given away the things which he had got in his marriage but he admits that he is not positive that Badri Narain's idea was to separate from Ohhabnath.

This evidence utterly fails to prove that the two brothers were separate.

It is admitted that Ohhabnath's son

Ram Dayal's janeo ceremony was performed on May 5, 1912 and invitations were issued in the names of Badri Narain Ohhabnath and Marlidhar, plaintiff. It is argued on behalf of the plaintiffs that the invitations were issued in the names of Badri Narain and his son because Badri Narain was the elder brother but Marlidhar himself stated that he could not deny that they were issued in the name of all the three persons because they were members of a joint Hindu family.

There was a joint mortgage-deed dated August 2, 1909 in the name of Badri Narain and Ohhabnath. A suit was brought by the present plaintiffs on foot of this deed on July 25, 1918 and a decree was obtained on September 6, 1918. Some property was sold in execution of the decree and was purchased by the plaintiffs. The defendants then brought a suit in 1926 for possession of half of the property. As issue was framed in that case whether Ohhabnath and Badri Nath were members of a joint Hindu family. This issue was decided in the negative but the suit was decreed as it was admitted that Ohhabnath had advanced half of the money. Reliance is placed on that finding but admittedly it does not operate as res judicata. The present defendants got half of the property on condition of their paying costs of the suit and something spent by the present plaintiffs over the preservation of the grove. The point whether Badri Narain and Ohhabnath were joint or separate in 1909 had lost much of its importance by reason of the admission of one of the defendants in that case that Ohhabnath had a half share in the mortgage money. The only material point was whether the family was joint or not in 1918 when the suit was brought because if the family was then joint, the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover half of the money spent by them as costs. We are concerned here only upto the period 1913. This evidence is not very important and does not outweigh the other evidence on the record.

After the death of Ohhabnath, Badri Narain made an application on November 11, 1913, to withdraw the insurance policy money. He based his claim on his being the brother of Ohhabnath and the eldest member of the undivided Hindu family. Reliance is placed in this connection on a letter dated December 5, 1913, (Ex 52) written by Badri Narain to his son Mohanlal and the following portion of the letter is relevant—

"The Insurance Company which had insured Ohhabnath has written to me. 'If you want to take the money due to Ohhabnath then you should first obtain a certificate of your rights from the District Judge and send it to me. So I will do it.' 'I do not know whether stamp duty will be required on the application or not. If I will see any difficulty I will declare Ram Dayal to be his heir as he is provided the application on his behalf will require no stamp duty.'"

It is argued that the application was made by Badri Narain to avoid stamp duty but we do not see how he could do it. If the Company could insist on a succession certificate it could ask the same from the claimant whether it was Badri Narain or the sons of Ohhabnath. We think there is no sufficient explanation of Badri Narain claiming the money as a member of the undivided family if he was separate from Ohhabnath.

Reliance is placed on several letters of Ohhabnath to show that the two brothers kept their money separately. The members of a joint family can have separate property and the fact that these two brothers used to keep their earnings separately is not enough to show that they had separated. Murlidhar plaintiff himself admits that the second marriage of Ohhabnath was performed by Badri Narain from the place where he was posted at the time. The statement of Mst. Mullo mother of the defendants (and second wife of Ohhabnath) shows that after marriage she went to live with Badri Narain and after living for four months there went to Ohhabnath. This shows that the marriage was after Ohhabnath had joined service. Reliance is placed on the statement of Mst. Mullo that the crop of the grove used to be divided and the sale proceeds of the kathal trees used to be divided half and half. She states that she came to know of the grove only since the janeo ceremony of Ram Dayal that is since 1912. It does not appear from her statement that the crop of the grove of the kathal trees used to be divided in the lifetime of Badri Narain and Ohhabnath. Reliance is placed on the case of Durga v. Lal Bahadur, (5 O. W. N. 992) (4). In that case it was held that if persons belonging to a Hindu family have been living for a long time separate from one another and their property has also been separately dealt with, it would not be necessary to ask for evidence of separation. Each case must be decided according to its circumstances. In the present case the two brothers were both Deputy Inspectors of Schools and hence they had to be at the places where they were posted. Under these circumstances their living separately affords very little evidence of separation. The other case relied on by the learned Counsel for the appellants is that of Kanshi Ram v. Dunt Chand, (A. I. R. 1934 Lah. 707) (5). In that case it was held that if it is proved that some family property is divided, the presumption would be that the entire family property was partitioned. This case has no bearing because it is not proved that there was any division of any family property.

After considering all the evidence and the circumstances we are of opinion that the finding of the lower Court that Badri Narain and Ohhabnath were members of a joint Hindu family is correct.

The second point which we have to consider is whether the house in question was the joint family property of Badri Narain and Ohhabnath or they were owners of it in proportion to the amount contributed by each. The defendants' case is that the two brothers Badri Narain and Ohhabnath had blended their separate incomes for constructing the house in question and, therefore, it was joint family property. It is laid down in Mulla's Hindu Law para. 227 that property which was originally separate or self-acquired property of a member of a joint family may become family property if it has been voluntarily thrown by him into the common stock with the intention of abandoning all separate claims upon it. It appears from the evidence of Murlidhar himself that the relations between his father, and Ohhabnath were more than human and Badri Narain was ready to sacrifice his son for the sake of his brother and there was no hitch in spending money by his father over his brother. Correspondence between Badri Narain and Ohhabnath and other evidence to which we will refer also shows that the relations between the two brothers were cordial.

The first letter which we have is Ex. 26 dated January 17, 1908, written by Ohhabnath to Badri Narain. Ohhabnath wrote to his brother that the probable cost of the house would be between Rs. 3,500 and Rs. 4,000 out of which he had Rs. 1,800 in his own and Rs. 700 in two other pass books and he would be able to spare Rs. 400 more. It thus appears that out of Rs. 4,000 he thought being able to provide Rs. 2,900. This letter shows that Ohhabnath was to spend more than one-half on the house and this would not have been the case had the intention of the parties been to be tenants-in-common in the house. In that case each would have thought of spending only one-half.

There is another letter Ex. 27 dated March 23, 1908, in which Ohhabnath informs his brother that the work was going on. He also said that there was no need of money and that he had brought Rs. 225 with him and had realized Rs. 650 and was going to realize Rs. 250 more. It appears that Ohhabnath had spent some money but he did not ask his brother to contribute.

Ohhabnath wrote to his brother again on March 31, 1908, (Ex. 28) that he had received Rs. 600 sent by him but that he was not in need of money and he asked him not to send any money till asked for. The total expenses incurred till that time was Rs. 1,090-14-0.

Ohhabnath was on leave from March 7, till June 6, 1908, and was supervising the construction of the house. He wrote a letter Ex. 29 to his brother on May 6, 1908 in which he informed him that he had written to Mohan Lal plaintiff to take leave from June 1, 1908, because his leave would then expire and work could not be carried on without the supervision of some one of the family. In his letter he intimated to his brother that there would be need for money in that month. Ohhabnath then wrote a letter Ex. 30 on June 4, 1908 in which he informed him that he had received currency notes of Rs. 500 sent by him and that he was going to join service leaving Mohanlal in charge of the work. There is another important letter dated August 16, 1908 (Ex. 31) written by Ohhabnath to Mohanlal. He wrote to Mohanlal that he had learnt from him (Mohanlal) that Rs. 5,000 had already been spent on the house and Rs. 1,000 more would be required but that he could not spare any money and would be able to give Rs. 100 or Rs. 150 a month only. He also wrote to him that it was not proper to put a heavy load on Badri Narain and that the remaining construction be postponed for the future or might be built slowly from the monthly payments to be made by him out of his pay. If the two brothers were to be owners of the house according to the contribution of each, Ohhabnath would not have written that a heavy load should not be put on Badri Narain.

Ohhabnath's letter clearly shows that he wanted to spend as much over the house as he possibly could. Badri Narain was also anxious to spend over the house.

Exhibit 32 is a letter written by Badri Narain to Mohanlal on September 28, 1908. In it Badri Narain states that Ohhabnath had no money and he should not demand any from him and that he would bring Rs. 100 and if necessary would send more.

Ohhabnath wrote a letter Ex. 17 on January 5, 1909, to Mohanlal, plaintiff in which he informed him that out of the total amount of Rs. 5,908 spent on the house, Badri Narain had sent Rs. 3,415 and this amount exceeded his by about Rs. 1,000 and he was sorry that he could not spend more than that though he had withdrawn the entire money from his two pass books. This letter clearly shows that there was no agreement between the parties to spend the money in any proportion. Had each brother been owner of the house in proportion to the amount spent by him, there was no reason for Ohhabnath being sorry for having spent Rs. 1,000 less than his brother. It appears that Ohhabnath wanted to take as little help as possible from Badri Narain but more money than was expected was incurred over the house and he could not supply it.

This correspondence goes to show that the house was built for the family and both brothers thought it to be a family house without regard to the amount contributed by each.

Mst. Ganga Dei admits that the house was built by the joint efforts of the two brothers. She stated that there was no account between the two brothers as to who should build the house and that everybody spent what time they could over it. She also admitted that this was due to the fact that the house was built jointly. Murlidhar admits that in the building there cannot be two separate blocks and the house cannot be occupied by several people unless they live jointly. This also goes to show that the two brothers wanted to have a house in which they could live jointly. He further stated that his father and uncle had not blended their incomes and spent them towards the construction of this house. The reasons given by him were that the contributions were separate, were written separately in the accounts and were received separately but he admitted that he could not suggest any other method in which the accounts could be written if two persons had subscribed and blended their money. Nand Kishore plaintiffs' witness states that he took the house to belong to both the brothers. Bansidhar and Damodar Din plaintiffs' witnesses also stated the same. Mohanlal plaintiff states that the idea was to construct such a house in Lakhimpur in which the two brothers and their children could live permanently and he could not say whether there was any agreement between the two brothers that they would have a share in the house according to their contributions. He also stated that he did not claim any separate share in the house on the basis of his contribution because it was the joint property of his father and uncle and that he never made any contribution with a view to having his own share separated on the basis of his contribution.

All this evidence goes to show that the two brothers wanted to build a family house with their separate earnings which they blended together for that purpose.

Reference was also made to a tablet Ex. 48 fixed on the house by Badri Narain, in which it was stated that Ohhabnath built the house with the help of his maternal grandmother, Mohan and Murlidhar, plaintiffs, and Shambhu his deceased son and with the consent of his mother Munni and his brother Pandit Badri Narain. This tablet was put on the house by Badri Narain himself with the knowledge of the present plaintiffs and if Badri Narain's share in it would have been more than half he would not have allowed it to be put up. The tablet would go to show rather that Ohhabnath alone was the owner than that the parties owned it in proportion to their contributions.

The major portion of the house was built in 1908. It is marked red in the map attached to the plaint. Badri Narain contributed 3415 and Ohhabnath 2493 towards its construction. The green portion was built in 1912 and 1913 but the construction on the ground floor in it existed before 1912 and a room on the upper story was built in 1913. This ground floor construction was a stable. The plaintiffs' case is that they alone contributed towards the cost of the constructions made in 1912 and 1913. It is said that the roof of the stable was also built in 1913 but it does not seem probable that there should have been a stable from before without a roof. Anyhow the point is not material for our finding is that the constructions made in 1912 and 1913 were also joint.

It is admitted on behalf of the plaintiffs that they had an account of the constructions made in 1912 and 1913. Very clear accounts were made of the constructions put up in 1908 and so there was no reason for not keeping accounts of these constructions also. The plaintiffs' case however is that those accounts were stolen. We are not prepared to believe this story. Murlidhar was before the trial Court and that Court was not well impressed with his evidence. It has not been satisfactorily proved that these constructions of 1912 and 1913 were made by the plaintiffs with their own money. Mst. Mulloo who appeared to the lower Court to be a truthful and straightforward witness stated that she learnt from her husband that he used to contribute money for those constructions also. It is true that Pandit Ohhabnath was ill for about eight months before his death which took place in October 1913, but it does not appear that he was on leave for any appreciable time before his death. He was posted in Kumaon as Assistant Inspector of Schools and was being treated there.

Badri Narain got Rs. 2,050 and odd the insurance money and arrears of pay of Ohhabnath. The sum of Rs. 1,300 out of this amount was deposited in the account books of Sheo Dayal and Mst. Mulloo. Rs. 750 were deposited in the account of Ram Dayal in 1917, i. e. after four years and so it cannot be said that the latter amount was out of the amount of Rs. 2,050. It does not appear what became of the remaining amount. Reliance is placed on the statement of Har Dayal that he learnt that the insurance money of his father was deposited in the names of those persons who had accounts already in the post office but he was only a boy when his father died and he could not know anything from his personal knowledge. Badri Narain was the manager after the death of Ohhabnath and the latter's children were also looked after by Murlidhar. We do not know what became of Ohhabnath's provident fund. The circumstances are that it is quite possible that Badri Narain might have got some money of Ohhabnath with him. Anyhow we are not satisfied that the constructions in 1912 and 1913 were made with the money belonging to the plaintiffs alone. Even if the money was that of the plaintiffs alone, their intentions in making the additions to the family house in the circumstances of this case were not to treat those additions as their separate property. The subsequent conduct of the parties also shows the same. There was a rupture in the family in 1926 when the defendants brought a suit against the plaintiffs for recovery of their share in the property which they had purchased. The defendants have been in possession of the building over the stable since 1928 and the present suit was not instituted till August 27, 1936.

Exhibits A-62 and A-63 show that the total municipal tax assessed on the house is Rs. 5-8-0 out of which 2-12-0 were paid by the defendants and Rs. 2-12-0 by the plaintiffs in the year 1936-37 in respect of the big house. The same appears from Exs. A-64 and A-65 to have been paid in respect of the stable and the building over it. Reliance is placed on Lala Muddun Gopal Lal v. Khikhind Koer, (I. L. R. 18 Cal., 341) (6), but that case is quite distinguishable. In that case one of two brothers of a Mitakehara family had been born deaf and dumb and the elder brother's action was such for some years as to recognize that his brother had a joint interest in the family property. It was held that the elder brother did not thereby waive his rights which accrued to him in consequence of his brother's disqualification. The inference which their Lordships of the Privy Council drew was that the elder brother treated the younger as a member of the family and entitled to equal rights until it had become clear that his disqualification would never be removed by his being cured. The learned Counsel for the appellants has referred to Gauri Shankar v. Gopal Das, (A. I. R. 1934 All., 701) (7), Jot Singh v. Jangu Singh, (10 O. W. N., 1021) (8), *Kali Prasad v. case it was held that to make the acquisition of two brothers joint, it must be proved that they had thrown them into a joint stock. In the present case we held that the two brothers and the plaintiffs threw their earnings in a joint house intending to make it a joint family property. In 10 O. W. N., 1021 (8), it was held that if it is shown that property has been acquired as a separate estate by a member of a joint family and if it was alleged that he had chosen thereafter to amalgamate that separate estate with the joint estate, it was for the person so alleging to show that there was an unequivocal intention on the part of the person who acquired the property to amalgamate it with the joint estate and the question is one which depends upon intention and that intention must be inferred from all the evidence which is adduced. We accept the principle of that case and are of opinion that the intention of the parties in this case was to amalgamate their joint income and convert it into a joint family property. In the case reported in 4 O. W. N., 667 (9), superstructures were raised by a member of a joint Hindu family on a site belonging to the joint family. It was held that in the absence of evidence to the effect that the joint family funds contributed to the money with which the superstructures were raised and in the absence of evidence to the effect that the member in question deliberately made a gift of his self-acquisitions in favour of the joint family as a whole, the principle of self-acquisitions becoming joint family property when the member who made the acquisitions has thrown them into the common stock is not applicable. It does appear in this case that all the members had made gifts of their money in favour of the joint family. The case of 50 Madras, 582 (10), is similar to the last case mentioned above. The principle laid down in 2 O. L. J., 237 (11), is the same as in the Allahabad case. In A. I. R. 1929 Lahore, 468 (12), the father was in Govt. service and the son a petition writer and there was no nucleus. The father built a house and it was held that the son had no interest in it. That case is distinguishable because it was found in that case that the father and son had no common fund and had not pooled their incomes. We are of opinion, that the house in question which was built partly in 1908 and partly in 1912 and 1913 was joint family property and the members were not sharers in it according to their contributions. The plaintiffs have only one-half share in it.

We think the judgment of the lower Court is correct and we dismiss this appeal with costs.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT

Execution First Appeal No. 309 of 1940

October 24, 1940

IQBAL AHMAD AND VERMA, JJ.

Mirza INAYAT BEG—APPELLANT

versus

Mirza ABDUL RAHMAN BEG AND OTHERS

—RESPONDENTS

U. P. Encumbered Estates Act (XXV of 1934). ss. 7 (1) (a), 7, 45—S. 7 (1) (a), scope of—When comes into play—If subject to s. 52, Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882)—Held, that applicant could not invoke s. 7 (1) (a)—Order of Civil Court refusing to stay execution under s. 7—Not appealable under s. 45.

Section 7 (1) (a), U. P. Encum. Estates Act is confined in its operation to proceedings in respect of a debt (1) to which the landlord applicant is subject, or (2) with which his immovable property is encumbered. If neither of these conditions is satisfied cl. (a) does not come into play. The provisions of cl. (a) are subject to the rule of law enacted by s. 52, T. P. Act, and a purchaser pendente lite is not entitled to invoke that clause to his aid.

One U brought a mortgage suit against F and H who was then a minor and obtained a decree for sale. Subsequently H attained majority, and sold a portion of his property covered by the decree for sale to I. Thereafter both H and I filed a suit for a declaration that the decree for sale obtained by U was not binding on H and was not enforceable against his properties, as H was not represented by a duly appointed guardian in the suit filed by U. This suit was ultimately decreed and, as a result of the decree passed in the suit, the original suit filed by U was reopened so far as H was concerned. I was also impleaded as a defendant in U's suit when that suit was reopened against H. The suit was again decreed against H and a preliminary decree under O. XXXIV, r. 4, Civil P. C., was passed. Though in this preliminary decree I's name figured as one of the defendants, the decree was solely against H and there was no liability cast on I by that decree. The decree was made final in due course. But in the final decree the name of I did not appear as a judgment-debtor and the decree was only against H. After the passing of the final decree, I filed an application under s. 4, Encum. Estates Act and sought to invoke the provisions of s. 7 (1) (a);

Held, that in view of the facts, I, not being under the obligation to satisfy the decree could not invoke the provisions of s. 7 (1) (a). He was also debarred from further seeking the aid of those provisions by reason of his being a purchaser pendente lite.

An order of a Civil Court refusing to stay execution proceedings under s. 7, U. P. Encum. Estates Act is not appealable under s. 45.

Ex. F. A. from the decision of the Civil Judge, Agra, dated March 26, 1938.

Mr. M. L. Chaturvedi, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Respondents.

Iqbal Ahmad, J.—This is an appeal by Mirza Inayat Beg against an order of a Civil Judge refusing to stay further proceedings in execution of a decree for sale. The facts giving rise to the appeal are as follows: One Umrao Beg, the ancestor of the contesting respondent brought a suit for recovery of Rs. 17,000 odd by sale of mortgaged property against Fayazi Begum, Hakim Beg and certain other persons. Hakim Beg was minor on the date of the institution of the suit. Umrao Beg obtained a preliminary decree for sale in 1922 and that decree was made final in 1923. By the beginning of the year 1926, Hakim Beg attained majority, and he sold a portion of his property covered by the decree for sale to Inayat Beg appellant. Thereafter both Hakim Beg and Inayat Beg filed a suit for a declaration that the decree for sale obtained by Umrao Beg was not binding on Hakim Beg and was not enforceable against his properties, as Hakim Beg was not represented by a duly appointed guardian in the suit filed by Umrao Beg. This suit was ultimately decreed and, as a result of the decree passed in the suit, the original suit filed by Umrao Beg was reopened so far as Hakim Beg was concerned. It appears that Inayat Beg was also impleaded as a defendant in Umrao Beg's suit when that suit was reopened against Hakim Beg. The suit was again decreed against Hakim Beg and a preliminary decree under O. XXXIV, r. 4, Civil P. C., was passed on December 5, 1933. Though in this preliminary decree Inayat Beg's name figured as one of the defendants, the decree was solely against Hakim Beg and there was no liability cast on Inayat Beg by that decree. The decree was made final in due course. But in the final decree the name of Inayat Beg did not appear as a judgment-debtor and the decree was only against Hakim Beg.

After the passing of the final decree, last mentioned Inayat Beg filed an application under s. 4, Encum. Estates Act (XXV of 1934), and his application was forwarded by the Collector to the Special Judge in accordance with the provisions of s. 6 of the Act. In the meantime, the respondents had taken out execution of their decree for sale against Hakim Beg. Inayat Beg then filed an application before the Civil Judge praying that the execution proceedings initiated by the respondents be stayed in view of the provisions of s. 7, Encum.

Estates Act. The learned Judge rejected the application and, in our judgment, rightly. Clause (a) of sub-s. (1) of s. 7 runs as follows:

"When the Collector has passed an order under s. 6 the following consequences shall ensue:

all proceedings pending at the date of the said order in any Civil or Revenue Court in respect of any public or private debt to which the landlord is subject, or with which his immovable property is encumbered.....shall be stayed....."

It is clear from this provision that cl. (a) is confined in its operation to proceedings in respect of a debt (1) to which the landlord applicant is subject, or (2) with which his immovable property is encumbered. If neither of these conditions is satisfied cl. (a) does not come into play. In the present case Inayat Beg is not subject to the decretal debt which the respondents are seeking to realize by execution of their decree. Even though Inayat Beg was a party to the preliminary decree, no pecuniary liability was cast on him by that decree. To the final decree Inayat Beg is not even a party and is therefore not under an obligation to satisfy that decree. The first condition is therefore not satisfied in the present case.

But, as already stated, Inayat Beg has purchased a portion of the mortgaged property covered by the decree for sale. "His immovable property," in one sense, is therefore at present "encumbered" with the decretal debt. This fact however in our judgment does not, in the circumstances of the present case, entitle Inayat Beg to the benefit conferred by cl. (a). Inayat Beg is a purchaser pendente lite. The purchase made by him cannot therefore in view of the provisions of s. 52, T. P. Act, adversely affect the rights of the respondents under the decree obtained by them. The respondents are entitled, as against Hakim Beg to sell the property covered by the final decree in order to realize the decretal amount. This right of the respondents cannot be affected by the pendente lite purchase made by Inayat Beg. Hakim Beg not having applied under the Encum. Estates Act, could not invoke to his aid the provisions of cl. (a) of sub-s. (1) of s. 7. The right of the respondents to put their decree into execution therefore remained untrammelled so far as Hakim Beg was concerned. To allow the stay of execution proceedings would therefore affect the undoubted rights of the respondents under the decree held by them, and this would amount to a violation of the provisions of s. 52, T. P. Act. In our opinion the provisions of cl. (a) are subject to the rule of law enacted by s. 52, T. P. Act, and a purchaser pendente lite is not entitled to invoke that clause to his aid. The respondents in the present case are entitled to say that, as between them and Inayat Beg, the purchase made by Inayat Beg must be ignored in view of the provisions of s. 52. In other words, having regard to the rule of lis pendens, Inayat Beg, cannot, as between him and the respondents, be regarded as the owner of the property covered by the decree for sale. His (Inayat Beg's) "immovable property" is not therefore "encumbered" with the decretal debt within the meaning of cl. (a) of sub-s. (1) of s. 7. It follows that the Court below was right in refusing to stay the execution proceedings at the instance of Inayat Beg. The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed with costs.

We may note that this appeal was originally filed as a first appeal from order. But it was conceded by the learned Counsel for the appellant that, as the order appealed against was passed not by a Special Judge exercising jurisdiction under the Encum. Estates Act but by a Civil Judge in the course of execution proceedings, no appeal lay to this Court in accordance with s. 45, Encum. Estates Act. The learned Counsel therefore prayed that this appeal be treated as an execution first appeal and this prayer was granted by us. The deficiency in the court-fee was made good by the appellant and then the hearing of the appeal proceeded. As we are dismissing the appeal on the merits it is not necessary to enter into a discussion of the question as to whether the order appealed against was appealable under s. 47, Civil P. O.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. I, Art. 14—
Suit under s. 9, Specific Relief Act (I of 1877)— Revision—Court-fee payable is same as paid on plaint—Interpretation of statutes—Fiscal statutes.

Article 14, Sch. I, Court Fees Act, really means that on an application for revision the same amount of court-fee is payable as has been paid on the plaint in a case where the subject-matter in dispute is the same both in the suit and in revision. Consequently on an application for revision arising out of a suit under s. 9, Specific Relief Act, the court-fee payable is the same as has been paid on the plaint, 68 Ind. Cas. 444 (1), referred to.

A fiscal statute should be construed strictly and where there is a doubt, the doubt should be resolved in favour of the subject.

Mr. U Sein Tun Aung, for the Applicant.

Mr. U Tun Byu, (Govt. Advocate), for the Crown.

Order.—The Applicant in this case filed a suit under s. 9, Specific Relief Act in the Sub-Divisional Court of Kyauktaw, Akyab District, against the respondents for possession of a mill and its site. He paid court-fee on half the value of the mill and site which he valued at Rs. 4,500. The suit was contested and it was eventually dismissed. The applicant has therefore brought the case up to this Court in revision and paid the same amount of court-fee on his application as he paid on his plaint. The Taxing Master takes objection to this and directs the applicant to pay court-fee according to Art. 14 of Sch. I, Court Fees Act. I do not agree with the learned Taxing Master. Under Art. 14, Sch. I, Court Fees Act, an application for revision must be stamped with a Rs. 2-stamp if the value of the subject-matter in dispute does not exceed Rs. 25 but where the value of the subject-matter in dispute exceeds Rs. 25 the court-fee payable on an application for revision is the same as the court fee payable on a memorandum of appeal. The question as to what court-fee is payable on a memorandum of appeal depends upon what the value of the subject-matter in dispute in appeal is. If the subject-matter in dispute in appeal is the same as the subject-matter in dispute in the suit, then the same fee must be paid on the memorandum of appeal as has been paid on the plaint. The fee payable on a plaint is to be calculated according to the scale as laid down in s. 7 read with Sch. I, Art. 1, Court Fees Act. If the subject-matter in dispute in appeal is not the same as the subject-matter in the suit then the payment of the court-fee depends upon what the value of the subject-matter in dispute in appeal is. If the value of the subject-matter in dispute in appeal is less than the value of the subject-matter in the suit, then the court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal will be less than the fee paid on the plaint: In re Porkodi Achi (1).

Therefore, the decision of the question

now involved in this case will depend on what the subject-matter in dispute in a suit under s. 9, Specific Relief Act, is. The subject-matter in such a suit is immovable property but the relief claimed is possession only. The question of title, if necessary, must be adjudicated upon in a separate suit. If such a suit is instituted as is sometimes done, it means that court-fee has to be paid twice in respect of the same subject-matter though not necessarily by the same party. It therefore appears to my mind that the Legislature has advisedly laid it down in Art. 2, Sch. I, Court Fees Act, that the court-fee payable on a plaint in a suit under s. 9, Specific Relief Act, should be half the value of the subject-matter in dispute. If an appeal were to lie from a decree or order passed in such a suit, the same amount of court-fee would have to be paid on the memorandum of appeal as has been paid on the plaint for the subject-matter in dispute and the relief claimed both in the appeal and in the suit will be the same. In fact, that was what was in the mind of the Legislature when they passed the Court Fees Act (Act VII of 1870), for Art. 2, Sch. I, provided that the same amount of court-fee was payable both on the plaint and on the memorandum of appeal in a suit instituted under s. 9, Specific Relief Act. Only when it was discovered later that no appeal lay from a decree or order passed in a suit under s. 9, Specific Relief Act, the words "memorandum of appeal" was deleted from the said article by Act XX of 1870.

Therefore, what in my opinion Art. 14, Sch. I, Court Fees Act, really means is that on an application for revision the same amount of court-fee is payable as has been paid on the plaint in a case where the subject-matter in dispute is the same both in the suit and in revision. It would be against every principle of justice, equity and good conscience if more court-fee is to be paid on an application for revision than on a plaint in case where the subject-matter in dispute is the same both in revision and in the suit. Besides it is a well-known and well settled principle of interpretation that a fiscal statute should be construed strictly and that where there is a doubt the doubt should be resolved in favour of the subject. Therefore I hold that, on an application for revision arising out of a suit instituted under s. 9, Specific Relief Act, the court-fee payable is the same as has been paid on the plaint.

Agra Pre-emption Act (XI of 1922), s. 4—Co-sharer executing waqf and divesting himself of entire property ceases to be co-sharer—Pleadings—Amendment—Plaintiff knowing plaint to be defective—Opportunity to amend given—Defect not removed—Further application to amend beyond limitation, held could not be allowed.

A co-sharer who executes a waqf deed and divests himself of his entire property, ceases to be a co-sharer as defined in s. 4, Agra Pre-emption Act and hence is not entitled to maintain a suit for pre-emption. 171 Ind. Cas. 367 (1), relied on, 147 Ind. Cas. 926 (2), referred to.

The plaintiff knew at an early stage of the proceedings that his plaint was defective. He was given an opportunity to amend his plaint. His amendment did not, however, remove the defect. He subsequently applied for further amendment:

Held, that in all the circumstances, and especially since the application for amendment was made well beyond the period of limitation, no further indulgence could be granted to the plaintiff.

S. A. from the decision of the Civil Judge, Ghazipur, dated August 31, 1937.

Mr. A. P. Pandey, for the Appellants.

Messrs. M. L. Chaturvedi, S. M. Salman and K. N. Gupta, for the Respondents.

Thom, C. J.—This is a defendants' appeal arising out of a suit for pre-emption. The suit was filed by Mohammad Yar Khan. He made a waqf alalaulad of his entire property. He sued, however, first of all in his private capacity. During the course of the proceedings in the trial Court he filed an application for the amendment of plaint. This application was allowed and by his amendment the plaintiff described himself as mutwalli. Both the Courts below have granted decree for pre-emption.

In appeal it was urged for the appellants that inasmuch as the plaintiff was not a co-sharer within the meaning of s. 4, Agra Pre-emption Act, he was not entitled to maintain a suit for pre-emption. This contention in our judgment is sound. A co-sharer is defined in s. 4, Agra Pre-emption Act, as a person

"other than a petty proprietor, entitled as proprietor to any share or part in a mahal or village whether his name is or is not recorded in the register of proprietors."

Now the plaintiff having divested himself of his entire property and that property having vested in the Almighty, the plaintiff was not a person entitled to any share or part in the mahal or village in which the property sought to be pre-empted is situated. He is not therefore entitled to maintain a suit for pre-emption. In this connexion we refer to the case in Muhammad Baksh v. Ram Prasad (1). In that case a Bench of this Court held that a person who had divested himself of his entire property by means of a waqf deed was not entitled to resist a claim for pre-emption upon the precise ground that he was no longer a co-sharer in the village in which the property sought to be pre-empted was situated. The respondents relied on the case in Mohammad Pamar Shah Khan v. Mohammad Salamat Ali Khan (2). In that case a Bench of this Court held that if a person is liable for the payment of the land revenue along with other co-sharers in the village, then he must be deemed to be a co-sharer in spite of the fact that the estate in the share may not vest in him. No doubt for the purposes of the Agra Pre-emption Act the person who is liable in respect of land revenue is regarded as a co-sharer. "Co-sharer" is not defined in the Agra Ten. Act but is defined in the Agra Pre-emption Act. The plaintiff having executed a waqf deed under which he divested himself of his entire property is no longer a co-sharer as defined in the latter Act. He is not therefore entitled to maintain a suit for pre-emption.

Learned Counsel for the plaintiff requested the Court to allow him to amend his plaint so as to substitute the Almighty for himself as the plaintiff. The plaintiff, however, knew at an early stage of the proceedings that his plaint was defective. He was given an opportunity to amend his plaint. His amendment has not removed the defect and in all the circumstances, and especially since the application for amendment is made well beyond the period of limitation, we do not consider that any further indulgence should be granted to be plaintiff. In the result the appeal is allowed the order of the lower appellate Court is set aside and the suit is dismissed with costs. The costs will be payable out of the assets of the plaintiff who is deceased.

The grant of an absolute injunction restraining a person from enjoying his own land is wholly illegal. [p. 75, col. 1.]

The defendants who have opened doors upon their own land which they are entitled to do in the exercise of their right of possession and enjoyment of their own property, cannot be ordered to close these doors merely because, the plaintiff who is their neighbour apprehends that the defendants might acquire a right of easement to light and air after the lapse of twenty years if the doors are allowed to stand. 166 Ind. Messrs. R. B. Lal and R. N. Shukla, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is a defendants' appeal arising out of a suit for possession by demolition of certain constructions and for perpetual injunction.

The plaintiff-respondent is admittedly the owner of plots Nos. 111 and 113/1 in the abadi of patti Basudeo Mauza Tajpur, and District Unao. According to the plaintiff allegations the defendants-appellants are alleged to have dispossessed the plaintiff-respondent from the above plots in the end of 1937 by erecting two walls on plot No. 111 and three walls on plot No. 113/1 as shown in the sketch plan annexed with the plaint, thus encroaching upon the plaintiff's land. The defendants further built a chabutra on plot No. 113/1 and fixed three doors in their wall towards the north of their house on plot No. 110. These doors open on the plaintiff's land. The defendants further stored bricks, bullock-carts, tied cattle, prepared cow-dung cakes etc. etc. on plot No. 113/1 and exercised similar acts on a portion of plot No. 111 as marked in the sketch plan. There was a partition of the village four or five years ago. As a result of the partition abadi plots Nos. 113/1 and 111 fell to the share of the plaintiff while plots Nos. 110 and 109 were allotted to another co-sharer, whose rights now vest in the defendants. The defendants constructed a hall and side rooms on No. 110 just abutting upon No. 113/1 after the partition. The plaintiff sued the defendants for closing the three doors opening towards the plaintiff's land, restraining them from using Nos. 111 and 113/1 as their sahan and for demolition of the chabutra which they had constructed upon plot No. 113/1.

Before the trial Court the defendants disclaimed any interest in plot No. 111 with the result that the controversy was thus narrowed down to plot No. 113/1 only.

In defence the defendants pleaded that they had been using plot No. 119/1 as their sahan for a long time and admittedly exercising acts upon that plot as alleged by the plaintiff. They denied the plaintiff's possession within limitation and asserted that the defendants had acquired rights of easement over plot No. 113/1. The encroachments alleged by the plaintiff to have been made on plots Nos. 111 and 113/1 by the defendants were denied.

The trial Court appointed a Commissioner to prepare a plan of the land in dispute showing the constructions as well as the alleged encroachments. This plan is no longer in dispute and forms part of the decree. The trial Court held that plot No. 113/1 had not been used by the defendants as their sahan and that they had acquired no right of easement over that plot. It further held that the plaintiff had been in possession within limitation. According to the Commissioner's plan the constructions complained of were found to exist on plot No. 110 alone which belonged to the defendants and not on any portion of the abadi plots belonging to the plaintiff. In the result the plaintiff's claim for possession over Nos. 111 and 113/1 was decreed. His claim in respect of demolition of the walls and enclosure as alleged by him was dismissed. The chabutra shown as A G H I J in the Commissioner's plan on plot No. 113/1 ordered to be demolished and the materials thereof to be removed by the defendants at their costs within one month. The defendants were further ordered to remove their cart, cattle, cowdung cakes etc. from the plot in suit and not to use the said plots as their sahan in future nor to exercise any acts of enjoyment or of possession on the said plots. The relief as regards the closing of the three doors in the wall A B as shown in the Commissioner's plan was, however, refused and it was ordered that they shall remain fixed.

Both parties were aggrieved by the decision of the trial Court. The defendants filed an appeal challenging the decree of the trial Court on the points which had been decided against them while the plaintiff filed a cross-objection in respect of the claim for closing the three doors. The defendants' appeal was dismissed while the plaintiff's cross-objection was allowed and the three doors towards the north of the defendants' house were ordered to be closed.

The defendants have preferred a second appeal to this Court.

The only question that has been urged before me in support of the appeal relates to the relief for the closing of the three doors, which was granted to the plaintiff-respondent against the defendants-appellants. It has been contended that the decision of the lower Appellate Court ordering the closing of the doors is not legally sustainable. I am of opinion that this contention must prevail.

The lower Appellate Court remarks that in view of the finding that the defendants had not succeeded in establishing that they used plot No. 113/1 towards the north as their sahan, they had no right to fix their doors towards the north unless they proved that these doors originally were opened on this side. The lower Appellate Court held that the defendants were not entitled to open new door ways towards the plaintiff's land and acquire a fresh right of light and air from the plaintiff's land. It was remarked in this connection that if these doors are allowed to stand for over twenty years, the defendants will acquire a right of light and air from his land.

The trial Court found, and this finding has not been dissented from by the lower Appellate Court, that plot No. 113/1 is a parti land and that part of it at any rate has been under cultivation. This fact is also borne out by the evidence of the plaintiff's own witnesses (vide P. Ws. Nos. 2, 3 and 5). The reasoning of the lower Appellate Court to the effect that as the plea about the use of plot No. 113/1 as a sahan by the defendants has not been established they have no right to open the doors, does not commend itself to me. The defendants have opened doors admittedly upon their own land and this they are entitled to do in the exercise of their right of possession and enjoyment of their own property unless they are prevented from doing so by any rule of law or by any right acquired by the plaintiff authorising him to have the said doors closed. Having regard to the finding arrived at by both the lower Courts it is not now open to the defendants to use any portion of plot No. 113/1 for the purpose of a sahan or for any other purpose. They cannot claim the right of egress and ingress upon plot No. 113/1 and it is not pretended on their behalf that they have any such right. There is no legal justification, however, for preventing the defendants from enjoying their property by opening doors in a wall of their house as they have done in the present case unless the plaintiff is able to prove that the existence of these doors interferes with the right of enjoyment by the plaintiff of his own property. In T. Syed Pitchai Rowther v. K. Devaji Rao, (A. I. R. 1937 Madras, 21) (1), it was laid down that an owner cannot be restrained from enjoying his own property when it is not impossible for him and others to enjoy their rights. A person is entitled to enjoy his own property in any way he pleases provided that he does not create a nuisance or interfere with the rights of others. In this case the plaintiffs sought to restrain the defendants from interfering with the worship and in particular from opening doors on the southern side of the plot recently purchased by them. The first injunction was granted by the trial Court and the second injunction was granted by the Subordinate Judge in appeal. Reference was made to Kasim Ali Khan v. Brij Kishore, (1870, 2 N. W. P. H. C. R. 182) (2), where it was observed:

"Parties are at liberty to build what structure they please upon their own land; but if they interfere with the free enjoyment of their neighbour's property, they may become liable in damages for the injury that they do."

It was held by the Madras High Court that the opening of the doors on the southern side can in no way interfere with the rights of the plaintiffs.

In Mohammad Zahadur Rahim v. Satyendra Narayan Mookhopaphya (A. I. R. 1934 Calcutta 752) (3), it was observed that an act which is not unlawful in itself does not become unlawful merely because it interferes with other people's business or merely because the motive of the act is bad. The holding of a rival mela by defendant on his own land is not unlawful merely because it interferes with the plaintiff's mela or merely because the defendant in holding his mela had a bad motive for his act. But such an act is actionable wrong if he exercises his right of using his land by the employment of illegal means. The grant of an absolute injunction restraining defendant from enjoying his own land is therefore wholly illegal.

Learned Counsel on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent has failed to satisfy me in what way the existence of these three doors amounts to a violation of the plaintiff's rights. He takes his stand upon the reasoning employed by the lower Appellate Court that there is an apprehension of the defendants' acquiring a right of easement to light and air after the lapse of twenty years if the doors are allowed to stand. It appears to me that this apprehension cannot afford any justification for preventing the defendants from enjoying their property without interfering with the rights of the enjoyment by the plaintiff of his own property. It is perfectly open to the plaintiff to prevent the acquisition of the rights of easement to light and air by the defendants by putting up structure on his own land if he so desires. According to s. 54 of the Specific Relief Act a perpetual injunction may be granted to prevent the breach of an obligation existing in favour of the plaintiff, whether expressly or by implication. In the present case there is no obligation in favour of the plaintiff as to restrain the defendants from opening the doors and enjoying their property. The existence of these doors in my opinion involves no invasion of the plaintiff's right on the contrary the order of demolition is tantamount to an encroachment upon the defendants' legitimate rights to enjoy their property.

Learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent has referred to certain cases but neither of these cases has any application to the facts and circumstances of the present case. The case of Jateendramohan Mitra v. Prabodhkumar Datta, (I. L. R. 59 Calcutta 260) (4), has no bearing whatever upon the present case. The case in Bindu Basini Chowdhrani v. Jahnabi Chowdhrani, (I. L. R. XXIV Calcutta 260) (5), is distinguishable upon the facts. There the defendants want only and with the intention of causing injury to the plaintiff dug a trench on the verge of the boundary of her tenure resulting in the subsidence of the plaintiff's land. The plaintiff sought perpetual injunction prohibiting them from digging earth within a certain distance of the plaintiff's tenement, the filling up of the excavation, or in default a certain sum of money as the costs of filling it up. The Munsif dismissed the suit holding that no cause of action accrued until actual damage occurred. During the prosecution of the suit the plaintiff's land subsided in consequence of the excavation and this fact was brought to the notice of the Court. The plaint was ordered to be amended in appeal by the lower Appellate Court and the Munsif was ordered to try the suit afresh. The Calcutta High Court held in appeal that the Munsif was wrong in his view of the law. They observed that the suit for injunction will lie when the threatened act is of such a character that it must result in injury. There can be no question whatever in the present case that any injury to the plaintiff's right of enjoyment of his own land is inevitable from the action of the defendants in opening these doors on their own land.

The case in Lakshmi Narain Banerjee v. Tara Prosanna Banerjee, (I. L. R. 31 Cal. 944) (6), is clearly inapplicable. There it was held that as every owner of land is under an obligation not to allow the branches of his tree to grow so as to overhang, or the roots of his tree to extend so as to penetrate, his neighbour's land to the detriment of the latter, in case of breach of such an obligation it is open to the Court to grant a mandatory injunction for the removal of the nuisance under s. 55 of the Specific Relief Act.

Reference has been made on behalf of both parties to certain cases bearing on the question of the right of privacy existing in the United Provinces. It is not necessary to refer to any of these cases as in my opinion they have got no bearing upon the present case. It cannot be pretended with any show of reason that any right of privacy exists in respect of the open piece of land and that any such right has been invaded by the setting up of the three doors by the defendants on their own land.

The result is that I allow the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court in so far as it decrees the plaintiff's suit for the closing of the three northern doors on the defendants' land. In other respects the decree of the lower Appellate Court will stand. Parties shall bear their own costs in all the Courts.

Income-tax—Assessable income—Animals purchased in British India and sold at profit in foreign country—Profits arise at place of sale—Profits not brought into British India are not assessable to income-tax.

An assessee did business of exporting goats and sheep from India to Colombo and of selling them there at a profit:

Held, that the profit made by the assessee could only be calculated on what the goats and sheep actually cost him and the amounts at which they were actually sold in Colombo. The figures in the invoices, whether inflated or deflated, would not matter.

Held, also that the profit arose in the place of sale and that the profits derived from the sale in a foreign country of animals purchased in British India were not assessable to income-tax when the profits had not been received or brought into British India. 71 Ind. Cas. 758 (1) and 117 Ind. Cas. 657 (2), relied on, 176 Ind. Cas. 15 (3), explained.

Mr. K. Bhashyam Ayyangar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. V. Sessa Ayyangar, for the Respondent.

Leach, C. J.—The assessee in this case is the manager of a joint Hindu family which exports goats and sheep from this country to Colombo and sells them there at a profit. For the year 1936-37, the assessee was assessed to income-tax by the Income-tax Officer, Tuticorin Circle, on a total income of Rs. 16,412 which included a sum of Rs. 15,139 found to be the profits made in Colombo and remitted to British India. The Income-tax Officer's order of assessment was revised by the Commissioner of Income-tax, who assessed the income at Rs. 31,384. Included in this amount was the figure of Rs. 9,000 which the Commissioner said was the amount of profit which had accrued to the assessee in British India from this business. The Commissioner considered that the assessee had bought the animals at lower prices than those disclosed in his invoices when shipping them to Colombo. The assessee objected to an assessment on this basis and asked the Commissioner to state a case to this Court. The Commissioner refused, but was compelled to do so by an order of this Court, dated October 17, 1939. In pursuance of this Court's direction the Commissioner has referred the following question:

"Are the income-tax authorities entitled in law to increase the petitioner's assessment by Rs. 9,000 as being profits made in British India for the year 1936-37?"

In his order revising the assessment the Commissioner gave the following reasons for holding that the assessee had made profits in British India: (i) the assessee had agents for the purchase of goats and sheep within the presidency but he himself had exercised "a certain amount of supervision" and this had its value; and (ii) there was usually an element of profit involved in F. O. B. prices and in this case the profit had not been included in the profit shown by the Colombo books. These are the only two reasons which the Commissioner gave for holding that the assessee had made a profit of Rs. 9,000 in British India in the year of assessment. The reasons for the inclusion of this sum of Rs. 9,000 given by the Commissioner in making the reference are of a nebulous character and what it comes to is, that the Commissioner considered that the assessee had made more profit than he had shown and he formed in his own mind an estimate of what that profit was. The Commissioner was not called upon in this case to exercise his best judgment within the meaning of s. 23 (4). To say that the goats and sheep shipped from this country to Colombo left it with an increased value because the assessee had supervised his agents is going too far. The second reason given by the Commissioner is also fallacious. Because exporters, when they sell at F. O. B. prices, include in those prices their profit does not mean that in a case like the present one profit is included. When this case is examined it is manifest that the prices at which the animals were invoiced to Colombo would make no difference in the calculation of the profits made by the assessee. There is no evidence for the year of assessment that the assessee charged his Colombo office greater amounts than the costs to put the animals on board the steamers, but assuming that the invoices had been inflated that would not make any difference. The profit made by the assessee could only be calculated on what the goats and sheep actually cost him and the amounts at which they were actually sold in Colombo. The figures in the invoices, whether inflated or deflated, would not matter. We can see no justification whatsoever for the Commissioner for increasing the assessment by this figure of Rs. 9,000, or by any figure as estimated profits made in British India.

When a business of this simple nature—the business we have here is the buying in one place of animals for human consumption and the selling of them in another place—the profit arises only at the place of sale. This was the effect of the decision in Secretary, Board of Revenue (Income-tax), Madras v. Madras Export Co. (1) and there is an express ruling by the Lahore High Court in Jiwan Das v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Lahore (2) that profits derived from the sale in a foreign country of goods purchased in British India are not assessable to income-tax when the profits have not been received or brought into British India. Mr. Sesha Ayyangar, on behalf of the Commissioner of Income-tax, has suggested that this can no longer be regarded as the true position in law by reason of the decision of the Privy Council in Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay Presidency & Aden v. Chunnilal B. Mehta (3) but it is clear that this is not the effect of the judgment of the Judicial Committee. There the question was whether a person who was carrying on business in Bombay and dealing in cotton in Europe and America could be assessed to income-tax on his profits made abroad. There is a vast difference between that case and the case now before us, and the cases which do apply are Secretary, Board of Revenue (Income-tax) Madras v. Madras Export Co. (1) and Jiwan Das v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Lahore (2). For these reasons I would answer the question referred in the negative and award costs to the assessee in the sum of Rs. 250. The assessee is also entitled to the refund of his deposit.

It is necessary to draw attention to another matter connected with this reference. When the case came before this Court on the question whether the Commissioner should be compelled to state a case it appeared that the income-tax authorities were contending that the assessee's assessment might be increased by the Rs. 9,000 on the ground that it represented profits remitted to British India as well as on the ground that the amount represented profits which had accrued in British India. The figure at which the assessee had been assessed included the profits remitted from Colombo, and the Court asked Mr. Sesha Ayyangar to make it clear whether his real contention was that the Rs. 9,000 should be included as profit made in British India. He said that this was his contention and as the Court was not prepared in the circumstances of this case to allow the alternative argument to be put forward it directed that the statement of the case should be confined to that question alone. Instead of obeying the direction of the Court, which he was bound to do, the Commissioner in the last paragraph of the reference has said that the main question to be decided is whether the amount was assessable to tax or not and the question whether it comes under the one basis or the other is really of no consequence so long as it comes under one of them. Consequently he asked the Court to consider the other ground. Although we agree with Mr. Sesha Ayyangar that the Commissioner meant no disrespect, his failure to follow the directions of this Court can only be described as improper.

Sale, J.—This is an appeal from a preliminary decree granting the plaintiffs possession by partition of a $\frac{3}{4}$ th share of the property in dispute. The sub-joined pedigree table is necessary in this case to illustrate the relationship of the parties:

The suit for partition relates to two properties, one a three-storied building situate in Gowalmandi, Lahore specified as A in the plaint and the other $2\frac{1}{2}$ storied house at Mochi Gate, Lahore, specified as B in the plaint, both the properties of Khalifa Mohammad Amin who died on May 24, 1934. It is not disputed that the heirs of Khalifa Mohammad Amin deceased are Mst. Sakina Begum, his widow, Mst. Mahmuda Begum, the deceased's sister's daughter plaintiff No. 2 and the eight children of Khalifa Majid-ud-Din deceased, his cousin and that their shares as heirs under Muhammadan Law would be $\frac{1}{4}$ th to the widow, $\frac{1}{2}$ to the sister's daughter and $\frac{1}{4}$ th to the children of the cousin. The suit for possession by partition was instituted by the sister's daughter and the cousin (since deceased, now represented by eight children) who claimed jointly $\frac{3}{4}$ th share in the property which they asked should be separated from the $\frac{1}{4}$ th share due to the widow Mst. Sakina Begum. The claim was contested by Mst. Sakina Begum on the ground that her husband shortly before his death had transferred to her by gift dated May 7, 1934 the three storied house in Gowalmandi (A in the plaint), and that by reason of this gift, this house was her own personal property and should be excluded from partition. In their plaint, the plaintiffs pleaded that this gift was void under Muhammadan Law as made during marz-ul-maut; and they asked that the gift should be ignored and the house included in the property in partition. The trial Court found that the gift was void for the reasons alleged by the plaintiffs and granted them a decree for the $\frac{3}{4}$ th share in both the properties in suit. From this decision Mst. Sakina Begum has preferred this appeal. The decision of the trial Court in regard to property B is not questioned in appeal. The sole point for determination in this appeal is the question of the validity of the gift which is embodied in issues Nos. 4 and 5 framed by the trial Court which read as follows: "Was the gift in suit a death-bed gift? and if so, what is the effect?"

The facts material for the decision of this appeal are that Khalifa Mohammad Amin, while admittedly seriously ill, executed a deed of gift on May 7, 1934 transferring the house 'A' to his wife Mst. Sakina Begum. This deed was attested on May 8, 1934 by (amongst others) Dr. Yar Mohammad Khan, K. S., M. D. who was attending Khalifa Mohammad Din during his illness. On May 10, 1934, this deed of gift was registered by the Sub-Registrar who came to Khalifa Mohammad Din's house for the purpose. On May 24, 1934 the donor died. On May 6, 1937, this suit was instituted. In deciding that the gift in question was void as having been made during marz-ul-maut, the learned Subordinate Judge held, following Abdul Ahad Khan v. Ahmad Nawaz Khan (1), that the following conditions had been satisfied: (1) that the donor was suffering at the time of the disposition from a disease which was the immediate cause of his death; (2) that the disease was such as to engender in him the apprehension of death; and (3) that the illness incapacitated him from the pursuits of his ordinary avocations and prevented him from saying his prayers while standing. It is admitted before us by the learned Counsel for the appellants that at the time of the execution of this deed Khalifa Mohammad Amin was ill with an abdominal complaint accompanied with fever and a enlargement of the liver. It is not denied that at the time when the gift was made Khalifa Mohammad Amin deceased may have been under the apprehension of death; but it is urged that the mere apprehension of death in the circumstances is insufficient, that the illness from which the patient was then suffering is not proved to have been the immediate cause of death, and that it is not proved that to quote the words of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ibrahim Goolam Ariff v. Saiboo (2) the gift was made under pressure of the sense of the imminence of death. In these circumstances, it was contended that the gift in question was not a death-bed gift such as would be rendered void under Muhammadan Law; and that in any case even assuming that it was a death-bed gift, it would still take effect in regard to a one-third share in the property in question.

In reply to these arguments it was contended by Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan that in order to invalidate the gift it is not necessary to establish that the illness in question was the immediate cause of death. It is only necessary, he argued, to show that the patient at the time was gravely ill, that he was incapacitated and was under a misapprehension of death; and that if the gift is shown to be invalid as a death-bed gift, the whole gift is inoperative, having regard to the fact that the donee in this case was an heir, and the other heirs did not consent. Before considering the provisions of Muhammadan Law applicable to this case, it will first be necessary to examine the evidence bearing on (1) the nature of the donor's illness at the time of the execution of the deed of gift, (2) the state of mind of the donor at that time, and (3) the cause of donor's death. (His Lordship then discussed evidence and proceeded). The conclusion, I would draw from the medical evidence is that, at the time the deed was executed the donor was suffering from a serious abdominal illness which may have been, as stated by Dr. Yar Mohammad, either cancer of the liver or liver abscess; and that the patient gradually sank until he died on May 24, 1934. It is impossible to state definitely what was the cause of death, or that the patient died of the disease diagnosed by Dr. Yar Mohammad but it seems clear that the affection of the liver (whether it was due to abscess or whether it was due to cancer) was the probable cause of death; also that it was highly probable from Dr. Yar Mohammad Khan's diagnosis, that the disease would end fatally.

The next points for determination are whether at the time of the execution of this deed the donor was under an apprehension of death and whether his condition was such as to incapacitate him from attending to his ordinary avocations. It is stated by Mst. Sakina Begum that her husband had been suffering from indigestion for a year or 1½ year before his death. It is true that the lady, whose evidence seems coloured by her natural desire to have the gift maintained, states in her evidence that her husband did not entertain any fear of death at the time when the deed was executed. But the fact, as is admitted by her that it was necessary to call in a doctor of the standing of Dr. Yar Mohammad Khan, before the execution of the deed of gift, indicates that the condition of the patient by this time must have been becoming serious. Dr. Yar Mohammad Khan in his evidence says that when he first examined the patient, the latter stated that he had been suffering from 'this trouble for the last five or six weeks'. It is not specified in the evidence what 'this trouble' was, but it may be assumed to be the abdominal disease, which caused the enlargement of the liver. We do not know whether Dr. Yar Mohammad Khan communicated to Khalifa Mohammad Amin his diagnosis that the enlargement of the liver was due to liver abscess or cancer; but it seems clear from Dr. Yar Mohammad Khan's evidence that Khalifa Mohammad Amin must have realised that he was seriously ill. The plaintiffs relied on the evidence of a number of witnesses, mostly friends and relations of the family, who stated that they visited Khalifa Mohammad Amin during his illness and found that he himself entertained little hope of his recovery. For example, Mst. Badshah Begum, a cousin, (P. W. No. 4) stated that she visited him during his illness and that "His condition was very bad. He himself had got despaired of his life. We too had no hope of his recovery." Again Mst. Begum, widow of Khalifa, Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din and step-mother of the donor, says that she used to visit the sick man and that he used to say that he had no hope of recovery. Similar is the evidence of Dr. Mohammad Afzal, Lecturer in the Tibbia College, Aligarh, a distant relation, who says that he attended the deceased in a medical capacity. He deposes that Khalifa Mohammad Amin had absolutely no hope of recovery. "In fact, when we consoled him he asked us to forgive him if he had said anything against us" (see his evidence at p. 26 of the paper book). The same evidence is given by Maqlwi Najam-ud-Din, another relation of the family, (on p. 29 of the paper book); by Khalifa Niamat Ullah (P. W. No. 1) who is the husband of Mst. Badshah Begum, and by Nuin-ud-Din (P. W. No. 2), nephew of Khan Sahib Mohammad Amin. This latter witness even says that the condition of his uncle was very precarious and

"in despair of his life he wanted to give something in charity and at the same time, hear recitation of the Quran, especially the Sughara-i-Yasin" which, according to the witness, "is only read when the patient's condition is hopeless," (see pp. 35 and 36 of the paper book).

There is no rebuttal of this evidence. Even the defendant's own witness Khalifa Atta Ullah (D. W. No. 1) admits that the patient 'had some liver trouble' and was looking 'sickly' and 'pale.' It is urged on behalf of the appellants that the evidence of these relations cannot be relied on, as being interested. Even allowing for this fact, it is impossible to avoid the conclusion from the cumulative effect of this evidence that, at the time when the deed was executed, the patient knew that he was seriously ill, and he himself thought the probability of his recovery was unlikely, so that he certainly was under the apprehension of death. Although, there is no evidence on the question whether the illness was such as to prevent the patient from saying his prayers while standing, it is clear from all the evidence that at the time of the execution of the deed, the illness incapacitated the patient from the pursuit of his ordinary avocations; and from the evidence it may be inferred that the patient was incapacitated from visiting a mosque for the purpose of saying his prayers or from saying his prayers while standing. I would, therefore find (1) that at the time of the execution of the deed of gift, the donor was suffering from a serious disease which it was known would in all probability terminate fatally, (2) that the disease was such as to engender in the patient the apprehension of death, and (3) that the illness incapacitated him from the pursuit of his ordinary avocations.

The question now remains for decision whether according to Muhammadan Law these conditions are sufficient to invalidate the gift or whether it is necessary to find as a fact that the disease was the immediate cause of death. It is true that this is one of the conditions mentioned in para. 114 of Mulla's Principles of Muhammadan Law as necessary to invalidate a gift; and it has been so held in Abdul Ahad Khan v. Ahmad Nawaz Khan (1), Ibrahim Goolam Ariff v. Saiboo (2), and Fatima Bibi v. Sheikh Ahmad Bukhsh (3). It may be observed, however, that in none of these authorities was it necessary for the determination of the case to find that the disease from which the donor was suffering was in fact the immediate cause of death. These authorities merely recite this condition, following apparently the observations made in Hassarat Bibi v. Golam Jaffar (4). This requirement is not mentioned by Baillie in his discussion on death-bed gifts, on p. 552 of his Digest of Muhammad Law. He says:

"As to the definition of a death-illness, it has been said, and this is approved by the fatwa, that when the illness is such that it is highly probable that death will be the result, it is a death illness....."

This question is dealt with in a Division Bench ruling of this Court cited as Hafiz Karim Bakhsh v. Begam Jan (5), which on p. 259 approves the correct definition of a death-bed illness as one "when the illness is such that it is highly probable that death will be the result." From this consideration of the authorities I would hold that it is not necessary to come to a definite finding that the disease was the immediate cause of death. Indeed the necessity of such a finding would, in certain circumstances, lead to strange results. Suppose, a man is seriously ill with cancer (a disease which must be so far as we know prove fatal) and makes a gift of his property. Shortly after making the gift, an earthquake ruins his house and the patient is killed by the roof falling. Would the gift made by this patient be valid, because the immediate cause of the patient's death was the earthquake and not cancer? But even if it were necessary to come to a finding as to the actual cause of death in the present case, I should be prepared to infer from the evidence of Dr. Yar Mohammad, that the cause of the patient's death was in fact the liver disease which in Dr. Yar Mohammad's opinion was either cancer of the liver or abscess of the liver. It has thus been established in this case (1) that at the time of making the gift the donor was suffering from a serious abdominal illness which was either cancer of the liver or abscess of the liver, and that he died, in all probability of this illness, 17 days later, (2) that he was at the time of the gift under an apprehension of death and (3) that the patient at the time of the gift was prevented from pursuing his ordinary avocations. In these circumstances, I would hold that the trial Court has rightly found the gift to be invalid and I would affirm the decision on this point.

As regards the effect of this decision, the trial Court was in my view right in invalidating the whole gift and not merely the excess over one-third. It is apparent from such authorities, as Mulla (p. 113 read with p. 122) that a death-bed gift stands on the same footing as a bequest. In the present case, we are concerned with a gift to an heir. Now as regards the bequest to an heir, the law as given by Mulla, para. 103 at p. 113, is that a bequest to an heir is invalid unless the other heirs consent. Similarly, in regard to a gift, in s. 114 on p. 122 of his work, Mulla says that a death-bed gift cannot take effect if made in favour of an heir, unless the other heirs consent thereto. It is unnecessary for us to consider the effect of the distinction between a gift to an heir and a gift to a stranger which has been drawn in certain authorities: vide Wazir Jan v. Sayyid Attaf Ali (6), at p. 361. There is ample authority for the proposition so far as Sunni Law is concerned that a death-bed gift to an heir is void in toto in the absence of consent by the other heirs: vide Fazal Ahmad v. Rahim Bibi (7), and Sharof Ali Abdul Ali v. Safiaboo (8). I would therefore affirm the finding of the lower Court. For these reasons, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

DAVIS, C. J. AND LOBO, J.

VASUMAL VALIRAM—APPELLANT

versus

KARAMOHAND MANGHANMAL

AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XVII, r. 1; O. X, rr. 1, 2, O. XVIII, O. VIII, r. 3, O. IX, r. 6, O. XXXVII, r. 2—Defendant summoning no evidence and applying for adjournment on sham pretext—Court's discretion in refusing adjournment held properly exercised—Court recording statement of Pleader after framing issues—Statement held fell under O. X, r. 1 and not under r. 2—But even under O. X, r. 1 it could not be recorded—O. X, r. 2 ought not to be utilized to supersede procedure for trial prescribed by O. XVIII—Procedure followed held illegal—Even against ex parte defendant, claim must be proved—Injunction—Prayer for perpetual injunction restraining mortgagor from dealing with mortgaged property—Interim injunction issued to mortgagor—Order allowing relief for injunction to be dropped at hearing held not justified.

Where the defendant who is present in Court summons no evidence and applies for adjournment on the pretext of being ill, the Court uses its discretion properly if it refuses the adjournment on the ground that the defendant is shamming and this discretion cannot be interfered with.

In a suit against the mortgagor and the mortgagee for a declaration that the mortgagor had no interest in the mortgaged property and that the plaintiff was absolutely entitled to the same, the Court framed the issues and examined the mortgagee's Counsel and recorded his statement to the effect that he did not know how the mortgagor acquired title to the mortgaged property;

Held, that the statement of the Counsel fell not under O. X, r. 2 but under r. 1 and that the same could not be recorded even under r. 1.

The power given by O. X, r. 2, Civil P. C., to examine any party present in Court is to be used by the Judge only when he finds it necessary to obtain from such party information on any material questions relating to the suit. It ought not to be employed so as to supersede the ordinary procedure at a trial as prescribed in O. XVIII, Civil P. C. [p. 85, col. 1.]

The plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was entitled to the last male-holder's estate as the next reversioner. On the date fixed for hearing the Judge adopted extraordinary procedure in supersession of the provisions of O. XVIII, of examining the defendant (widow) and recording his admission as to the plaintiff's relation with the last male-holder with a view to obviate the recording of evidence and thus to expedite the disposal of the suit. Then both the parties closed their case without adducing any evidence and the Court decreed the suit.

Held, that the procedure amounted to a misuse of r. 2, O. X, since the examination of the defendant could not be said to be necessary in order to obtain information on any material question relating to the suit. The burden was on the plaintiff to establish by evidence that the estate of the last male-holder, their uncle, had vested in him, that he was the reversioner after the widow's death entitled to sue, and this burden could not be said to have been discharged by the statement. The fact that it was nobody's case that there existed any reversioner nearer than the plaintiff was no answer. The plaintiff was bound to go into the witness box and prove his title as the next reversioner after the death of the widow. 134 Ind. Cas. 869 (1) and 102 Ind. Cas. 167 (2), relied on. [p. 85, col. 2; p. 86, col. 1.]

Even when a defendant is ex parte the claim against him must be proved before there can be a decree. 34 Ind. Cas. 235 (8), relied on. [p. 87, col. 1.]

In a suit against the mortgagor and the mortgagee, on the basis of the prayer for a perpetual injunction in the plaint restraining the mortgagor from dealing with the mortgaged property, an interim injunction had been issued and the relief for injunction was allowed to be dropped at the hearing.

Held, that the order permitting relief for injunction to be dropped at the hearing was not justified.

F. A. against the judgment and decree of the First Class Sub-Judge, Hyderabad, dated February 7, 1938.

Mr. Khanchand Gopaldas, for the Appellant (Defendant No. 2.)

Messrs. Javhermal Villoitrai and Fatehchand Asudomal, for Respondents Nos. 3 and 1 and 2 (Defendant No. 1 and Plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2) respectively.

Lobo, J.—This is a first appeal against the judgment and decree of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Hyderabad who decreed suit No. 76 of 1937 of that Court filed by respondents Nos. 1 and 2 against the appellant and respondent No. 3. The facts giving rise to this litigation and the course of proceedings in the suit need to be set out in some detail for a proper understanding of the points involved. Manghanmal and Rochiram, sons of Sajanmal, were separated Hindu brothers. Rochiram died in 1903, leaving no issue but two widows, Pabulbai and Manghulbai. He left a considerable amount of property movable and immovable and a business. All this property came into the hands of the widows. Pabulbai died in 1913. On October 25, 1926 Manghulbai executed a document, Ex. 53, in the case headed "anjamnama" wherein inter alia it was provided;

"After I die whatever property remains at that time shall be inherited by Bhai Karamchand and Bhai Naraindas sons of Manghanmal, and their children (except Harchandrai, son of Karamchand half to half)."

Manghulbai died in February 1937. The two plaintiffs in the suit are the sons of Manghanmal, brother of Rochiram, referred to in Ex. 53; defendant No. 1 Narsingdas is the son of plaintiff Karamchand. It appears that in June 1937, some months after the death of Manghulbai mutation of names in respect of some immovable properties belonging to Rochiram was effected in the revenue records. Exhibits 2, 3 and 4 in the case are extracts from the revenue records of the Shahdadpur taluqa of the Nawabshah District and show that six city survey numbers were transferred to the names of "Karamchand Manghanmal, manager, joint family and Naraindas Manghanmal, manager, joint family." In the column "Nature and origin of title" are inserted the words "By inheritance from Manghulbai deceased." In the "Remarks" column the mutation is shown to have been the result of a statement made to the city survey officer on July 4, 1937. By a document dated August 12, 1937, Ex. 52, in the case Naraindas, defendant No. 1 mortgaged with defendant No. 2 for a sum of Rs. 1,000 a As. 2-8 share in five immovable properties belonging originally to Rochiram deceased. His title to this As. 2-8 share and his right to mortgage it is thus set out in Ex. 52:

"According to the will dated October 25, 1926 made by the deceased Manghulbai, widow of Seth Rochiram, resident of Tando Adam, and registered in the office of the Sub-Registrar Shahdadpur on November 16, 1926 in Book No. Karamchand, son of Manghanmal, and his heirs have eight annas share in the entire property. In accordance with that, my share is As. 2-8 (two annas eight pies)."

It appears again from Exs. 2 to 4 extracts from the record of rights of the Shahdadpur taluqa, that this mortgage was noted in the "Remarks" column on October 1, 1937. In October 1937 plaintiffs filed the present suit for declaration and injunction. The plaint recites the death of Rochiram and of his two widows, refers to and specifies a fairly large estate movable and immovable as being left by Rochiram to which the plaintiffs state they are entitled after the death of Pabulbai and Manghulbai as next reversioners; it refers to the mortgage effected by defendant No. 1 on the basis of the document, Ex. 53, executed by Manghubai which document it states "does not create any rights in favour of defendant No. 1 and is not in any way binding on the plaintiffs." The prayer clause in the suit includes a prayer for a declaration (a) that the plaintiffs are full and exclusive owners of the properties mentioned in Schs. A and B attached to the plaint and that defendant No. 1 has no right or interest in the same; (b) a prayer for a declaration that "the mortgage executed by defendant No. 1 in favour of defendant No. 2 is illegal and not binding upon the plaintiffs in any way" and (c) a prayer for "perpetual injunction to defendant No. 1 restraining him from alienating, dealing with or in any way interfering or intermeddling with the properties in suit."

The learned Advocate for the appellant stated from the bar that the plaintiffs also applied under O. XXXIX, rr. 1 and 2 for an interim injunction against defendant No. 1 that their prayer was granted and defendant No. 1 was restrained by a temporary injunction during the pendency of the suit from alienating, dealing with or in any way interfering or intermeddling with the properties in suit. We do not find anything in the paper book relating to this interim injunction, but the statement of the learned Advocate for the appellant has not been controverted and we have every reason to believe therefore that the plaintiff did obtain during the pendency of the suit an interim injunction against defendant No. 1. Defendant No. 1 put in no appearance and no written statement; defendant No. 2 the mortgagee, however, filed a written statement wherein he denied almost every allegation put forward by the plaintiffs. Some paragraphs of this written statement must be set out in extenso. Paragraph 5 of the written statement reads thus:

"As regards paras. 2 and 3 it is submitted that this defendant has no knowledge of the statements contained therein and the same are accordingly denied and plaintiffs put to the proof thereof.

In paras. 2 and 3 of the plaint the connection between the deceased Kochiram and the plaintiffs in the suit is set out. Paragraph 6 of the written statement reads:

"As regards para. 4 it is submitted that so far as this defendant is aware and (has) learnt on enquiries, the property mortgaged with this defendant had been allotted exclusively to defendant No. 1, in pursuance of some family arrangement between the plaintiffs and defendant No. 1's brother; and it was with the knowledge and acquiescence of the plaintiffs and the brother of defendant No. 1 that the defendant took mortgage of a share in the property from defendant No. 1....

Paragraph 7 of the written statement states:

"The defendant is not aware of the property left by Manghubai and the plaintiffs are therefore put to proof of it. The defendant further repudiates the plaintiffs alleged claim regarding the property mortgaged with this defendant by defendant No. 1. It is further submitted that this defendant is a bona fide mortgagee for value without notice of any defect in the title to it of defendant No. 1. The plaintiffs never objected to the mortgage by defendant No. 1 and it was due to their conduct and representations that the defendant was induced to take the property in mortgage; the plaintiffs therefore are estopped from questioning the defendant's mortgage."

Paragraph 9 of the written statement is important and reads:

"As regards para. 8 it is submitted that this defendant is not aware that the plaintiffs are the reversioners or that they are the only reversioners; the plaintiffs' claim as such is therefore denied. In any event, it is submitted that the plaintiffs have no reversionary or other right or interest in the property mortgaged with this defendant. It is further denied that the plaintiffs are entitled to any declaration or any other relief in respect of the property mortgaged with the defendant."

Paragraph 8 of the plaint to which para. 9 above is a reply sets out the plaintiffs' title to the property in suit which is the foundation of their prayer for a declaration. In para. 10 of the written statement, defendant No. 2 states: "All other paragraphs are denied" The following issues were framed on December 17, 1937:

"1. Is defendant No. 2 a bona fide mortgagee for value without notice as alleged in para. 7 of the written statement?

2. Are plaintiffs estopped from questioning the defendants' mortgage as alleged in para. 7 of the written statement?

3. Is the mortgage deed binding upon the plaintiffs?

4. Whether plaintiffs are reversionary heirs of Manghubai's husband?

5. Whether defendant No. 1 has any legal title to the property?

6. What should the decree be?"

On the same date the learned Judge examined Mr. Tilokchand, Advocate for defendant No. 2, and the following statement was recorded: "I cannot say how defendant No. 1 acquired title to the property mortgaged by him with defendant No. 2." The suit came on for hearing on January 19, 1938. It does not appear from the record whether the plaintiffs were present. But defendant No. 1 was absent and defendant No. 2 though in Court presented an application for adjournment signed by his Advocate which reads thus:

"It is submitted on behalf of the defendant, Vassumal that since the last hearing the defendant was lying ill and was under the treatment of Dr. Parmanand at Tando Adam, for the last fortnight. He was therefore unable to summon evidence. He is feeling feverish even now. Accordingly, it is prayed that this Hon'ble Court will be pleased to adjourn the hearing of the case to some other date to enable the defendant to summon evidence through the Court and proceed with the case."

With the following order the learned Judge rejected the application: "The defendant has summoned no evidence. Mr. Santdas objects, and rightly too. The defendant is probably shamming." It would appear that the next thing that the learned Judge did was to examine defendant No. 2, for it appears the following statement was recorded: "Statement of Vassumal: Karamchand and Naraindas are sons of Manghanmal. Manghanmal and Rochiram are brothers." This statement has been signed by Vassumal, defendant No. 2. The diary of the case shows that the plaintiffs' Advocate offered no evidence and closed his case. Defendant No. 2 did not go into the witness box and his Advocate also stated that he closed his case. The matter was adjourned for arguments to January 24, 1938. On that date an Advocate filed a rakalatnama for defendant No. 1. The learned Judge however refused to hear him. He heard arguments of the Advocates for the plaintiffs and defendant No. 2 and on February 7, 1938 delivered judgment granting the plaintiffs "the declaration prayed for" with costs. In the judgment it is stated that at the trial of the case the Advocate for the plaintiffs gave up the relief of injunction which he had sought against defendant No. 1.

The learned Advocate who appears for the appellants before us has urged several points. He has contended that the learned Judge erred in refusing the application, Ex. 44 for adjournment presented on behalf of defendant No. 2 on January 19, 1938, the date of trial. The refusal of this application, argued the learned Advocate, was arbitrary and harsh and resulted in a denial of justice to defendant No. 2, the only contesting defendant. He has argued further that the procedure adopted by the learned Judge in recording the statement of defendant No. 2 and in failing to record any evidence on behalf of the plaintiffs was not only extraordinary but unwarranted by law. He argued, thirdly, that an examination of the record as it stood made it manifest that the plaintiffs had failed to prove their case; that there was an entire want of evidence; that there was no proof that the plaintiffs were the next reversioners after the death of Manghulbai entitled to the estate left by the deceased Rochiram; there was no proof that the plaintiffs were in possession of that estate and in absence of proof on these points the learned Judge could not in law grant the plaintiffs the declaration decreed in their favour.

The learned Advocate for respondent No. 3, the original defendant No. 1, further argued that as against respondent No. 3 the decree was ex parte and that this ex parte decree had been passed against respondent No. 3 without any proof of the plaintiffs' claim. We do not think that there is any substance whatever in the first contention raised by the learned Advocate for the appellant and our experience of the artifices adopted by defendants in the moffusil to obtain adjournments of cases which they are not in a position to proceed with is sufficient to deter us from interfering in this case with the discretion exercised by the learned Judge; for we feel no doubt that if the learned Judge who had all the facts before him felt that there was any good faith in the application Ex. 44, he would not have failed to grant a short adjournment to the learned Advocate for the appellant. But it appears to us that the remaining contentions of the learned Advocate for the appellant are sound and that the procedure adopted by the learned Judge was unusual and unwarranted by law and has resulted in a miscarriage of Justice which calls for interference on our part. Order X, Civil P. O. provides for the examination of the parties by the Court, r. 1 provides:

"At the first hearing of the suit the Court shall ascertain from each party or his Pleader whether he admits or denies such allegations of fact as are made in the plaint or written statement (if any) of the opposite party, and as are not expressly or by necessary implication admitted or denied by the party against whom they are made. The Court shall record such admissions and denials."

Rule 2 of O. X, Civil P. O provides:

"At the first hearing of the suit or at any subsequent hearing, any party appearing in person or present in Court or any person able to answer any material questions relating to the suit by whom such party or his Pleader is accompanied, may be examined orally by the Court and the Court may, if it thinks fit, put in the course of such examination questions suggested by either party."

The statement, Ex. 35, of the learned Advocate for defendant No. 2 recorded by the learned Judge on December 17, 1937 obviously does not fall under r. 2; it can only fall under r. 1 and it appears to us that even under r. 1 that statement should not have been recorded. The learned Advocate for defendant No. 2 was asked the nature of the title of defendant No. 1 who had executed a mortgage in favour of defendant No. 2. The rule however refers only to admissions or denials of allegations of fact made in the plaint or written statement of the opposite party which have not expressly or by necessary implication been admitted or denied by the party against whom they are made. We cannot therefore see what justification the learned Judge had for recording Ex. 35. The procedure adopted by the learned Judge on January 19, 1938 in recording the statement Ex. 48 was in our opinion even more objectionable and a procedure which has been condemned by their Lordships of the Privy Council. January 19, 1938 was the date fixed for the trial of the suit and in the ordinary course the learned Advocate for the plaintiffs would open his case and lead his evidence. In the present case defendant No. 2 had denied almost every allegation made by the plaintiffs in their plaint and the issues in the suit clearly indicate that the burden of proof in the case was primarily at least upon the plaintiffs, for Issues No. 4 which reads "whether plaintiffs are reversioners of Manghulbai's husband?" goes to the very root of the plaintiffs' case.

In the case in Manmohandas v. Ramdai (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council have held that the power given by O. X, r. 2, Civil P. O. to examine any party present in Court is to be used by the Judge only when he finds it necessary to obtain from such party information on any material questions relating to the suit. It ought not to be employed so as to supersede the ordinary procedure at a trial as prescribed in O. XVIII, Civil P. O. In the case before their Lordships the proceedings at the trial had been opened by the Court calling upon one of the defendants to give evidence not on any specific points but on the whole case, and the witness was then cross-examined by the parties. The ground put forward by the learned Judge for adopting this procedure was that the defendant knew "most of the affair" which the Court had to investigate. Nevertheless, their Lordships held that this deviation from the normal and proper procedure was not justified in the absence of more cogent reasons.

It may be that in the case before us the learned Judge has not departed quite to the same extent from the normal and proper procedure, but we have no doubt whatever that he has misused the provisions of O. X, r. 2, Civil P. O. and for this there is no justification. It was not a case where the examination of defendant No. 2 was necessary in order to obtain information on any material question relating to the suit. It would appear that the learned Judge adopted this extraordinary procedure to obviate the recording of evidence thus to expedite the disposal of the suit. As we have said before, the suit was set down for trial on January 19. The learned Advocate for the plaintiffs was present. There is no reason to believe that the plaintiffs themselves were not present; the learned Advocate for defendant No. 2 was present and so was defendant No. 2 and we can see no reason why the learned Judge should not have followed the ordinary procedure laid down for the hearing of a suit and examination of witnesses in O. XVIII, Civil P. O. The learned Judge in his judgment states:

"The statement recorded by me Ex. 48 is not a statement under O. XII, r. 5, nor have I on that basis decreed the suit."

That may be so, but whether the statement Ex. 48 is or is not excluded from consideration, it cannot in our opinion be said that the plaintiffs have proved their case. The learned Judge states:

"Relationship being admitted the question who the preferential heir is or is not, is a matter to be decided on legal authority. Therefore, in my opinion there is no necessity that the plaintiffs should have proved effectively by coming into the box that they were the preferential heirs."

We cannot agree. The burden of proving Issue No. 4 lay on the plaintiffs. It was for them to establish by evidence that the estate of Rochiram, their uncle, had vested in them, that they were the reversioners after Manghulbai's death entitled to sue, and this burden cannot be said to have been discharged by the statement Ex. 48, by a reference to the document Ex. 53 and by reference to Mulla's Hindu Law, s. 43. In the case in Jivtri v. Gendan Singh (2), it was held by a Bench of the Allahabad High Court that "it is incumbent on a plaintiff seeking to succeed to property as reversioners to establish affirmatively the particular relationship which he puts forward."

He is also bound to satisfy the Court that to the best of his knowledge there are no nearer heirs."

The learned Judge states that it was nobody's case that there existed any reversioners nearer than the plaintiffs, but this is no answer. The plaintiffs were bound to go into the witness box and prove their title as next reversioners after the death of Manghulbai, Rochiram's widow. We think that in these circumstances there is much to say for the argument of the learned Advocate for the appellant that this unusual procedure adopted by the learned Judge has not only deprived defendant No. 2 of the right of cross-examining the plaintiffs, a right which he would have had and of which he would have effectively availed himself had the plaintiffs or either of them stepped into the witness-box, but that as a consequence the case of the plaintiffs remains unproved.

We do not feel that the plaintiffs kept out of the witness-box merely because on the recording of Ex. 48 their learned Advocate felt that no evidence was called for on behalf of the plaintiffs. We are far more inclined to think that the plaintiffs had other reasons for not entering the witness-box. The learned Advocate for the appellant has taken us through the document Ex. 53 and the extracts from the record of rights Exs. 2, 3 and 4 and we think that there is some substance in his argument that these documents read in combination indicate some family arrangement as a result of which Ex. 53 was executed by Manghulbai and that the plaintiffs apprehending that defendant No. 2 might be able in his cross-examination of the plaintiffs on the documents Exs. 2 to 4 and Ex. 53 to establish a legal title in defendant No. 1 on the basis of which the mortgage to defendant No. 2 could be upheld, adopted the ruse of keeping themselves out of the witness box. It is true no issue had been framed as to any family arrangement, but some reference to a family arrangement is to be found in para. 6 of the written statement of defendant No. 2. But whether our suspicions in this matter are well founded or not, the fact remains that on the record as it stands, the plaintiffs have failed to prove the necessary title to obtain the declaration which has been decreed in their favour.

They have equally failed to prove that they were in possession of the property in suit so as to entitle them to the declaration prayed for under s. 42, Specific Relief Act. This is clearly covered by Issue No. 6. "What should the decree be?" In the plaint the plaintiffs have alleged that they were in possession. The allegation has been denied in the written statement both specifically and generally and it was for the plaintiffs to prove that they were in possession and on their failing to do so they were clearly not entitled to a declaration such as has been decreed in their favour. Lastly, in regard to the arguments placed before us by the learned Advocate for the appellant it appears to us that the learned Judge failed to exercise a judicial discretion in permitting the learned Advocate for the plaintiffs at the hearing of the suit, to give up the relief of injunction which had been sought against defendant No. 1. On the basis of the prayer for a perpetual injunction in the plaint, an interim injunction had been issued to defendant No. 1 and we can see no justification in these circumstances for the action of the learned Judge in permitting this relief to be dropped at the hearing of the suit, and we have every reason to believe that this was yet another means adopted by the learned Judge to expedite disposal of this suit and avoid troublesome questions of court-fees which might have necessitated an adjournment of the case. With reference to defendant No. 1 the learned Judge states in his judgment:

"Before I close I must touch one point and that is the appearance of defendant No. 1 through a Pleadar on the date of arguments. He has, I have already shown, not filed any written statement and not appeared on the date on which the case was fixed for final hearing, but on the day of arguments, his Counsel appeared and wanted to argue the case. I cannot understand that an ex parte defendant, who filed no written statement and who did not appear on the date of final hearing, could argue in the case. The Counsel for defendant No. 1 has cited various rulings to show that he could appear and take up and argue the case at the stage he chose to appear. No attempt was made to get the ex parte order set aside... In this case, I have not fixed any case for ex parte hearing. All that I have done is that I have not allowed the Counsel for the defendants to argue the case. In my opinion, arguments can only be based on facts or on legal points raised in the defence or brought out in evidence. In this case, there has been no evidence recorded and the Counsel for defendant No. 2 has already argued the case both for himself and defendant No. 1 because the interests of the two are identical."

The learned Advocate for defendant No. 1 respondent No. 3, has referred us to O. IX, r. 7, Civil P. O., and has cited several rulings in support of his argument that the learned Judge was bound in law to permit the Advocate for defendant No. 1 to argue the case on the date fixed for arguments, although there had been no appearance by defendant No. 1 prior to that date. He has cited before us the cases referred to in Pattanna Neeli Chetty (3), Kala Gella & Co. v. Shivji (4), Venkata Subbiah v. Lakshminarasimham (5) and Satyendra Nath v. Narendru Nath (6) and the learned Advocate for respondents No. 1 and 2 has pointed out that the decision of a single Judge of this Court in Kala Gella & Co. v. Shivji (4), has been dissented from by another single Judge of this Court in the case Gangaram Samandas v. Deomal Nihalchand (7). But, however interesting this argument may be, it is quite unnecessary for the purposes of this appeal to pursue it, because it appears to us that as in the case of defendant No. 2, so in the case of defendant No. 1 who was ex parte the plaintiffs have been given a decree without any proof of their claim. Even when a defendant is ex parte, the claim against him must be proved before there can be a decree. The case reported in J. B. Ross & Co. v. C. R. Seriven (8) is very much in point. In that case the plaintiffs sued the defendants on a contract for damages for failure on the part of the defendants to take delivery of certain goods, the damages being claimed on the basis of the difference between the contract price of the goods and the marked price thereof. The defendants did not appear or file any written statement. On the date of hearing the defendants appeared and applied for leave to defend the suit on the ground that there had been some misunderstanding. The Court refused the application and without hearing any evidence whatever decreed the plaintiffs suit ex parte. It was held that the procedure adopted was illegal and that the decree must be reversed and the case remanded to the lower Court for retrial. The learned Judges held that a verification of the plaint was not evidence on which the suit could be decreed whether the adversary did or did not appear. It was further held that there was no legal evidence on the record on which the decree made in favour of the plaintiffs might be supported and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to succeed on the basis of an implied admission of their claim by the defendants. Sir Lancelot Sanderson, O. J. held that "the fundamental principle is that the plaintiff when he comes to Court must prove his case and must prove it to the satisfaction of the Court."

Woodroffe, J. held that "no decree can be legally made in any case without any evidence except in cases of suits governed by the provisions of O. XXXVII, Civil P. O."

Speaking of the procedure in the Calcutta High Court this learned Judge added :

"In this Court it has always been the practice in undefended cases to take evidence as defined in the Evi. Act, namely oral statements of witnesses and documents proved before the Court" and Mukerjee, J., the third Judge in this case, has said : "Great caution should be exercised when suits are heard ex parte." This observation, he said, was a universal application, but applied with special force to cases where unliquidated damages were claimed. For these reasons we think that the judgment and decree of the learned First Class Subordinate Judge must be reversed. Ordinarily, we should have allowed this appeal with costs and made no further order thus dismissing the plaintiffs' suit. But as we feel that the conduct of the plaintiff-respondents and of their Advocate might to some extent have been influenced in this case by the attitude of the learned Judge who was trying, we think the proper order will be to allow this appeal with costs, reverse the decree and direct that the record of this suit be returned to the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Hyderabad in order that the suit be proceeded with and disposed of according to law. We order accordingly.

Order accordingly.

OUDH CHIEF COURT

Second Civil Appeal No. 455 of 1937

February 26, 1941

GHULAM HASAN, J.

Mirza MOHAMMAD KAZIM HUSAIN

—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

Mst. NADRI BEGAM AND ANOTHER—

DEPENDANTS—RESPONDENT

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 28—Fraud on registration—Criterion is intention of parties—Absence of collusion between donor and donee—Registration of gift deed cannot be challenged—Muhammadan Law—Gift—Hiba-bil-iwaz—Essentials—Actual delivery of possession, if necessary—Declaration as to, in deed—Whether binding.

In determining whether the requirements of the law as to registration have been complied with, the intention of the parties is the criterion by which the matter must be decided. Where the donor intended to vest the property in the donee, the inclusion of the property in a gift deed cannot be held to be a device to evade the Registration Act. 161 Ind. Cas. 29 (1), followed. [p 90, col. 1.]

In the absence of any collusion between the donor and the donee the registration of the deed cannot be challenged as being defective in law. 77 Ind. Cas.

464 (2) and Biswanath Prasad v. Chandra Narayan Chowdhuri (3), relied on. [p. 90, col. 2.]

In the case of a hiba-bil-iwaz, only two conditions are necessary to establish the validity of such a transaction, (1) actual payment of consideration (iwaz), and (2) a bona fide intention on the part of the donor to divest himself in praesenti of the property and to confer it upon the donee. The adequacy of consideration is not material; but whatever its amount, it must be actually and bona fide paid. As regards the second condition, the circumstances that no mutation was either claimed or obtained by the donee in the lifetime of the donor and that possession remained with the donor till his death, are wholly irrelevant. Delivery of possession, is not at all necessary in the case of a hiba-bil-iwaz. The declaration in the deed by the donor as regards the delivery of possession to the donee is binding upon the heirs and representatives of the donor and is quite sufficient to establish delivery of possession even if it is necessary to do so, Sheikh Muhammad Mumtaz Ahmad v. Zubaida Jan (4) and 136 Ind. Cas. 385 (5), relied on. [p. 90, col. 2; p. 91, col. 1.]

S. C. A. against the order of the Civil Judge of Fyzabad, dated September 15, 1937.

Mr. H. Husain, for the Appellant.

Mr. Akhlaque Husain, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of the dismissal of his suit by the lower Appellate Court.

The facts giving rise to this appeal may be briefly stated. One Mirza Dilawar Husain had two wives, Ahmadi Begam and Nadri Begam. From his first wife he had three sons, one of whom is the present plaintiff-appellant and the other is defendant No. 2 in the case, the third son having predeceased his father. From his second wife, who is defendant No. 1 in the case, he had several children, whom it is not necessary to mention for the purposes of the present appeal. The plaintiff's allegation was that his mother, Ahmadi Begam, was the original owner of the property in dispute. Ahmadi Begam died in 1914 leaving her husband and three sons, named Jafar Husain, Kazim Husain and Abid Husain. The husband succeeded to the one-fourth share and the three sons to equal shares in the remainder of the inheritance under the Muhammadan Law. On June 27, 1924, Mirza Dilawar Husain executed a deed of gift (Ex. 3) of two annas share out of the sixteen annas in favour of his three sons from Ahmadi Begam and delivered possession to them. On the same date he executed another deed of gift (Ex. A-5) in favour of his second wife, Mst. Nadri Begam, defendant No. 1 in lieu of her dower debt, in respect of the remaining two annas share inherited by him. Mirza Dilawar Husain died on January 24, 1935. The plaintiff challenged the deed of gift executed in favour of the defendant No. 1 as being invalid on the ground that it was neither followed by possession nor was it properly registered. It was further challenged on the ground that it was not meant to transfer the property to defendant No. 1 and that it was fictitiously executed in order to defeat and defraud the creditors to whom Mirza Dilawar Husain was deeply indebted. The plaintiff, therefore, claimed that the defendant No. 1 had no right in the property conveyed to her by the gift and consequently all the heirs of Mirza Dilawar Husain were entitled to legal shares therein. The plaintiff tried to obtain mutation of names in respect of his share in the said property on the death of Mirza Dilawar Husain but the Revenue Court ordered mutation in favour of defendant No. 1, who set up the deed of gift in her favour. The plaintiff thereupon brought the suit out which the present appeal arises for possession of a 1-24th share claiming 1-48th share by inheritance and 1-48th share of defendant No. 2 which he claimed on the basis of an oral gift from him.

Defendant No. 2 supported the plaintiff's claim.

Defendant No. 1 defended her title to the two annas share in the property in suit as a donee from Mirza Dilawar Husain. She further put the alternative case that she was entitled to retain possession of the property in lieu of her dower debt of Rs. 14,000. She denied the oral gift by defendant No. 2 in favour of the plaintiff and pleaded an estoppel.

The trial Court decreed the suit holding that the execution of the alleged deed of gift (Ex. A-5) was not proved and that its genuineness and validity had not been established. It, however, held that the plaintiff had not established that the deed of gift was executed in order to defraud the creditors. The oral gift by defendant No. 2 in favour of the plaintiff was held established. Upon the question of dower the finding of the trial Court was that the dower of defendant No. 1 was fixed at Rs. 105 only and that she was in possession of the property left by Mirza Dilawar Husain and that she was entitled to remain in possession of this property till this dower debt was paid off. The plaintiff's suit for possession was decreed on condition of the plaintiff's paying to the defendant No. 1 the proportionate amount of dower due.

The defendant No. 1 appealed and the lower Appellate Court held that the deed of gift executed in her favour was satisfactorily proved and it was genuine and valid. It further held that the amount of dower of defendant No. 1 was Rs. 14,000 as stated in the deed of gift and not Rs. 105 as held by the trial Court. The finding on the question of the oral gift by defendant No. 2 in favour of the plaintiff was also set aside for the reason that possession did not accompany the oral gift. The result of the findings was that the plaintiff's suit was dismissed.

The plaintiff has preferred this second appeal against the aforesaid dismissal of his suit.

The first question that has been argued before me on behalf of the appellant is that the lower Appellate Court was not justified in stating that the execution of the deed of gift (Ex. A-5) was not disputed by the plaintiff. It is contended that the finding of fact of the trial Court upon the point of execution being in favour of the plaintiff, it was the duty of the defendant No. 1, who had filed the appeal before the lower Appellate Court, to get that finding set aside and there was no occasion for the plaintiff to concede the point of execution. The lower Appellate Court appears to have referred to the two deeds of gift, namely, Exs. 3 and A-5. The execution of Ex. 3 had not been questioned in the trial Court, and as both the deeds of gift were executed and registered on the same day by the same executant and attested by the same witnesses, it is not in the slightest degree unlikely that the execution of Ex. A-5 may also have been conceded before the lower Appellate Court. There is nothing whatever to show that the above statement of fact in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is wrong. I am quite prepared, however, to determine this question and record a fresh finding under the powers vested in this Court by s. 103 of the Civil P. C. I have heard learned Counsel for the appellant on this point and have carefully considered the evidence of D. W. No. 3, Saiyid Raza Husain, who was produced to prove the execution of Ex. A-5. D. W. No. 3 is one of the attesting witnesses to the deed and swears that Mirza Dilawar Husain executed the deed of gift (Ex. A-5) and signed it in his presence. I do not see any reason whatever for not believing the evidence of this witness. In my opinion the evidence of this witness fully establishes the execution of the deed of gift (Ex. A-5).

The second point that has been raised before me on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant is that the deed of gift was not properly registered within the meaning of ss. 17 and 28 of the Indian Regis. Act. It is contended that the entire property, with the exception of plot No. 885, which was the subject-matter of the deed of gift, was situate in Tahsil Bikapur and plot No. 885 was fictitiously inserted in the deed so as to obtain registration in Fyzabad. It is urged that plot No. 885 did not belong to Mirza Dilawar Husain and the inclusion of this plot in the deed of gift was a fraud upon registration. I am of opinion that this contention is devoid of substance. It appears that one Mirza Fazal Husain originally obtained a lease of plot No. 885 for building a house from the Nazul under a deed of lease dated November 19, 1901, (Ex. 1). Fazal Husain transferred this plot by a sale deed (Ex. 2) on November 5, 1909, in favour of Ahmadi Begam for Rs. 25. This deed recites that the transferor sold a house which had fallen down along with the right of occupancy in the land. A perusal of Ex. 1 will show that the rights of the lessee under the lease were heritable inasmuch as it is clearly stated therein that the right of Govt. to resume the land arose only if the owner died heirless. It is further provided in the lease that the owner of the building situate on the land will have the right to transfer the materials of the building as well as the right of occupancy in the land, but he shall not be entitled to transfer the land itself. In other words what was prohibited by the lease was the transfer of ownership of land which undoubtedly vested in the lessor but not in the lessee. As I have already stated Fazal Husain did not purport to transfer anything more than what he was entitled to do under the strict terms of the lease granted to him. He did not transfer any rights of ownership in the land. What was transferred was a mere right of occupancy in the land along with the house which had fallen down. There can be no question therefore that Ahmadi Begam acquired the same rights under the sale which the original lessee Fazal Husain himself possessed, and it cannot be said by any stretch of reasoning that Mirza Fazal Husain violated any of the essential conditions of the lease in executing the sale deed in favour of Ahmadi Begam.

It is urged on behalf of the appellant that, according to the terms of the lease, land along with the building was liable to resumption by the Govt. if the building fell down or was allowed to fall in a state of disrepair by the owner or his transferee or in case no new building was constructed within a period of three years from the date of the demolition of the first building. The house must be deemed to have fallen down in 1903 as the sale deed (Ex. 2) undoubtedly shows. It is clear, however, that the Govt. has not chosen to exercise a right of resumption up to this time and that the land is still in the possession of the lessee's representatives. In any view of the case, whether the lessee possessed the right of transfer or not, it is a matter on which there may be a reasonable doubt. It does not follow that parties to the deed of gift were prompted by any motives of fraud in including plot No. 885 in the deed. It has been held by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Raja Inuganti Venkatarama Rao v. Raja Sobhanadri Appa Rao Bahadur Garu (L. R. 63 I. A. 169) (1) that in determining whether the requirements of the law as to registration have been complied with, the intention of the parties is the criterion by which the matter must be decided. It cannot be said in the present case that there was no intention on the part of the donor to vest the property in the donee and consequently it cannot be held that the inclusion of plot No. 885 in the deed of gift was a mere device to evade the Registration Act. Assuming for a moment that the title of Mirza Dilawar Husain to plot No. 885 was doubtful, it cannot lead to the inference that he was guilty of any fraud in including the same in the deed of gift. At any rate, there is nothing whatever to suggest any collusion between the donor and the donee or to show that defendant No. 1, a pardanashin lady, who paid a valid consideration for the deed of hiba-bil-iwaz in her favour, was a privy to any such imaginary fraud. In the absence of any collusion between the donor and the donee the registration of the deed cannot be challenged as being defective in law (see Lakshmikantaraju v. Jagannatharaju A. I. R. 1924 Madras, 281) (2). Reference may be made to the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Biswanath Prashad v. Chandra Narayan Chowdhuri (L. R. 48 I. A. 129, at 133) (3) which appear to apply fully to the facts of the present case. Their Lordships observed:—

"In coming to the conclusion that this appeal must be dismissed, their Lordships' judgment rests on the view that none of the parties ever intended that the one-kauri share in Mouza Kolhua should vest in Udit or should pass by the mortgage from him to the mortgagees. This case differs toto caelo from the case suggested in argument of a mere failure to make a good title to property dealt with by the instrument, and which both parties had intended should form part of the security."

I am satisfied that the deed of gift cannot be impugned on the ground that it was a fraud upon registration.

Lastly, it has been contended that the deed of gift is invalid on the ground that there was no bona fide intention on the part of the donor to part with the ownership of the property. It is not disputed that the deed of gift was executed in lieu of a dower debt of Rs. 2,000 out of Rs. 14,000 which was fixed at the time of the marriage. The finding of the lower Appellate Court upon this part of the case must be accepted as binding. The transaction evidenced by the deed of gift is a hiba-bil-iwaz, a term well understood in Muhammadan Law. In the case of a hiba-bil-iwaz, it has been laid down in a series of cases by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, that only two conditions are necessary to establish the validity of such a transaction, (1) actual payment of consideration (iwaz), and (2) a bona fide intention on the part of the donor to divest himself in praesenti of the property and to confer it upon the donee. The adequacy of consideration is not material; but whatever its amount, it must be actually and bona fide paid. It is not denied that the first condition is fully satisfied in the present case. As regards the second condition, it is urged that no mutation was either claimed or obtained by the donee in the lifetime of the donor and that possession remained with the donor till his death. Both these circumstances in my opinion are wholly irrelevant in the case of a hiba-bil-iwaz. It is well-settled that delivery of possession, although essential in the case of a simple gift, is not at all necessary in the case of a hiba-bil-iwaz. The deed of gift contains a declaration by the donor that he has delivered possession of the property to the donee. We have also from the evidence of the defendant No. 1 herself that the donor handed over the deed to her. The declaration in the deed as regards the delivery of possession is binding upon the heirs and representatives of the donor and is quite sufficient to establish delivery of possession even if it were necessary to do so, [see Sheikh Muhammad Mumtaz Ahmad v. Zubaida Jan (L. R. 16 I. A. 205) (4) and Mohammad Sadiq Ali Khan v. Fakhr Jahan Begam (L. R. 59 I. A., 1) (5)]. Had Mirza Dilawar Husain been alive, he would have been estopped from challenging the deed of gift on the ground of absence of delivery of possession or non-divestment of his interest in the property gifted. The plaintiff as his heir is in no better position and must be held bound by the declaration made by the donor. The lower Appellate Court rightly observes that the donee was admittedly a pardanashin lady and it was but natural that her husband should manage the property on her behalf as long as he lived. The absence of mutation is fully explained in the evidence of D. W. No. 1, Muzaffar Husain, a witness related to both parties. He stated that on being asked to mutate the property in favour of his wife, Mirza Dilawar Husain said that if he did so he would lose his lambardari dues. He, however, acknowledged the fact that he had gifted the property. The witness further stated that mutation on the basis of Ex. 3 was also not effected for the same reason.

It is also pointed out on behalf of the appellant that even after the gift Mirza Dilawar Husain carried on litigation in his own name and reference is made to Exs. 20 to 24. This action of Mirza Dilawar Husain was perfectly natural in the circumstances as mutation stood in his name and no mutation had been made in favour of his wife.

Another circumstance pointed out in this connection is that there was a family settlement in the year 1928 between Mirza Dilwar Husain and his three sons from his first wife, whereby it was agreed that defendant No. 2 was to get the entire share in patti Ahmadi Begam in village Tendwa and he was to relinquish his share in other villages in the said patti in favour of other co-sharers in lieu thereof. To this settlement defendant No. 1 was not a party and it is argued therefore that had she possessed any interest in the deed of gift, she would not have been ignored in the family settlement. In this connection Ex. A-3, a deed of release, executed by defendant No. 1 on June 13, 1929, is also referred to. It appears from Ex. A-3 that defendant No. 2 wanted to mortgage village Tendwa, which had been allotted to him under the family settlement for satisfying certain debts but the mortgagee was not prepared to take the mortgage from him in view of the interest of defendant No. 1 in the village under the deed of gift executed in her favour by Mirza Dilawar Husain. The deed recites that defendant No. 1 had no objection to the family settlement that had been arrived at and she claimed no share in village Tendwa which defendant No. 2 intended to mortgage. The obvious motive of this deed of release was to afford satisfaction to the mortgagee against any claim which defendant No. 1 might advance on account of the deed of gift in her favour.

There is no statement whatever in this deed of release that the deed gift was a fictitious transaction not intended to pass any title to her. On the other hand, the fact that it became necessary to obtain a deed of release from her in respect of her share in village Tendwa proves that defendant No. 1 was regarded as possessed of an interest in the property by virtue of the deed of gift. The execution of this deed of release in my opinion far from showing that it was not given effect to on the other hand leads to a contrary inference. The lower Appellate Court believed the evidence of D. W. No. 1, who stated that in lieu of the release of her share in Tendwa she had got extra share in other villages along with other co-sharers, that her husband represented her in the family settlement and her interests were fully safeguarded by him. This evidence stands unrebutted and there is no reason to doubt the veracity of this statement.

Lastly it is pointed out that in spite of the gift Mirza Dilawar Husain dealt with the property as his own, and he along with his two sons made a mortgage of Solepur on December 2, 1930 (vide Ex. 10). There is nothing whatever to show that this mortgage was brought home to defendant No. 1. In any case even if she was aware of it, this change of intention on the part of Dilawar Husain does not destroy the interest of the defendant No. 1 in the property which was the subject-matter of the gift. Solepur is only one of the four villages in dispute and as has been pointed out on behalf of the defendant No. 1 it may well be that the mortgagees under Ex. 10 was satisfied that the share of the mortgagors was an ample security for the satisfaction of his claim.

Having given my best consideration to the entire evidence and the circumstances of the case I am of opinion that the finding of the lower Appellate Court as regards the genuineness and validity of the deed of gift in favour of defendant No. 1 is perfectly correct and must be maintained.

Learned Counsel on behalf of the appellant frankly concedes that the evidence to support the plea that the deed of gift was a fraud upon the creditors is very slender.

In view of the above finding it is scarcely necessary to pursue the alternative point whether defendant No. 1 is entitled to retain possession of the property in lieu of her dower debt. The question is purely one of academic interest and need not be dealt with.

I, therefore, confirm the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal No. 122/22 of 1939

ALMOND, J. C. AND MIR AHMED, J.
INZAR GUL SAID ANWAR AND ANOTHER
—APPELLANTS

versus

HAJAB GUL TAZA GUL AND OTHERS—
RESPONDENTS

Pre-emption—Pre-emption suit decreed—Amount deposited by pre-emptor—Vendee withdrawing same—During execution proceedings by pre-emptor for possession, pre-emptor and vendee entering into compromise under which vendee paying certain amount to pre-emptor before Court, which ordering execution to be filed in full satisfaction—Compromise held out and out sale.

A pre-emption suit was decreed on payment of Rs. 1,800. This sum was deposited in Court and was taken out by the vendees. The pre-emptor subsequently applied for execution of his decree by being put in possession. But during these proceedings the pre-emptor and the vendee entered into a compromise whereby the vendees paid Rs. 2,000 to the pre-emptor to cover the cost of the land and the expenses incurred by him in the litigation and the pre-emptor agreed that the suit should be considered as dismissed. Rs. 2,000 was paid in the presence of the Court and the Court passed an order that the execution should be filed in full satisfaction;

Held, that the question whether a sale was a sale of land or not must depend on the circumstances of each particular case, and that there was an out and out sale of land by virtue of the compromise inasmuch as the land had vested in the pre-emptor by virtue of the decree when he deposited Rs. 1,800 in Court and he was at the time of the compromise the absolute owner of the property of which he could get possession by execution.

A. from the order of the Additional Judge, Peshawar, dated May 22, 1939.

Khan Bahadur Saaduddin Khan, for the Appellants.

Rai Bahadur Diwan Chand, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2, Respondent No. 4 in person.

Almond, J. C.—On March 13, 1935 the brothers of one Mohammad Nabi sold certain land to Hijabgul and Nawabgul, two brothers. On March 12, 1936, Mahammad Nabi, through his maternal uncle as his next friend, sued for pre-emption of this land and was given a decree on payment of Rs. 1,800. This sum was deposited in Court and was taken out by the vendees. Subsequently, Mohammad Nabi applied for execution of his decree by being put in possession of the land and on July 7, 1936 he and the vendees entered into a compromise whereby the vendees paid Rs. 2,000 to the minor to cover the costs of the land and the expenses incurred by Mohammad Nabi in the litigation and Mohammad Nabi agreed that the suit should be considered as dismissed. Rs. 2,000 was paid in the presence of the Court and the Court passed an order that the execution should be filed in full satisfaction. On July 8, 1937, Inzargul and Redigul sued to pre-empt this sale effected by the compromise on payment of Rs. 1,500. The suit with respect to a portion of the land only as regards which they had a right of pre-emption. Their suit was decreed on payment of Rs. 1,500 and Hijabgul and Nawabgul appealed to the District Judge against the decree. An Additional Judge accepted their appeal on the ground that what was sold by the compromise of July 7, 1936 was not land but "a chose-in-action." Inzargul and Redigul have presented a further appeal to this Court and the only point for decision by us at this stage is whether there was a sale of land by the compromise so as to give right to a claim for pre-emption.

The learned Additional Judge in coming to his conclusion relied on the Commentary in Shadilal's Law of Pre-emption, Edn. 3, p. 116. That Commentary refers to two decisions of the Lahore High Court reported in Masihuddin v. Matu Ram (1), and Bhagta v. Bir Singh, 61 Ind. Cas. 331 (2). Learned Counsel for the appellants contends that those rulings are in his favour. Learned Counsel for the respondents, on the other hand, relies on the following cases: Ghutur Singh v. Angad Pande, 41 Ind. Cas. 467 (3), Lachhman Prasad v. Chamela, 52 Ind. Cas. 170 (4), Lashkari Mal v. Ishar Singh (5), Shams-ud-din v. Ghulam Hussain (6), and Attar Chand v. Umar Hayat, 20 Ind. Cas. 556 (7). It will be necessary to examine those cases in some detail. In Masihuddin v. Matu Ram (1), property belonging to a lunatic was sold by his wife in 1883 to a man who was already the mortgagee. In 1912, after the lunatic had died, his sons sued for possession of that land on the ground that the sale was void and also for redemption from the mortgagee. They abandoned their suit in consideration of the receipt of Rs. 500 from the vendee. It was held that the sons of the lunatic had merely abandoned their rights to obtain a decision of the Court in a case which was genuinely contested and that there had not been a sale of land. In the course of the hearing of the case it was argued that to hold that the transaction was other than one of sale would defeat the law of pre-emption because all that had to be done was to go through the force of a suit and compromise. The Judges who decided that case remarked that this result did not follow, and where the facts of the case indicated that the suit and compromise are sham there was nothing to prevent the Courts from holding that the transaction was in reality a sale. It is therefore clearly indicated in that case that there might be cases in which a compromise in Court could amount to a sale. In Bhagta v. Bir Singh, 61 Ind. Cas. 331 (2), one Birsingh had sold land and house to Belasingh for Rs. 6,000. A pre-emption suit was brought for the land and was decreed on payment of Rs. 4,635-6-0. Belasingh then sued Birsingh for recovery of Rs. 1,264-10-0 which he had lost after giving credit of Rs. 100 for the house. During the hearing of that parties agreed that the house should be reconveyed to Birsingh for the sum of Rs. 100 and a decree was passed for this. Rs. 100 in favour of Belasingh. Birsingh then by a separate suit obtained possession of the house. Belasingh's son then sued for pre-emption of the sale of this house for Rs. 100. The learned Judge held that the compromise made in the suit brought by Belasingh amounted to a sale of the house and allowed it to be pre-empted.

In Ghutur Singh v. Angad Pande, 41 Ind. Cas. 467 (3), which is a judgment of the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Oudh the pre-emptor after obtaining a decree had failed to obtain possession of the land by execution within the period allowed by law and when his right to obtain possession had lapsed the vendees had repaid to him the amount for which the property had been decreed. It was held that in those circumstances there was no sale but merely a lapse of the pre-emptor's rights and that there was no transaction which could be subsequently pre-empted. It was pointed out in that case that there was a considerable difference between the sale of a subsisting right and the lapsing of that right by reason of the operation of the law of limitation and it was held that the original pre-emptor had no subsisting right which he could transfer to the vendees after the period of limitation for obtaining possession had passed. Lachhman Prasad v. Chamela, 52 Ind. Cas. 170 (4), is also a judgment of the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Oudh. In that case a person who was in possession of a certain piece of land was sued but the suit was withdrawn on terms. It was held that the compromise did not amount to a sale. The learned Judge remarked in the course of the judgment that he did not say that circumstances could not arise in which such a transaction might amount to a sale. In Lashkari Mal v. Ishar Singh (5), one Mahtab Singh had obtained a decree for pre-emption on payment of a certain sum of money. The following day, before he had deposited that money, he transferred his rights in the property to his grandson Isharsingh. It was held that the property had never vested in Mahtab Singh as it could not do so until he had fulfilled the conditions of the decree and deposited the amount in Court and that therefore he had not sold the property but only a right to obtain the property on satisfying the conditions laid down in the decree. Shams-ud-Din v. Gulam Husain (6), was a case in which a man had obtained a decree for possession of certain property on payment of Rs. 300. He was unable to pay Rs. 300 and therefore sold his rights. It was held that the transaction was not a sale of land but was a sale of his rights under the decree which could not be pre-empted :

In Attar Chand v. Umar Hayat (7). A had sold his reversionary rights to B. On the death of the widow who had a life interest A repudiated the sale and B sued him. A compromise was effected whereby half the land was decreed in B's favour. The son of A filed a suit for pre-emption and it was held that the compromise did not amount to a sale of land. In the present case we are of opinion that there was an out and out sale of land by virtue of the compromise of July 7, 1936. The land had vested in Mohammad Nabi by virtue of the decree when he deposited Rs. 1,800 in Court and he was at the time of the compromise the absolute owner of the property of which he could get possession by execution. The question of whether a sale is a sale of land or not must depend on the circumstances of each particular case. In the present case there was no genuine dispute between the parties as to their respective rights. Mohammad Nabi was absolutely entitled to get possession of the land by execution of his decree at the time when he entered into a compromise and the practical effect of his action was to sell the land to Hijabgul and Nawabgul. We therefore reverse the finding of the learned Additional Judge on this preliminary point and remand the case under O. XLI, r. 23 to the Court of the District Judge for decision of the remaining points. Stamp on appeal to be refunded: other costs in this Court to follow the event. Parties present, i. e., both plaintiffs and respondents Nos. 1 and 2 instruct to appear before District Judge on December 2, 1940.

Order accordingly.

Criminal Revision Application No. 131 of 1940

April 12, 1940

DHAVLE, J.

N. L. CARRICK—PETITIONER

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT

Criminal trial—First information report—Person not named in—Action against, if can be taken—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 155, 173, 435, 439—Cases disposed of by Sub-Divisional Officer as non-cognizable—No further investigation without order of competent Magistrate and no charge-sheet—Magistrate taking cognizance of case and transferring it to another Magistrate for trial—His act, whether judicial—If open to revision—Charge-sheet, when can be called—Final report of Police that case was non-cognizable accepted by Sub-Divisional Officer—Subsequently Court Sub-Inspector moving Magistrate on Inspector's report and copy of Government letter addressed to Deputy Inspector General of Police that cases should be tried and decided in Court—Magistrate calling for charge-sheet—There was held no proper material to put accused on trial—Magistrate held did not act judicially and order must be quashed in revision.

An action need not be confined to persons named in the first information or charged with taking a direct part in an occurrence. [p. 96, col. 1.]

Where the cases are disposed of by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate as non-cognizable there can be no further investigation under Chap. XIV of the Criminal P. O., without the order of a competent Magistrate according to s. 155 (2)—and no charge-sheet under s. 173. [p. 97, col. 1.]

Section 192 (1), Criminal P. O., empowers a Sub-Divisional Magistrate to transfer any case of which he has taken cognizance, for enquiry or trial, to any Magistrate subordinate to him. The order of transfer to another Magistrate, therefore, necessarily imports his taking cognizance of the case, and it constitutes a judicial act. Hence, the Magistrate's action in taking cognizance and transferring the case to another Magistrate for trial is a judicial matter open to scrutiny by Courts of Revision under ss. 435 and 439, Criminal P. O. [p. 96, col. 2.]

A complaint was made to the Magistrate about a cognizable offence. The investigating officer submitted a final report that the case was non-cognizable which was accepted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. The Magistrate was subsequently moved by the Court Sub-Inspector on a letter or report of the Inspector of Police and a copy of a letter from the Chief Secretary to Govt. in which it was stated that Govt. were of opinion that the counter cases should be tried and the issue decided in the Court. This letter was addressed to the Deputy Inspector General of Police, C. I. D., and was sent to the Inspector in the usual course for information and compliance. The Inspector wrote that "in face of the Govt. orders charge-sheets will have to be submitted in both the cases and he enquired if it would be regular for the Police to submit the charge-sheets suo motu or whether in order "to regularize judicial proceedings" the Sub-Divisional Officer should call for charge-sheets. Upon this the Magistrate's order was "Inspector's report and copy of Govt. orders seen. Call for a charge-sheet". On the subsequent date the Magistrate noted that the charge-sheet had been received, and transferred the case to another Magistrate for disposal, adding, "you will please have the original record called for"; the accused and the witnesses were thereafter summoned in accordance with the charge-sheet;

Held, (i) that the Magistrate was competent under the law to reconsider the order accepting the final report of the Police but he could only do so on proper materials.

(ii) that the application in revision against the order of the Magistrate calling for the charge-sheet was one to revise the judicial order of the Magistrate and not the orders of the Govt;

(iii) that neither the Inspector's report nor the copy of the Govt. orders, on which materials the order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate calling for a charge-sheet was founded, contained any relevant materials which could form the basis of that order whether by way of judicial action or as an obvious preliminary to judicial action. The Magistrate did not consider whether there were any proper materials for his putting the accused on their trial. It was clearly his duty as a judicial officer to form his own views on proper materials instead of merely carrying out the views of Govt. in his judicial work as a Magistrate. The Magistrate did not apply his judicial mind before putting the accused on his trial. As he took the judicial action upon what he took to be Govt. orders and not upon proper materials, the proceedings must be quashed. [p. 97, col. 1; p. 98, col. 1.]

Cr. R. App. against an order of the Magistrate, First Class, Jamshedpur, dated September 21, 1939.

Sir Manmathanath Mukherji, Messrs. S. S. Rakshit and Sarat Kumar Banerji, for the Petitioners.

The Assistant Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Order.—This is an application to quash the trial of the petitioner N. L. Carrick Chief Accountant of the India Copper Corporation at Ghatsila, in the following circumstances: On May 8, 1939, one A. B. Rao, a worker of the Company (as the Corporation seems to be called), wrote to the officer in charge of the Ghatsila Police Station that while he was waiting for payment, the Company's sepoys had begun to use force and one Karam Elahi and three other Pathans had caught him and Karam Elahi had pushed him and punched him twice. Shortly afterwards, A. T. Chatterji and two others also wrote to the same officer that they had been severely assaulted by the Pathan sepoys and Pathan workers, by the order of Mr. Carrick, as they were prominent members of the Workers' Union. The Sub-Inspector drew up the usual first information on A. B. Rao's letter, though the other letter was also treated as part of the same cases, and dealt with it as a case under ss. 147 and 323 of the I. P. O. In the course of the investigation that followed, Kajir Khan, a sepoy of the Company who had been injured, made a statement which formed the subject of a counter case; and this case was also investigated at the same time. On June 1, the investigating officer submitted what is known as a final report to the effect that no case of rioting was made out as the ingredients of that offence were not all proved, and that it was a non-cognizable case under s. 323, I. P. O. On June 20, this report was accepted by Mr. Khan, the Magistrate then in charge of the Sub-Division, who ordered the case to be shown in the register accordingly. On August 21, 1939, Rai Bahadur M. P. Sinha, who had by this time succeeded Mr. Khan, was moved by the Court Sub-Inspector on a letter or report of the Inspector of Police and a copy of a letter of August 3, 1939, from the Chief Secretary to Govt. in which it was stated that Govt. were of opinion that the two cases (apparently Rao's case and the counter case) should be tried and the issue decided in the Court. This letter was addressed to the Deputy Inspector General of Police, O. I. D., and was sent to the Inspector in the usual course for information and compliance. The Inspector wrote that "in face of the Govt. orders charge-sheets will have to be submitted in both the cases under s. 147 of the I. P. O." and he enquired if it would be regular for the Police to submit the charge-sheets suo motu or whether in order "to regularize judicial proceedings" the Sub-Divisional Officer should call for charge-sheets. Upon this Mr. Sinha's order was "Inspector's report and copy of Govt. orders seen. Call for a charge-sheet by August 31, 1939". On August 28, 1939, Mr. Sinha noted that the charge-sheet had been received, and transferred the case to Mr. A. T. Bajpai for disposal, adding, "You will please have the original record called for". Mr. Bajpai apparently received the record on August 30, and three days afterwards he directed the summoning of the prosecution witnesses and the production of the petitioner and six other persons who had been named as the accused in the charge-sheet and had been recently put on bail by the Police.

Regarding these facts there is no dispute, and indeed they are mere matters of record. The petitioner states in para. 6 of his petition that in consequence of the dismissal of nine clerks on May 6, 1939, for refusing to obey orders, practically the whole office staff had declared a hartal; and in the next paragraph, that thereafter Mr. Mackillingin, the General Manager of the Company, had an interview with the Hon'ble the Prime Minister of Bihar on July 24, at which he had declined to accede to the request of the latter to reinstate the dismissed clerks. As to these allegations, there is no denial before me on behalf of the Crown. The letter of the Chief Secretary is dated 10 days after the interview.

The petitioner's contention is that in calling for the charge-sheet the Sub-Divisional Magistrate did not bring his judicial mind to bear on the case at all, but only acted on the Inspector's report which merely sought to carry out Govt. orders, that he made no reference to any proper materials before calling for the charge-sheet, and that inasmuch as the charge-sheet purports to refer to what may be called Rao's case, there was no justification for summoning the petitioner because the petitioner is not referred to in Rao's letter and there is no suggestion that the petitioner had taken any part in the occurrence complained of. In the latter part of this contention there is no substance, for the petitioner is mentioned in the letter that followed Rao's and was treated as a part of the same case, and action need not be confined to persons named in the first information or charged with taking a direct part in an occurrence.

There is no dispute that Mr. Sinha was competent under the law to reconsider the matter notwithstanding the order passed by his predecessor on June 20. It is also beyond question that Mr. Sinha could only do so on proper materials, but Sir Manmatha Mukharji for the petitioner has urged that the materials Mr. Sinha referred to in his order of August 20, ("Inspector's report and copy of Govt. order seen") were not proper materials for a Magistrate to act upon. A similar point was taken before the Sessions Judge when the petitioners first moved him, and Mr. M. P. Sinha in his explanation said that "the Govt. orders on the subject being executive and not judicial, it is not to be governed by s. 435, Criminal P. C., and as such the legality or otherwise of this order need not be taken up in the revision."

The petitioner, however, has been asking the Courts to revise not the "orders" of Govt., but the judicial orders of the Magistrate. The simple question is whether in taking judicial action the Magistrate acted merely on what he took to be Govt. orders or whether he had other sufficient materials on which he could and did proceed judicially; if the former be the case, the proceedings against the petitioner must plainly be quashed, leaving it open to those concerned to proceed in the proper way. There has been some difference of opinion in this Court on the question whether the order of a Magistrate (empowered to take cognizance on Police reports) calling for a charge-sheet is a judicial or an administrative order; but it is not necessary for the purposes of this case to go into that point because we are here dealing with a case in which the Magistrate has undoubtedly taken judicial action on what was before him on August 21, supplemented, if necessary, by the charge-sheet which, however, will presently be seen to provide little justification for judicial action. Section 192 (1) empowers a Sub-Divisional Magistrate to transfer any case of which he has taken cognizance for enquiry or trial, to any Magistrate subordinate to him. Mr. Sinha's order of transfer to Mr. Bajpai, therefore, necessarily imports his taking cognizance of the case, and though the expression 'taking cognizance' is not defined in the Code (see the discussion of this point in Baldeo Prasad v. Emperor (1), there can be no dispute that it constitutes a judicial act. It follows that even if the calling for a charge-sheet be regarded as an administrative matter, the Magistrate's action in taking cognizance and transferring the case to Mr. Bajpai for trial is a judicial matter open to scrutiny by Courts of Revision under ss. 435 and 439 of the Criminal P. C. The petitioner complains that the charge-sheet was called for "as a result of the unwarranted interference by the executive authorities"; and it is not a sufficient answer to this to say that calling for a charge-sheet is an administrative matter, for Mr. Sinha's further action in the case must in any event be regarded as judicial, and if it should appear to have been dictated by nothing better than what were taken to be Govt. orders, it must (as I have already said) plainly be set aside in revision. As to the materials before the Magistrate, the petition says specifically that neither the Inspector's report nor the copy of the Govt. orders, on which materials the order of August 21, passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate calling for a charge-sheet was founded, contains any relevant materials which can form the basis of that order. A reference to the Inspector's report and the letter from the Chief Secretary shows that the contention is really unanswerable. Government were of opinion that the cases should be tried and the issues decided in the Court, and if that opinion was transmitted through the usual channels to the Inspector of Police for compliance, it is perhaps not surprising that the Inspector took it that under those Govt. orders (as he calls them) charge-sheets would have to be submitted in both the cases. But it is not to be supposed that Govt. intended to give any orders to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, and it is just possible that this is what the Magistrate meant when he stated in his explanation to the Sessions Judge that the Govt. orders on the subject were executive and not judicial. But if the Magistrate did not take the Govt. letter to mean orders intended to be carried out by him, the Inspector's report of August 19, which is the only other material referred to in his order of August 21, contains no materials on which he could properly have decided to call for a charge-sheet, whether by way of judicial action or as an obvious preliminary to judicial action. The Inspector merely refers to the so-called Govt. orders and raises the question how those orders should be carried out by the Police submitting a charge sheet. Since the cases were disposed of by the Sub-Divisional Officer as non-cognizable under s. 323 of the I. P. C., there could be no further investigation under Chap. XIV of the Criminal P. C., without the order of a competent Magistrate—see s. 155 (2)—and no charge-sheet under s. 173. In his explanation to the Sessions Judge, the Magistrate said that the Inspector's report of August 19

"was enough to take up the matter for further consideration and to call for a charge-sheet under s. 190 (b) and s. 173."

This does not make it clear how far he realised at that time that to call for a charge-sheet on the Inspector's report without reference to any other materials was but to carry out what he took to be the orders of Govt. In his explanation to this Court, however, he says in reply to ground No. 3—that in reality he had not at all applied his own mind to the facts of the case but had merely acted as desired by Govt.—that the Inspector's report gave him occasion to apply his mind to the final report, submitted and to review the previous orders thereon. This statement has caused me considerable difficulty. It is not clearly stated that he actually looked into the final report before passing his order of August 21, and indeed, if he had really done so, it is difficult to imagine how he only said to the Sessions Judge that the Inspector's report was enough to take up the matter for further consideration and to call for a charge-sheet. But this is not all; while in the order of August 21, he refers to the Inspector's report and the copy of Govt. orders only, he adds, when on August 28, he transferred the case for trial to Mr. Bajpai, that this Magistrate is to "have the original record called for." This suggests very strongly that what the Sub-Divisional Magistrate called the original record—and this must have contained the final report—could not have been with him on August 28, and if the record was not with him on August 28, it is difficult to imagine how it could have been with him on August 21 and then been sent away somewhere to be called for after the 28th. I am also bound to observe that if the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had really gone into the final report before passing his order of August 21, nothing would have been easier than for him to have said so clearly in his explanations to the Court of Session and to this Court, as he has refrained from doing. It is impossible on these materials to feel that the Magistrate, though he has thought of an "occasion to apply his mind to the final report", actually had that document before him when he considered the Inspector's report on August 21, or the charge-sheet on the 28th of that month. As to applying his mind to the facts of the case, it is unfortunate for the Magistrate that the charge-sheet in fact reads like a warning to a judicial officer, for it says:

"The case was investigated, and I submit the charge-sheet against the persons named in column 4 under s. 147, I. P. C. in face of Govt. orders."

(The italics are mine). It does not say that the investigation pointed to the guilt of any of the accused persons named under s. 147, I. P. C. Indeed, the Inspector could not possibly have made any statement of that kind because the final report of June, 1939 with which the investigation had concluded expressly stated that no offence of rioting had been made out. If the Magistrate chose to call for a charge-sheet on no more than the Inspector's report and the Govt. letter, and if he further chose to put the accused on trial on such a charge-sheet, he would seem to have applied his mind merely to carrying out the views of Govt. rather than to considering whether there were any proper materials for his putting the accused on their trial. It was clearly his duty as a judicial officer to form his own views on proper materials instead of merely carrying out the views of Govt. in his judicial work as a Magistrate; and I find it impossible on present materials to hold that the Magistrate applied his judicial mind before putting the petitioner on his trial. It seems desirable to add that in submitting his replies to rules issued by the superior Courts the Magistrate should express himself clearly after an understanding of the grievance that a petitioner may be making out. For in para. 13 of the petition in this case, the whole of the Magistrate's order of August 28, is quoted and in ground No. 11 the Inspector's report and the Govt. orders are referred to as the materials on which his order of the 21st was founded; and yet the Magistrate has failed clearly to say that he looked into the final report if indeed he ever did so.

After coming to this conclusion I enquired from the Bar about the other six persons accused in the case. Sir Manmatha Mukharji has since filed an application on their behalf for relief on the same grounds as Mr. Carrick, and the Advocate-General who has communicated with the local authorities has stated that there is nothing further to say as against these persons.

The result is that the revisional application of Mr. Carrick and the other revisional application which has been filed by Sir Manmatha Mukharji on behalf of the other six accused to-day must both be allowed and the proceedings against them quashed. This will, however, leave it open to any body concerned to move the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, if necessary, on proper materials.

In re HUSAIN KHAN alias SULAIMAN KHAN AND ANOTHER—APPELLANTS

Madras Childrens Act (IV of 1920), s. 26 (1)—Son sentenced to pay fine for offence—Father directed to pay fine under s. 26 (1) without giving him opportunity to show that he did not neglect to take care of son—Order held improper—Proper order stated.

A young person was convicted under s. 326, I. P. O., and sentenced to pay a certain fine. His father was directed to pay the fine under s. 26 (1), Mad. Childrens Act without giving him opportunity of showing that he did not neglect to exercise due care on his son. Nor did it appear from the report of the probation officer that the offence was due to any neglect of the father;

Held, that the order under s. 26 (1) must be set aside and that the proper course was to commit the son to the custody of his father on his executing a bond to be responsible for the good behaviour of the son.

Or. A. against the order of the Juvenile Court of Vepery, Madras, dated February 7, 1940 and passed in J. C. No. 49 of 1940.

Mr. P. A. Krishnan Kutti Nair, for the Appellants.

The Crown Prosecutor on behalf of the Crown.

Judgment.—The first appellant, a young person, pleaded guilty to a charge under s. 326, I. P. C. and he was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50. The second appellant the father was present in obedience to the notice under s. 21 (1) of the Mad. Childrens' Act and he was directed to pay the fine under s. 26 (1) of the Act. But no opportunity was given to him to show that he had been convicted to the commission of the offence by neglecting to exercise due care on the first appellant nor does it appear from the report of the probation officer that the offence was due to any neglect of the father. The order under s. 26 (1) of the Mad. Childrens' Act is therefore set aside and on the materials on record the proper course was to commit the first appellant to the custody of his father on his executing a bond to be responsible for the good behaviour of the son. The sentence of fine is therefore set aside and the first appellant will be committed to the custody of the second appellant on his executing a bond for Rs. 100 to be responsible for the good behaviour of the first appellant for one year.

JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—RESPONDENTS

Bihar Restoration of Bakasht Lands and Reduction of Arrears of Rent Act (IX of 1938), ss. 15, 16, 18, 19—Holding paying produce rent—S. 16 applies and not s. 15—Relationship of landlord and tenant existing when rent accrued—Whether must be subsisting when application is made under s. 16 (1)—Application under s. 16—All three conditions under s. 18, if must be complied with—Rent Reduction Officer reducing rent under s. 18 on application under s. 16—Non-compliance with all conditions under s. 18—Rent reduction officer, whether acts without jurisdiction—Inherent want of jurisdiction and wrong exercise of jurisdiction, distinction—Effect of reduction of arrears under ss. 16 and 18—Execution—Executing Court can ignore orders made without jurisdiction—Order reducing rent and granting instalments made—Executing Court, if can sell property under original decree.

Section 15 of the Bihar Restoration of Bakasht Lands and Reduction of Arrears of Rent Act has no application to the case, where the rent of the holding is not a money rent but is produce rent. Such a holding comes within s. 16, and proceedings for reduction of rent of such a holding can properly be made under s. 16 of the Act. The Rent Reduction Officer, therefore, has jurisdiction to reduce the rent of such a holding. [p. 100, col. 2.]

If a relationship of landlord and raiyat existed between the parties during the period in which the rent accrued, then it matters not whether such relationship is subsisting when application is made under s. 16 (1) of the Act to reduce the arrears due to the ex-landlord. If a landlord transfers his ownership and sues for arrears of rent, he can only obtain a money decree; but that is no reason at all why the tenant should be deprived of a benefit which is conferred upon him by the plain terms of the Act, namely, a right to claim reduction of arrears against the person entitled to receive the rent, namely the ex-landlord. [p. 101, col. 1.]

Section 15 (1) of the Bihar Restoration of Bakasht Lands and Reduction of Arrears of Rent Act, 1938, deals with disposal of applications under s. 16. The Collector must dismiss the application of the tenants unless the latter have complied with the three requirements of the sub-section, namely, (2) (a) (i), (2) (a) (ii) and (2) (a) (iii). If they have not complied with the whole three, they have no right to claim a reduction of rent. [p. 101, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where the judgment debtors are occupancy raiyyats paying produce rent they are entitled to make an application to the Rent Reduction Officer under s. 16 of the Act and the Rent Reduction Officer has full jurisdiction to call upon the decree-holder to answer the application and to hear the parties and make such orders as he deems proper in the circumstances. There is a confusion between the existence of jurisdiction and the exercise of jurisdiction. A Court has jurisdiction to decide wrong as well as right. If it decides wrong, the wronged party can only take the course prescribed by law for setting matters right; and if that course is not taken, the decision, however, wrong cannot be disturbed. 189 Ind. Cas. 739 (1) and 142 Ind. Cas. 113 (2), followed. [p. 101, col. 2; p. 102, col. 1.]

Where there is no inherent want of jurisdiction the revenue authorities have jurisdiction under s. 18 to entertain the application under s. 16. It may well be that they had to decide three facts in favour of the applicants before they could give them relief, and in a sense the existence of these three facts would be necessary to confer jurisdiction; but it is for the Court to consider whether the facts gave it jurisdiction to grant the relief, and the fact that it found the facts wrongly cannot make its decision wholly null and void. Where it had jurisdiction to entertain the matter, it is no answer to say that it had decided wrongly in the exercise of its jurisdiction. [p. 102, col. 1.]

The decision of the Collector cannot be treated as wholly null and void for want of jurisdiction merely because he has decided wrongly that the tenant was entitled to relief. If the order is wholly without jurisdiction, the executing Court, of course, would be at liberty to ignore it. The executing Court, however, cannot ignore an order made with jurisdiction, no matter how erroneous it may be. Where the Revenue Officer acts with jurisdiction his order must be observed by the executing Court. [p. 102, col. 2.]

Where the decree has been reduced and converted into an instalment decree it gives the decree-holder no right whatsoever to proceed with the execution except in a particular manner when default is made in payment of instalments. The effect of reduction of arrears under ss. 16 and 18 is dealt with under s. 19 of the Act. It is clear from s. 19 of the Act that the moment the Rent Reduction Officer has reduced the arrears and granted instalments, execution of the decree as it originally stood cannot proceed. [p. 102, col. 2; p. 103, col. 1.]

The executing Court has no right whatsoever to sell the property once the order is made reducing the arrears and granting instalments. Section 19 (2) of the Act provides for the decree-holder's rights should the judgment-debtor default in performance of the new order. A sale under the original decree in contravention of the plain terms of the Collector's order is a sale wholly without jurisdiction, and must be set aside. [p. 103, col. 1.]

A. from an order of the District Judge, Gaya, dated March 26, 1940.

Mr. Rajkishore Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Lalnarayan Sinha, for the Respondents.

Harries, C. J.—This is a decree-holder's second appeal from an order of the learned District Judge of Gaya in an execution matter.

The facts of the case can be shortly stated as follows:—

In 1936 the decree-holder appellant obtained a decree for arrears of rent for 1340 to 1342 F. against the respondents the amount of the decree being Rs. 309. In the year 1937 the decree-holder, who had been the landlord of the holding in question, parted with his interest in favour of his wife and ceased to be a co-sharer in the village. In October 1937, the decree-holder proceeded to execute his decree for the arrears of rent as a money decree and attached certain zamindari properties of the judgment-debtors and proceeded to put them to sale. On January 13, 1939, the judgment-debtors applied to the Rent Reduction Officer under s. 16 of the Bihar Restoration of Bakasht Lands and Reduction of Arrears of Rent Act, 1938 (Act IX of 1938) for reduction of the arrears of rent due from them to the appellant. The appellant filed objections, but on June 5, 1939, the Rent Reduction Officer disallowed the objections of the appellant and reduced the rent by 5 annas 4 pies in the rupee. It is to be observed that up to this time no application had been made by the respondents for stay of the execution proceedings which were proceeding. It appears that June 21, 1939, was the day fixed for sale; but before this date the judgment-debtor-respondents applied to the Court for a reduction of the decree granted by the Rent Officer and prayed that further execution proceedings should be brought to an end and that the application for execution should be dismissed. By some error the property was put up for sale on June 22, 1939, before the judgment-debtor's application was considered. The property was bought by the decree-holder. On July 3, 1939, the objections of the judgment-debtors were considered by the Court but were disallowed and the sale was in due course confirmed.

The respondents appealed from the order of the learned Munsif in execution to the Court of the District Judge, who by an order dated March 26, 1940, reversed the decision of the learned Munsif and allowed the appeal. The effect of the order of the learned District Judge was to set aside the sale in its entirety. From that order of the learned District Judge the present second appeal has been preferred.

The holding in question was an occupancy holding in respect of which produce rent was payable. It was at first argued by Counsel for the appellant that the Rent Reduction Officer had no jurisdiction whatsoever to reduce the rent in the present case. The Rent Reduction Officer purported to act under s. 16 (1) of the Bihar Restoration of Bakasht Lands and Reduction of Arrears of Rent Act, 1938, and it was pointed out that that section has no application whatsoever to holdings falling within s. 15 of the Act.

Section 15 (a) deals with an occupancy holding of which the rent has been settled or reduced under s. 112 or cl. (a), (b), (d) or (e) of sub-s. (1) of s. 112-A of the Bihar Tenancy Act, 1885, or under certain other enactments; and cl. (b) of that section deals with the case of an occupancy holding in which the rent has not been settled or reduced under the same enactments. The contention was that occupancy holdings were governed by s. 15 of the Act and that s. 16 had no application whatsoever to such holdings. On a careful consideration of the sections, however, it is now conceded that s. 15 of the Act has no application to the present case, because the rent of the holding in question is not a money rent but is produce rent. Such holding is not within s. 15 of the Act but comes within s. 16 and proceedings for reduction of rent of a holding such as the one in the present case can properly be made under s. 16 of the Act. The Rent Reduction Officer, therefore, had jurisdiction to consider the judgment-debtors' application for reduction of rent in the present case.

It was next contended by Counsel for the appellant that the Act had no application whatsoever to the facts of this case, because the relationship of landlord and tenant had ceased to exist when these rent reduction proceedings were commenced. It is true that the decree-holder parted with his interest in 1937. The Rent Reduction Officer seemed to have some doubt as to whether this transfer was a genuine one or not, but there has been no finding that it is a farzi transaction and, therefore, it must be accepted that the decree-holder had transferred his interest before the arrears of rent were reduced under the Rent Reduction Act. Section 16 (1) which entitles the Rent Reduction Officer to reduce arrears of rent, is in these terms :

"Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any law, where any arrears of rent are due to a landlord in respect of a holding other than a holding referred to in s. 15 for any period ending before the first day of Asin 1345 Fasli corresponding to Asin Badi 1 of 1994 Sambat, the raiyat may make an application to the Collector for the reduction of such arrears"

It is argued that on the plain words of the section the arrears of rent must be due to a landlord in respect of a holding and unless a relationship of landlord and raiyat is subsisting no application can be made under this section. It is abundantly clear that during the period for which arrears of rent claimed there was a relationship of landlord and raiyyat between the decree-holder and the respondents otherwise no decree for rent could ever have been granted. It must be remembered that one of the main objects of this Act is to grant tenants relief in cases where claims for arrears of rent are made against them. Why should a tenant be deprived of the relief to which he would be otherwise entitled merely on the ground that his landlord subsequent to the accrual of the arrears has transferred his interest to some other person? It appears to me that if a relationship of landlord and raiyyat existed between the parties during the period in which the rent accrued, then it matters not whether such relationship is subsisting when application is made under s. 16 (1) of the Act to reduce the arrears due to the ex-landlord. Mr. Rajkishore Prasad also urged that as the ex-landlord who had transferred his interest in the property could no longer proceed against the holding it should be held that the tenant should not be allowed the benefit of a reduction of arrears of rent under this Act. I cannot see the connection between the two. If a landlord transfers his ownership and sues for arrears of rent, he can only obtain a money decree; but that is no reason at all why the tenant should be deprived of a benefit which is conferred upon him by the plain terms of the Act, namely a right to claim reduction of arrears against the person entitled to receive the rent, namely the ex-landlord. In my view the tenant was entitled to maintain proceedings for reduction of rent and the Rent Reduction Officer had full jurisdiction to consider the claim.

Section 18 (1) of the Bihar Restoration of Bakasht Lands and Reduction of Arrears of Rent Act, 1938, deals with disposal of applications under s. 16. On receipt of an application by the raiyyat; the Collector shall fix a date for the hearing of the application, and he must give notice of the application and of the date fixed for hearing to the landlord. If the landlord appears, the Collector must hear the parties, and if he is satisfied that

(i) the raiyyat has not paid or tendered to the landlord before the expiry of three months from the date on which this section comes into force at least ten per centum of the arrears mentioned in the application, or

(ii) the raiyyat has not paid or tendered to the landlord or deposited with the Collector along with his application any of the instalments of rent for the holding which have fallen due in the agricultural year in which the application is made, or

(iii) during the period of five years immediately preceding the date on which the application by the raiyyat is made under sub-s. (1) of s. 16, the raiyyat has never paid the rent of the holding except after the institution of a suit by the landlord for the realisation of the arrear of such rent, the Collector shall dismiss the application."

In the present case it appears that the instalments of rent for the agricultural year in which the application was made were paid, but it is clear that no deposit of ten per cent. of the arrears or indeed of any sum has been made.

It was urged by Mr. Rajkishore Prasad on behalf of the appellant that as the three necessary conditions laid down in s. 18 of the Act had not been complied with the Collector was bound to dismiss the judgment-debtors' application. On the other hand, it was contended that this section gives three alternatives, and if the judgment-debtors have complied with one of the alternatives the Collector must consider their application upon the merits and reduce the rent. In my judgment upon a true construction of s. 18 (2) (a) of the Act the Collector must dismiss the application of the tenants unless the latter have complied with the three requirements of that sub-section, namely (2) (a) (i), (2) (a) (ii) and (2) (a) (iii). If they have not complied with the whole three, they have no right to claim a reduction of rent.

It was further argued that if such be the true construction of the section, then the Rent Reduction Officer in the present case has no jurisdiction whatsoever to make the order which he did, reducing the rent. It may well be that the Rent Reduction Officer was wrong in making the order which he did, but that is very different from saying that he acted without jurisdiction. It is quite clear that in the present case the judgment-debtors being occupancy raiyyats paying produce rent were entitled to make an application to the Rent Reduction Officer under s. 16 of the Act. The Rent Reduction Officer had full jurisdiction to call upon the appellant decree-holder to answer the application and to hear the parties and make such orders as he deemed proper in the circumstances. In my view there can be no question that this application is one which the Revenue Officer had full jurisdiction to entertain. This is not a case of inherent want of jurisdiction. As pointed out in the case of Central Co-operative Bank Ltd., Barh v. Dasrath Pandey (1); there is a confusion between the existence of jurisdiction and the exercise of jurisdiction. A Court has jurisdiction to decide wrong as well as right. If it decides wrong, the wronged party can only take the course prescribed by law for setting matters right; and if that course is not taken, the decision however wrong cannot be disturbed. This latter case of this Court followed an earlier case, Girwar Narayan Mahton v. Kamla Prasad (2), in which it was held that a judgment of a Court having pecuniary and territorial jurisdiction over the subject-matter and the parties to the suit, however erroneous cannot be a nullity but is merely voidable. The question whether a previous suit is or is not barred under s. 109 of the Ben. Ten. Act is one within the competency of the Court which decides that suit, and its bar does not constitute inherent want of jurisdiction. The question of jurisdiction in such a case is to be decided by the Court itself which otherwise has jurisdiction to try the suit. And the question of s. 109 of the Act being a bar, ought to be raised before the decree in the previous suit is passed. At p. 743* the learned Judges observed :

"Thus if the question of jurisdiction is to be decided by the Court itself with reference to the existence or otherwise of a particular fact in bar of trial, there is no want of inherent jurisdiction, and the judgment pronounced may be erroneous but not void and cannot be collaterally impeached. The question of jurisdiction in such a case is, like other questions of fact of law to be decided by the Court itself which otherwise has jurisdiction to try the suit."

"In my judgment the Revenue Authorities had jurisdiction in this case to entertain the application. It may well be that they had to decide three facts in favour of the applicants before they could give them relief, and in a sense the existence of these three facts would be necessary to confer jurisdiction; but it was for the Court to consider whether the facts gave it jurisdiction to grant the relief, and the fact that it found the facts wrongly cannot make its decision wholly null and void. It had jurisdiction to entertain the matter, and it is no answer to say that it had decided wrongly in the exercise of its jurisdiction. It is pointed out that s. 22 of the Act makes orders of the Collector final in the sense that they cannot be varied or set aside by a Civil Court. Under various rules, however, a person aggrieved by an order of the Collector is not without remedy but may apply by way of revision to the Commissioner and the Board of Revenue. Be that as it may, the decision of the Collector cannot be treated as wholly null and void for want of jurisdiction merely because he has decided wrongly that the tenant was entitled to relief. In my judgment the order of the Collector reducing the rent cannot be ignored, and effect would have to be given to it in the execution proceedings. Had the order been wholly without jurisdiction, the executing Court, of course, would have been at liberty to ignore it. The executing Court, however, cannot ignore an order made with jurisdiction, no matter how erroneous it may be.

The Revenue Officer not only reduced the rent but ordered the payment of the arrears by three instalments, and it is clear that the respondents have strictly complied with his order and paid the first subsequent instalments due into the Court of the Collector as they became due. In short the effect of the finding of the Rent Reduction Officer was to reduce the decretal amount and to convert it into an instalment decree, and this the Rent Reduction Officer is fully empowered to do. There can be no doubt that where he acts with jurisdiction his order must be observed by the executing Court but in the present case the executing Court proceeded to sell for the full decretal amount as if it was immediately payable. As I have stated, the decree had been reduced and converted into an instalment decree which gave the decree-holder no right whatsoever to proceed with the execution except in a particular manner when default was made in payment of instalments. The effect of reduction of arrears under ss. 16 and 18 is dealt with under s. 19 of the Act which provides that where proceedings in execution have already been stayed no further steps can be taken by any Court. It also provides that the amount of arrears as reduced are to be deposited by the raiyat within a period of eighteen months with the Collector and such deposit must be made either in a lump sum or in such instalments as fixed by the Collector and sub-s. (2) of s. 19 provides for the decree-holder's remedy in the event of the judgment-debtor failing to carry out the provisions of the Collector's order. It is clear from s. 19 of the Act that the moment the Rent Reduction Officer has reduced the arrears and granted instalments execution of the decree as it originally stood cannot proceed.

Mr. Rajkishore Prasad has argued that execution proceedings could only be stayed or stopped if they had already been stayed under s. 17 of the Act. Section 17 allows a Court to stay proceeding pending proceedings for reduction of rent in the Court of the Rent Reduction Officer. Unless such a stay has been obtained, it is contended that the executing Court could proceed to sell the property in spite of an order reducing the rent and granting instalments. In my view whether a previous application had or had not been made to stay proceedings pending the result of rent reduction proceedings, further execution proceedings cannot proceed once the Rent Reduction Officer has made an order reducing rent and granting instalments. In any event, I am satisfied that before the sale an application was made to the executing Court to stay proceedings on the original decree and to reduce the decretal amount in accordance with the orders of the Rent Reduction Officer. In the present case the executing Court had no right whatsoever to sell the property once the order was made reducing the arrears and granting instalments. Section 19 (2) of the Act provides for the decree-holder's rights should the judgment-debtor default in performance of the new order. A sale under the original decree in contravention of the plain terms of the Collector's order is, in my view, a sale wholly without jurisdiction, and that being so, must be set aside.

For the reasons which I have given, I am satisfied that the lower Appellate Court was right in setting aside the sale, and I would therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 55 (4), 145.—No attempt by decree-holder to execute decree for three and half years.—Security given by judgment-debtor held should not be forfeited.

In execution of a decree the judgment-debtor was arrested but was released on his furnishing security that he would apply within one month to be declared as insolvent. He failed to apply within one month but the decree-holder made no attempt to execute the decree for over three and half years;

Held that the obvious inference was that the decree-holder realized that the judgment-debtor had substantially, if not technically, complied with the order of the Court, and that the purpose for which the security was given was substantially fulfilled. It would be wholly inequitable at such late stage to order that the security should be forfeited.

Mr. A. C. Mitra, for the Petitioners.

Mr. M. N. Banerji, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—The petitioner has obtained a succession certificate entitling him to recover the debt due to Mahammad Safi, deceased, who was surety in this Court in a sum of Rs. 500 for a judgment-debtor, Haji Hafiz Alla Bux. Both the surety and the judgment-debtor have since died. On December 6, 1935, a decree was passed against the judgment-debtor. On July 2, 1936, the judgment-debtor was arrested in execution of the decree and brought before the Court. The judgment-debtor informed the Court that he would apply to be adjudicated insolvent and Mahammad Safi was accepted as his surety for the sum of Rs. 500. On July 22, 1936, the judgment-debtor stated to the Court that Mahammad Safi who was present in Court would stand surety for him for Rs. 500 and it was ordered:

"That the hearing of this matter do stand over till Friday, July 24, 1936, the defendant undertaking to attend Court on that date, and it is further ordered that the Registrar of this Court be at liberty to accept the security in the sum of Rs. 500 for filing by the defendant of his petition in insolvency within one month from the date of furnishing of such security and for his appearance in Court when called upon to do so."

Mahammad Safi deposited Rs. 500 with the Registrar on July 22, and the judgment-debtor filed his petition in insolvency on August 25, and an adjudication order was made. Later, both the judgment-debtor and the surety died. The decree-holder never suggested that the judgment-debtor had not complied with the order, and he has never to this day applied for forfeiture of the surety deposit, but now that the surety has died, and an application is made by the person who is apparently entitled thereto for payment of the Rs. 500 deposit, the decree-holder objects and claims that sum. He argues that the Court ordered, in any event on July 22, if not earlier, that the judgment-debtor should file his petition in insolvency within one month and that order was not complied with since the judgment-debtor filed his petition on August

25. It is admitted that the judgment-debtor was given time until July 24, to deposit the sum of Rs. 500 but it is contended that inasmuch as the judgment-debtor failed to file his petition by August 22, the security was forfeited. The relevant sections of the Civil P. O. are ss. 35 (4) and 145. Section 55 (4) provides :

"Where a judgment-debtor expresses his intention to apply to be declared an insolvent and furnishes security, to the satisfaction of the Court, that he will within one month so apply, and that he will appear, when called upon, in any proceeding upon the application or upon the decree in execution of which he was arrested, the Court may release him from arrest, and if he fails so to apply and to appear, the Court may either direct the security to be realized or commit him to civil prison in execution of the decree."

For the applicant it is contended that the words "the Court may either direct the security to be realized or commit to civil prison in execution of the decree" give the Court a discretion as to whether or not it will order the security to be realized. Assuming that there is such a discretion I have no doubt that the Court would not, in the circumstances disclosed, have ordered the security to be realized. From the affidavit of Shaik Mahammad Ameen it appears that the judgment-debtor deposited Rs. 50 for his costs with the Official Assignee on August 14, and his books of account on August 17, and signed the petition in insolvency on August 20, and the failure to present the petition was due to "inadvertance" on the part of his attorney. Section 145 provides of far as is material :

"Where any person has become liable as surety for the fulfilment of any condition imposed on any person ... the decree or order may be executed against him to the extent to which he has rendered himself personally liable. ..."

This section provides a summary method of executing against the surety, but the decree-holder, if he now sought to execute his decree against the surety, would have to apply to the Court for leave to execute, and I cannot conceive that any Court would grant such leave in the circumstances. No attempt has been made to execute for over three and half years and the obvious inference is that the decree-holder realized that the judgment-debtor had substantially, if not technically, complied with the order of the Court, and that the purpose for which the security was given was substantially fulfilled. It would, in my opinion, be wholly inequitable at this late state to order that the security should be forfeited. There will be an order for payment in terms of the summons subject to the deduction by the Registrar of his charges or commission if any. Each party must bear his own costs of the application. Certified for Counsel.

Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act (VII of 1939), s. 11—Decree on promissory note passed before commencement of Act—Application under s. 11 for instalments—If can be allowed.

A obtained a decree against B on the basis of a promissory note before the enactment of Bihar Money-lenders Act, 1939. In execution of this decree B applied under s. 11 of the Money-lenders Act of 1939, to pay the decretal amount by instalments. The Court rejected the application on the ground that the provisions of the Act regarding instalments did not apply to a suit on a promissory note :

Held, that the liability under the promissory note had merged into the decretal debt before the commencement of the Act. It had ceased to be a debt evidenced by or based on the promissory note, and had become a judgment-debt. The Court, therefore, ought to consider whether the case was one in which it should exercise its powers under s. 11 of the Act. 192 Ind. Cas. 225 (2) relied on. 190 Ind. Cas. 704 (1), distinguished.

Order.—The opposite party obtained a decree against the petitioner on the basis of a promissory note. In the execution proceedings which followed the decree the petitioner applied under s. 11 of the Money-lenders Act of 1939 to pay the decretal amount by instalments. The Court below rejected that application on the ground that the provisions of the Act regarding instalments do not apply to a suit on a promissory note. The learned Subordinate Judge purported to follow the decision of this Court in Sagarmal Marwari v. Bhuthu Ram (1). That, however, was a case under s. 8 of the Act, but the section of the Act applicable to instalments is s. 11. It is to be observed that the decree in this case had been passed before the enactment of the Money-lenders Act, 1939, with the result that the liability under the promissory note had merged into the decretal debt. In considering the Mad. Agri. Relief Act (IV of 1938) in Subrahmanyam Chettiar v. Muthuswami Goundan (2), at p. 166 the learned Chief Justice of India observed in similar circumstances as follows:—

"But these questions do not in my opinion arise in the present case, because the liability on which the Act operated was a liability under a decree of the Court passed before the commencement of the Act. It has ceased to be a debt evidenced by or based on the promissory note, for that had merged in the decree and had become a judgment-debt; nor could the appellant any longer have sued upon the note.....and it was upon that liability and upon no other that the Act operated, even though it might be necessary to go into its earlier history for a particular and special purpose. In the present case the judgment-debt was already in existence when the Act was passed, and it is not necessary to consider whether any different principle would be applicable in the case of decrees made after its enactment. It is sufficient to say that here the Act has neither affected nor purported to affect any liability on a promissory note."

These observations are applicable to the facts of the present case, which must, therefore, go back to the learned Subordinate Judge to consider whether this is a case in which he should exercise his powers under s. 11 of the Act.

There will be no order as to costs.

ANNADANA KATTALAI OF SRI

RESPONDENTS

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 65—Applicability—Trust—Trustee of temple prohibited by scheme from borrowing money—He commits breach of trust—Creditor advancing money with knowledge of prohibition, if can recover money—Trustee acting contrary to trust—Principle that creditor advancing money to trust for trust purposes cannot be defeated by contention that duties could have been performed on less elaborate scale, does not apply.

Section 65, Contract Act, does not apply to contracts into which persons deliberately enter, knowing that the contract cannot have any validity and is in express contravention of the rules and restrictions imposed on them. [p. 108, col. 1.]

Where a trustee of a temple who is prohibited under the scheme of the temple for borrowing money, borrows money in spite of such prohibition, he commits a breach of trust and the creditor advancing money with the knowledge of such breach of trust cannot be heard to say that he was enabling the trustee to perform his duty to the trust and is not therefore entitled to be compensated for what he has supplied. Ex parte Chippendale (1) and In re Electric Telegraph Co. of Ireland (2), distinguished. [p. 107, col. 1.]

The principle that where it appears to a creditor advancing money to a trust that the money is being used for the trust and not for the trustee's private purposes and where the money is definitely applied, the creditor cannot be defeated by a contention that the duties could have been performed on a less elaborate scale, is true only where a trustee acts in the discharge of his duties as trustee. The principle cannot be applied where a trustee is acting contrary to the trust or to the rules imposed on him by a scheme. [p. 107, col. 2.]

S. A. against the decree of the Sub-Judge Tiruvarur, is A. S. No. 18 of 1935.

Messrs. K. Rajah Aiyar and R. Sundaralingam, for the Appellant.

Messrs. B. S. Ramachandra Rao and K. Kameswara Rao, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The appellant brought a suit on two promissory notes for amounts advanced to the Annadhana Kattalai for the necessary performance of the duties imposed on the trust. Defendant No. 1 was the trustee of the kattalai and defendant No. 2 was the Receiver of the Kattalai property, who has since been replaced by the executive officer of the temple. It appears from the plaint that the money was not advanced direct to the Kattalai. The plaintiff, who had received a power-of-attorney from the trustee, was managing the Kattalai on defendant No. 1's behalf, receiving income from the property, and making purchases; and the sum claimed is that admitted by defendant No. 1 to be due to the plaintiff on account of provisions and other necessities supplied to the Kattalai in excess of the income. The defendants contended that some of the alleged items of expenditure were not true; but it was found that the plaintiff had properly accounted for the money mentioned in the promissory notes and that it was properly expended on the temple. Defendant No. 2 raised another plea and that was that defendant No. 1 had no power to borrow money, that the plaintiff knew of it, and that he was not therefore entitled to recover any of the money, even though it might have been true that he advanced it. The District Munsif of Tiruvarur found both points against defendant No. 2. In appeal, the Subordinate Judge of Tiruvarur agreed with the District Munsif that the plaintiff had properly accounted for all the money advanced; but he held that the scheme which had been framed for the temple by the High Court absolutely prohibited such an advance being made. He therefore found himself constrained to allow the appeal and dismissed the suit.

The attention of the Courts below seems to have been focussed on s. 23 of the scheme, which is to this effect: "All borrowing from and all lending on interest to the funds of the trust is absolutely prohibited." The rest of the section deals with the punishments to be inflicted in case of a disobedience of this injunction. It has to be noticed that the word "borrowing" is followed by "from" which shows that the prohibition is against borrowing from the funds of the trust. That was not done here; but the section also prohibits lending on interest to the funds of the trust. If the plaintiff, as the terms of his promissory note suggest, had lent money on interest to the trust—even though it was for necessary purposes—I think such a loan would have fallen within the scope of the prohibition under s. 23. But I do not think that s. 23 as it stands meant to work a prohibition of the supplying of articles for the carrying on of the services of the Kattalai. Nevertheless from a reading of the scheme as a whole, there can be no doubt that the purpose of the scheme is that the trustees should not be left in possession of any money at all. As soon as they collect money, they have to deposit it with the treasurer of the temple, they have to submit a budget to the Board of Control three months before the beginning of each year, and they can only spend money in accordance with the budget as accepted. They are then allowed to draw on the amount standing to their credit in the accounts kept by the treasurer for each Kattalai and they may not exceed the budget allotment. There can also be no doubt, on a general reading of the scheme, that it was directly against the principle of the scheme that the trustees of the Kattalai should try to circumvent certain sections of the scheme by taking supplies from a person and contracting some liability on behalf of the trust. That this disobedience of the scheme was not accidental has been proved by the defendant; and the lower Appellate Court has found very clearly that defendant No. 1 deliberately ignored the scheme. He says in para. 13 of his judgment:

"It would appear that notwithstanding the scheme, defendant No. 1 as trustee of Annadana Kattalai, was never in the habit of submitting his budget to the treasurer. He himself continued to manage the properties of the Annadana Kattalai as though his powers had not been in any way curtailed or restricted. In consequence of the defiant attitude of defendant No. 1 it became necessary for the Board of Control to apply for the appointment of a Receiver for the purpose of collecting the income of the properties of the Annadana Kattalai and remitting the same to the treasurer."

The plaintiff was also aware of the prohibition and he knew that defendant No. 1 was disobeying the terms of the scheme. He had attended the meetings of the Board of Control and he knew that the temple and the Kattalais were being managed under s. 3 of the scheme. Although a trustee may not have power to incur debts, yet if a person supplies articles which are necessary for carrying on the services under the trust then he is entitled to be reimbursed. Two English cases have been quoted. In Ex parte Chippendale (1) the directors of a coal-mining company had no powers of raising money except by certain restricted means. They however during the course of the management of some mines in Germany found that they had no money to pay the wages of the miners. If the wages had not been paid the mines, under the law of the country, would have been closed down and the property of the company would have been lost. It was held that as they had acted beyond their powers as directors and agents in borrowing money, the creditors who had advanced money in order that the miners might be paid, would not be able to have recourse against the company under the Companies Act. Nevertheless, the directors were not merely agents but were trustees of the property of which they were in management; and as trustees they were bound to take all reasonable steps to prevent the property of the company from being wasted. They were therefore not only permitted but bound to borrow money to pay the miners' wages and thus save the property of the company which would otherwise have been lost. In Troup's case

(1) (1854) 4 De G M & G 19; 2 W R 547; 28 L T (O S) 200; 102 R R 7; 43 E R 415.

In re Electric Telegraph Co., of Ireland (2) a somewhat similar case, where directors had no borrowing powers, it was laid down that,

"where the directors of a company have no power to borrow money, the repayment of money borrowed cannot be enforced by the lender against the company. Yet if the money has been bona fide applied to the purposes of the company, the bona fide lender is entitled to payment as against the company."

The learned Advocate for the appellant has also referred to the principle laid down in the leading case Lawford v. Billericay Rural District Council (3) that where a corporation asked a contractor to perform certain works which were necessary for the carrying out of the duties of the corporation the corporation could not afterwards refuse to pay the contractor for the work he had done; merely because the contract had not been sealed as required by law and so was void. The principle of quantum meruit was applied and it was held that the corporation were not entitled to rely on this fact. It was found that there was an implied contract to reimburse the contractor for any work done by him which was necessary to be done and was required by the corporation to be done. Clearly, Ex parte Chippendale (1) and In re Electric Telegraph Co., of Ireland (2) would not apply to a case where a trustee, far from acting in the interest of the trust and for the trust, acted expressly against the rules which had been laid down for his conduct. In borrowing this money, the trustee committed a breach of trust and the plaintiff knew it. The plaintiff cannot therefore be heard to say that he was enabling the trustee to perform his duty to the trust and was therefore entitled to be compensated for what he has supplied.

With regard to the application of the principle of quantum meruit it may of course be true that if there was no money left to the credit of this particular Kattalai and certain services were absolutely necessary, then the plaintiff would be entitled to receive compensation for such money spent as was absolutely necessary. But we do not know what expenditure would have been absolutely necessary in such extreme cases. The plaintiff did not plead this, and the attention of the Courts below and of the parties was not directed to this aspect of the question; and so we have no material on which to come to a decision as to what expenditure by the trustee, if any, was absolutely necessary. The learned District Munsif, whose judgment is generally followed by that of the Subordinate Judge, says in para. 7 of his judgment:—

"So then there is clear proof in this case that as a matter of fact the plaintiff advanced several sums of money as found in the accounts, Exs. A and B, for the supply of articles absolutely necessary for the purpose of the trust in connexion with the daily pūja abhishekam, naivedyam, etc."

He draws this conclusion from certain findings of his in para. 6 of his judgment which he gives in the words used by the clerk of the Receiver:

"Until the Receiver took charge from plaintiff all the kalapūjas were being done properly, all the functions of the annadhana and abhisheka Katalais having been regularly and properly done."

I cannot see how it follows from this that the supply of the articles by the plaintiff was absolutely necessary for the purpose of the trust. A distinction must be drawn between what is necessary for a full and proper conduct of the services that is what is desirable, and what is absolutely necessary when there are no funds available to meet the full expenses or where the rules prohibit the spending of money unauthorizedly. All these various duties could have been performed on a less elaborate scale; and if defendant No. 1 had done his duty and had applied to the treasurer for money and the matter had been referred to the Board of Control, the Board would probably have supplied a smaller amount of money which would have permitted the carrying out of these services on a smaller scale. The learned Advocate for the appellant has sought to get over this difficulty by quoting the Privy Council decision, Vibhudapriya Thirtha Swamiar v. Lakshmindra Thirtha Swamiar (4) which is to the effect that where it appears to a creditor advancing money to a trust that the money is being used for the trust and not for the trustee's private purposes and where the money is definitely applied, the creditor cannot be defeated by a contention that the duties could have been performed on a less elaborate scale. That is true only where a trustee acts in the discharge of his duties as trustee. That principle could not be applied where a trustee is acting contrary to the trust or to the rules imposed on him by a scheme. In such a case both the trustee and the creditor know that the money ought not to be spent.

It has been pointed out that this contract has to be viewed in the light of the express words used in s. 65, Contract Act, and not by the principles laid down in certain English cases which are less liberal. But the language used in s. 65 shows that it does not apply to contracts into which persons deliberately enter, knowing that the contract cannot have any validity and is in express contravention of the rules and restrictions imposed on them. Moreover it is difficult to see how in this case there ever was a contract—void or otherwise—with the trust. The so-called contract was nothing more than a dishonest device of the plaintiff and defendant No. 1 to defeat the scheme. In making this promise to pay, defendant No. 1 cannot be said to have been acting for the trust; and the plaintiff knew it. It follows from what has been said above that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover from the trust the amount claimed by him on the suit pro-notes. There is no equitable principle that can be invoked by him which will enable the Court to grant a decree. If he had raised a plea of quantum meruit and suitable evidence had been let in, it is just possible that he might have succeeded in obtaining a decree for some part of the sum he advanced; but it is not necessary for me to express any opinion on this point. It is contended that a decree should be given against defendant No. 1; but defendant No. 1 did not execute the pro-note in his personal capacity but only as trustee of the institution. A petition has been put in to amend the plaint so that the plaintiff may be given some relief against defendant No. 1, but even if the amendment were made, the plaintiff could not, for reasons given, be given a decree against defendant No. 1. The appeal is dismissed with costs of respondent No. 2.

BRIJBEHARI—PETITIONER

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 21, Expl. 2, 167—"Public servant"—Person in actual possession of situation—Absence of formal appointment—If public servant—Word "charged", construction—Appointment of Head-Clerk to prepare electoral rolls under r. 13 (1), Bihar Municipal Election Rules, 1937, of Municipality of five wards—Subsequent Government Notification dividing Municipality into sixteen wards—Appointment of Head Clerk neither revoked nor fresh formal appointment made—He continuing to work—Head Clerk held public servant charged with preparation of electoral rolls—Preparation and framing of electoral rolls, difference—Signing and delivery of rolls is essential to framing required by s. 167—Electoral rolls prepared by Head Clerk charged with such duty—Signing and delivery by his locum tenens—Head Clerk, if liable under s. 167—Bihar Municipal Election Rules 1937, r. 13 (1)—Scope—Chairman, if must make formal appointment in writing.

The Chairman of a Municipality, acting under r. 13 (1) of the Bihar Municipal Election Rules, 1937, appointed a Head Clerk of the Municipality, to prepare the electoral rolls of all persons entitled to be registered as voters in each of the five wards into which the Municipality was divided at that time. Subsequently by a Govt. Notification the Municipality was divided into sixteen single-seated wards instead of the former five plural-seated wards:

Held, that as the appointment of the Head Clerk was not revoked subsequent to the Govt. Notification and he continued to work as such he was public servant within the meaning of s. 167 read with s. 21, Expl. 2, I. P. O. The absence of his formal appointment subsequent to Notification was immaterial as the Head-clerk was indubitably "in actual possession of the situation of a public servant". [p. 110, col. 2.]

Held, further that the word "charged" in s. 167 is not to be very narrowly construed. It was no part of the ordinary duty of Head Clerk to prepare any electoral roll but as he was expressly appointed to prepare the electoral rolls under the Election Rules he was a public servant charged with the preparation of electoral rolls. Queen-Empress v. Deodhar Singh (1), referred to. [p. 111, col. 1.]

Under s. 167, I. P. O., there is no difference between the preparation and the framing of an electoral roll. The signature and the delivery of the electoral rolls under r. 13 (1), Bihar Municipal Election Rules are operations subsequent to the preparation under sub-r. (1); and serve to indicate that the preparation was complete, but cannot be said to be essential to the framing required by s. 167, I. P. O., for it is not always impossible to show in other ways that the process of preparing was complete. Megraj v. Empress (2), referred to. [p. 111, cols. 1 & 2.]

A Head-clerk of a Municipality appointed under r. 13 (1) of the Bihar Municipal Election Rules, 1937, to prepare the electoral rolls, prepared them but went away on leave before signing or delivering them and they were therefore, signed and delivered by his locum tenens:

Held, that for s. 167, I. P. O., to apply the preparing and framing must be complete and final so far as the author is concerned, and it was difficult to exclude anything that it would have been permissible for the Head Clerk to do to the rolls until the time came for his signing them and delivering them. He could not therefore be convicted under s. 167. [p. 112, col. 2.]

Rule 13 (1) of the Bihar Municipal Election Rules, 1937, does not require the Chairman to make the appointment in writing. The rule is not intended to deal with the manner of appointment at all, and

Or. R. App. against an order of the Magistrate, 1st Class, Dinapore, dated July 3, 1940.

Messrs. Ramanugrah Prasad and L. B. Lal, for the Petitioner.

The Assistant Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Order.—This is an application in revision against the conviction of the petitioner under s. 167 of the I. P. O. A general election of the Dinapore Nizamat Municipality was fixed for January 10, 1938, and the Chairman of the Municipality, acting under r. 13 (1) of the Bihar Municipal Election Rules, 1937, appointed the Head Clerk of the Municipality,—a post held by the petitioner—with the tax-collectors of the Municipality as his assistants, to prepare the electoral rolls of all persons entitled to be registered as voters in each of the five wards into which the Municipality was divided at that time. In September, 1937, Govt. intimated that they were contemplating the division of the Municipality into single-seated wards and asked that the election proceedings be postponed. In October came a Govt. Notification dividing the Municipality into sixteen wards instead of the former five plural-seated wards. The general election in accordance with this new division was fixed for May 11, 1938. Under r. 13 (3) the electoral rolls were to be signed and delivered to the Chairman not less than 120 days before the date fixed for the general election; and on January 11, 1938, electoral rolls were so handed over to the Chairman, including Exs. 20 and 20/1, the rolls for Wards IV and V, which were admittedly written by the petitioner. The prosecution case was that in each of these rolls there were incorrect entries made by the petitioner

"intending thereby and knowing it to be likely that you may thereby cause injury to the persons affected, particularly the Congress candidates seeking election as Commissioners", and that he thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 167, I. P. O. There was another charge under ss. 471/465, I. P. O., but we are not concerned with it now, though it is curious that Magistrate thought that there was a separate charge under each of these two sections. To the charge under s. 167, from which I have been quoting, were appended by way of particulars five items in connection with Ward No. IV (Ex. 20) and five in connection with Ward No. V (Ex. 20/1). The Magistrate found that out of these ten entries specifically charged as incorrect, three were proved to be incorrect to the knowledge of the petitioner—two relating to his brother who is shown in Ward No. IV as Paras Nath and in Ward No. V as Dr. Paras Nath Gargaya, and one to his brother-in-law Sheonarayan Lal in Ward No. V. The learned Magistrate was not prepared to infer that the accused intended by such entries to harm the Congress party but he held that "his acts did result in, injuries to persons"—he named two such—"whose right of voting or chance of election was affected." The learned Sessions Judge also held that these entries had been definitely proved to be incorrect; but according to him "the obvious intention" was "injuring the chance of election of the candidates set up by the rival party." The charge spoke both of the intent and of the knowledge of the petitioner; either of these elements would be sufficient for a conviction, and while the Magistrate, apparently found the knowledge, the Sessions Judge found the intent, though towards the end of his judgment he speaks of the petitioner intending to cause or knowing it to be likely that he might cause injury by the incorrect entries. The Magistrate imposed a fine of Rs. 500 for the offence, but the Sessions Judge, reduced the sentence to Rs. 100 on the ground that the petitioner was

"evidently a tool in the hands of the then Chairman of the Municipality, who was apparently anxious to consolidate his own party and strengthen the chances of election of the members of his party."

It has been contended on behalf of the petitioner and the contention was advanced in the lower Courts as well—that s. 167 has no application to him because he was not a public servant as required by the section, nor was he, even if taken to be a public servant, "charged as such with the preparation of the electoral rolls" within the meaning of the section. The case for the prosecution was that he was a public servant within the eleventh clause of s. 21 of the I. P. O. read with Expl. 2. The former includes within the definition of public servant "every person who holds any office in virtue of which he is empowered to prepare... an electoral roll..." The Head Clerk of the Municipality had no authority, merely as Head Clerk, to prepare the electoral rolls, but the Chairman of the Municipality had appointed him to do so in exercise of the power given by r. 13 (1) of the Municipal Election Rules. This was, however, before Govt. divided the Municipality into the sixteen wards for which the general election was to be held on May 11, 1938. There was no fresh appointment of the petitioner by the Chairman under r. 13 (1) after the Govt. Notification of October, 1937, and it has, therefore, been urged that the petitioner was not a public servant nor charged as such with the preparation of the rolls, that were delivered to the Chairman on January 11, 1938. There is, however, no dispute that these electoral rolls included two rolls Exs. 20 and 20/1, written by the petitioner himself. It is also clear that the petitioner wrote these rolls (even though he was not expressly appointed by the Chairman after the Notification of October to do so) for the reason that his earlier appointment under the rule was taken to extend to the deferred election, and taken not by the petitioner alone, but by the Chairman as well. As the petitioner himself said in a statement made in October, 1938, to Pandey R. Sahay, one of the Magistrates who inquired into the matter, the appointment made by the Chairman in June or July (to prepare electoral rolls) was never revoked. Explanation 2 to s. 21, I. P. O. provides that wherever the word 'public servant' occur, they shall be understood of every person who is in actual possession of the situation of a public servant, whatever legal defect there may be in his right to hold that situation. The learned Advocate for the petitioner has contended that though this explanation may be available in cases where appointments suffer from informality, it cannot have any application to a case where there was a total absence of authority. The explanation, however, speaks of "whatever legal defect there may be", and r. 13 (1) of the Municipal Election Rules does not require the Chairman to make the appointment in writing. In the present case there was an express appointment of the petitioner made in writing by the Chairman in June or July, at a time when the Municipality was only divided into five wards. After the division of the Municipality into sixteen wards it became necessary to prepare the electoral rolls of persons entitled to be registered as voters in each of these new wards, but the Chairman made no new appointment for this work. The petitioner, however, acted as if he had been appointed to do this work, and the electoral rolls, two of which were entirely written by him, were accepted by the Chairman when delivered to him on January 11, by a locum tenens during the absence of the petitioner on short leave. Rule 13(1) of the Election Rules does not seem to be intended to deal with the manner of appointment at all, and only lays down which authority is to appoint a person to prepare the rolls. The learned Sessions Judge took the rule to require an express appointment, but, I find it difficult to read this into the rule, and the learned Judge himself saw much force in the prosecution contention that "the very moment the appellant undertook the preparation of the electoral rolls, either under a verbal order of the Chairman or purporting to act under the powers given to him by the earlier order of appointment, he became a public servant within the meaning of the eleventh clause of s. 21 read with Expl. 2."

The learned Advocate for the petitioner has contended that there is no evidence that the petitioner was appointed by any verbal order of the Chairman. That may be, but there is nothing to prevent such an order being fairly inferred from the facts that the petitioner had been expressly appointed in June or July and appointed because he was the Head Clerk, that he continued to be Head Clerk after the new division of the Municipality and prepared the rolls, and that the Chairman who had never revoked the appointment of June or July accepted them. The absence of a formal appointment is immaterial; the petitioner was indubitably "in actual possession of the situation of a public servant" within the clause and the explanation. In my opinion, therefore, he was rightly held to be a public servant in the circumstances. Section 167 further requires that he should be shown, as such public servant, to have been charged with the preparation of any document etc. It has been urged that the prosecution fails in this respect for want of an express order appointing the petitioner to prepare the rolls in question. But the words "charged" in the section is not to be very narrowly construed—see Queen-Empress v. Deodhar Singh (1), a case in which it was held that a Sub-Inspector of Police was charged with the preparation of a report within the meaning of s. 218 of the I. P. O. (a section which closely resembles s. 167 and will be again referred to) when it appeared that he submitted such a report in pursuance only of a practice requiring such a report. The word "charged" does not therefore provide any additional defence to the petitioner. It is true, as I have already said, that it was no part of his ordinary duty as Head Clerk to prepare any electoral roll: without more he could not even be a public servant within cl. 11 of s. 21. The work of preparing electoral rolls could only fall to him on appointment by the Chairman under r. 13 (1). For the new elections his appointment was implied—in continuation of the former express appointment, and it was taken by the petitioner no less than by the Chairman to be an appointment to prepare new rolls, which not only made a public servant of him but also charged him as such with the preparation of the rolls. The petitioner's double contention that he was not a public servant and was not as such public servant charged with the preparation of the electoral rolls must, therefore, be overruled.

It has been further contended on behalf of the petitioner that he cannot be said to have "framed" the electoral rolls within the meaning of s. 167. The contention is based on the fact that from January 8, 1938, to after January 11, 1938, when the rolls were delivered to the Chairman, the petitioner was away on leave, and that though the rolls (Exs. 20 and 20/1) had been written by the petitioner, it was his locum tenens, one Shiva Prasad Varma who was not examined in the case, that signed the rolls and delivered them to the Chairman. The learned Advocate has pointed out that s. 167 speaks of the framing of the document by the public servant charged with its preparation. He has also referred to r. 13 (3) of the Election Rules which requires the persons appointed to prepare the electoral roll, to sign and deliver it to the Chairman. On the very face of the sub-rule, however, read with sub-r. (1), it is clear that the preparation of the electoral roll is distinct from signing it and delivering it. As to s. 167, it is difficult to see any sensible difference between the preparation and the framing of an electoral roll. According to the dictionaries 'to prepare' is to make ready or make by a regular process, and 'to frame', to construct by combination of parts or adaptation to design; and no case has been suggested before me in which a person who prepares a document in the ordinary meaning of the former word could yet be said not to have framed it (provided the preparation is complete and final), or vice versa. The learned Advocate points out that the electoral rolls prepared under sub-r. (1) of r. 13 can only be further operated on after they are signed and delivered to the Chairman. But even so, the signature and the delivery are operations subsequent to the preparation under sub-r. (1); they would serve to indicate that the preparation was complete, but cannot be said to be essential to the framing required by s. 167, for it is not always impossible to show in other ways that the process of preparing was complete. In Megraj v. Empress (2), it was contended that an offence under s. 218 of the I. P. O. (a section which deals with the offence of a public servant framing an incorrect record, expressed in the same terms as the offence under s. 167 of framing an incorrect document, though with a different intent) could not be deemed to have been committed as the documents had never been submitted to the proper authorities. The contention was overruled and it was held that it was not necessary to constitute a complete offence under the section that the incorrect document should be submitted to another person, or be otherwise used by the writer:

"The requirements of the section are satisfied if it is shown that the document has been prepared by a public servant charged with its preparation in a manner which he knows to be incorrect and with the knowledge that he is thereby likely to cause loss to the public".

"if after such preparation he submits the document, with intent thereby to procure credit for or payment of more than to his own knowledge is due to him, all the elements of an attempt to cheat in its simple or aggravated form (s. 417 or s. 418, I. P. O.) would be present."

I am, therefore, unable to accept the contention that because the electoral rolls were signed and delivered by Sheo Prasad Varma, therefore the petitioner cannot be said to have prepared or framed them. It was argued below that the petitioner's responsibility for the rolls ceased when he went on leave on January 8. The learned Sessions Judge declined to accept this contention because "the making of the rolls was entirely in the petitioner's charge. His locum tenens merely signing and delivering them. It has been argued for the petitioner that this overlooks the consideration that the petitioner might, if he had not been away have changed his mind in respect of the incorrect entries and corrected them before the time came to deliver them to the Chairman, or in other words, that the petitioner had not completed his preparation of the rolls. The learned Sessions Judge has observed that no explanation has been offered for either of the two incorrect entries—he was then considering the entries relating to Paras Nath—and that the petitioner could not raise the plea of bona fide mistake because Paras Nath was after all his own brother. But it is to be noticed that no explanation was called for on this point from the petitioner by the trying Magistrate who, as I have already said, was not prepared to infer that the petitioner intended to harm the Congress party as stated in one part of the charge. There is also no suggestion that the petitioner went on leave merely to shift his responsibility on to his locum tenens; it seems clear on the contrary that he did so because of the illness of a daughter who died in the following month. The learned Magistrate took the view that the petitioner did not really expect his locum tenens “the officiating fellow”, as he put it, to correct his mistake, but left the rolls in the state of completeness which is connected by the word ‘framed’. He added that the fact that the petitioner did not sign them “could only be attributed either to gross carelessness in view of the peremptory provisions of r. (13) (3) or to deep game to have others hauled up for his mistakes.” The former hypothesis, however is rather inconsistent with the Magistrate’s view that the petitioner did not expect his locum tenens to correct his mistakes, and the latter, with his finding that the petitioner was not convincingly shown to have intended to harm the Congress party. The learned Advocate for the petitioner has laid stress on this observation of the Magistrate as suggesting that he was not really convinced that the petitioner had left the rolls in a state of completeness. We cannot, in the circumstances of this case, exclude as too remote the possibility that if the petitioner had remained on duty, he might have corrected the incorrect entries before signing and delivering the rolls. The petitioner was not asked to explain why he had made the incorrect entries, and we can, therefore, only conjecture what was happening. As the Sessions Judge has said the petitioner was only a tool in the hands of the then Chairman of the Municipality, and the latter was apparently anxious to consolidate his own party and strengthen the chances of election of the members of his party. This influence may not inconceivably have waned in the party politics of the time before the date for delivering the roll to the Chairman, opposed as he was to the party of the Ministry then in power. The learned Advocate for the petitioner has pointed out that under the Election Rules the rolls handed over to the Chairman were to be published as draft rolls only, being finally settled by a revising committee which was not to be appointed by the Chairman and which was to hear claims and objections invited by notice public notice. The value of the draft rolls must, therefore not be exaggerated. And this makes it even less improbable that the mistakes as the Magistrate apparently regarded them might have been corrected before January 11, if the petitioner had not been compelled to go on leave for urgent, private reasons. It is at any rate, difficult on the record of this case to hold that when the petitioner went on leave on January 8, he had done to the electoral rolls all that he intended to do, and could have done before the time came to deliver them to the Chairman. I am not unaware that s. 106 of the Evi. Act places upon the petitioner the burden of proving facts especially within his knowledge. But as was pointed out in U. Damapala v. Emperor (3) this section cannot be used to support a conviction unless the offence is convincingly brought home to the accused person. There is further the failure of the Magistrate to question the petitioner on the point. For s. 167 to apply the preparing and framing must be complete and final so far as the author is concerned, and it is difficult to exclude anything that it would have been permissible for the petitioner to do to the rolls until the time came for his signing them and delivering them. It has also not been found that the petitioner handed the papers over to his locum tenens as completed rolls. I consider it extremely doubtful in the circumstances whether the petitioner could be properly held to have framed the electoral rolls in the sense of final preparation. I must accordingly allow this application and set aside the conviction and sentence passed upon the petitioner. Should the fine imposed upon the petitioner have been paid, it must be refunded to him on application.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), s. 72—Risk note form H—“Misconduct”, meaning of—Duty of Court Railway held not guilty of misconduct.

The word “misconduct” in risk note Form H means “improper conduct.” The Court has in cases of this sort to consider all the facts and circumstances and then arrive at a conclusion as to whether the conduct of the railway employees was such as to render the railway administration liable in damages upon a reasonable view of the matter. If it is established that the employees of the railway administration, in defiance of the ordinary practice, placed tins of molasses in the wagon which contained the plaintiff's yarn consignment or alternatively, if they placed the plaintiff's consignment in a wagon which contained tins of molasses, it must be held that they acted recklessly, knowing that contamination and damage would be a likely and probable result, and that by their conduct they showed themselves to be indifferent to such results. Where, however, the plaintiff has merely proved that the packages were received in good condition at the station from which they were despatched and that they were found to be damaged by molasses on arrival at the destination, the railway cannot be held to be guilty of misconduct in the absence of proof that they placed tins of molasses in the wagon containing the plaintiff's yarn consignment. 147 Ind. Cas. 752 (2), 148 Ind. Cas. 396 (3) and 144 Ind. Cas. 113 (4); referred to, 80 Ind. Cas. 737 (1), distinguished.

C. R. App. against the order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Ballia, dated September 28, 1939.

Mr. Mushtaq Ahmad, for the Applicant.

Mr. B. Malik, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This is an application in revision under s. 25, Small Cause Courts Act. The applicant was the plaintiff in a suit to which the defendants were the Bengal & North Western Railway Company and the Bombay Baroda & Central India Railway Co. The facts may be briefly stated thus: A consignment of five packages of yarn was despatched to the plaintiff three being sent by firm Nehal Chand Baldeo Sahai and two by Shambhu Nath. The consignment was despatched under risk note form H from the Gwaltoli Station at Cawnpore to the address of the plaintiff at Ballia. On arrival the packages were found to be soiled with molasses, and the plaintiff accordingly instituted a suit for damages against the two railway companies. The learned Judge has dismissed the suit, finding that the defendant companies are not liable for any damages under the terms of risk note form H. He has mainly relied upon a decision of this Court in E. I. Ry. Co. Ltd. v. Lala Janki Prasad (1) but in that case a risk note which is no longer in force and whose terms differed materially from the Risk Note Form H with which we are now concerned was under consideration.

It is nowhere pleaded by the defendants that the goods were in a damaged condition when they were brought to the Gwaltoli station for despatch and it may safely be presumed that they were undamaged at that time; otherwise they would not have been accepted. And it is an admitted fact that on arrival at Ballia the packages were soiled on one side with molasses. The learned Judge says:

“At the most, due to neglect of the servants of either of the railway companies, tins of molasses were placed in the bogie in which the bales in suit were placed.”

On the assumption that this is a finding of fact, it is contended for the plaintiff that the defendants are liable for the damage caused to the packages. Risk note form H provides that in consideration for the consignment being charged for at reduced rates the cosignor does.

“... hereby agree and undertake to hold the said railway administration harmless and free from any loss, destruction or deterioration of damages to all or any of such consignment from any cause whatever except upon proof that such loss, destruction, deterioration or damage arose from the misconduct of the railway administration's servants.”

Then follow certain provisos with which we are not concerned. The issue therefore is whether the plaintiff has proved misconduct on the part of the defendants within the meaning of the word as used in this risk note. I have been referred to a considerable number of authorities mostly from other High Courts, which disclose a somewhat confusing diversity of view as regards the proper definition of the word “misconduct” in risk note form H. In M. & S. M. Ry. Co. Ltd. v. Sunderjee Kalidas (2), it was observed as follows:

“... misconduct is not necessarily established by proving even culpable negligence... misconduct is something opposed to accident or negligence; it is the intentional doing of something which the doer knows to be wrong, or which he does recklessly, not caring what the result may be.”

In Jamunadas Ramjas v. E. I. Ry. Co. Ltd. (3), it was held that “misconduct” would ordinarily mean failure to do what is required of a person to be done. In that case rain water had leaked into a wagon and had damaged a consignment of grain, and the learned Judge at p. 632* says :

"Certainly it was the duty of the railway administration to provide against such ordinary contingency such as rain water forcing itself into the wagon and causing damage to grain, etc. in it. The fact that the rain water did enter the wagon and caused damage to the plaintiff's consignment is itself sufficient to show that proper and requisite precautions were not taken by the railway administration to provide against such contingency."

Between these two somewhat extreme views as to the meaning of "misconduct" there are many other definitions by learned Judges which I do not think it necessary to cite in this judgment. The only case from our own High Court to which I have been referred in which the meaning of "misconduct" has been considered is Secretary of State v. Madhuri Das Narain Das (4) in which there is an obiter dictum of Niamatullah, J. to the following effect :

"I may . . . note that the word "misconduct" occurring in risk note B is of wider import than the popular sense in which that word is used. Want of proper care and caution may amount to misconduct within the meaning of the risk note B. A mistake in the preparation of the railway receipt which throws doubt on the identity of the consignment to which it relates is a misconduct in the above sense."

Admittedly the terms of risk note B as now in force are similar to the terms of risk note H. It seems to me that it will serve no very useful purpose to attempt a general definition of "misconduct" in risk note form H. But if I did venture upon one, I should say that the simplest and most non-committal definition of the word would be "improper conduct." What the Court has to do in cases of this sort is to consider all the facts and circumstances and then arrive at a conclusion as to whether the conduct of the railway employees was such as to render the railway administration liable in damages upon a reasonable view of the matter. It was admitted in the present case by two of the defence witnesses, one of whom is the Traffic Inspector of Claims of the B. & N. W. Ry. Co., that molasses or other fluid substances are not placed in the same wagon with yarn, etc., and the obvious reason for this is the danger of the packages of yarn or other similar goods suffering contamination and damage. This being the practice of the company, it seems to me that if it is established that the employees of the railway administration, in defiance of the ordinary practice, placed tins of molasses in the wagon which contained the plaintiff's consignment or alternatively, if they placed the plaintiff's consignment in a wagon which contained tins of molasses, it must be held that they acted recklessly, knowing that contamination and damage would be likely and probable result, and that by their conduct they showed themselves to be indifferent to such results. If this has been proved to the satisfaction of the Court, I should hold that the plaintiff has established misconduct on the part of the defendants within the meaning of risk note H.

But has this been proved? When the learned Judge says that "at the most" there was neglect of the employees by placing tins of molasses in the same wagon, this does not appear to have been a finding of fact on his part; all that he was attempting to do was to put the case at its highest on behalf of the plaintiff. Since therefore I am not bound by any finding of fact, I am free to consider whether on the proved facts misconduct has been committed. It is a curious fact that either of the two witnesses for the defendants was asked the obvious question whether tins of molasses were or were not placed in the wagon containing the plaintiff's consignment between Gowaltoli station and Ballia. What the plaintiff has proved is that the packages were received in good condition at the Gwaltoli station and that they were found to be damaged by molasses on arrival at Ballia. The question is whether this is enough to prove misconduct on the part of the railway administration. Learned Counsel for the defendants contends that the damage may have been caused in several ways; for instance, he says that while the packages were on the railway premises at the Gwaltoli station, a tin of molasses somewhere in the vicinity may have leaked and the molasses may have trickled as far as the packages in question and so caused the damage. I am bound to concede that there are possibilities of this kind and in such a case, although there might be negligence of some sort, I do not think that it would necessarily amount to "misconduct" on the part of the railway administration. It was for the plaintiff to prove misconduct, but as I have already said, all that he has established is that the goods were found to be damaged on arrival at Ballia, he does not appear to have made any attempt whatsoever by cross-examining the witnesses for the defence to elicit what was the act or what were the acts of the railway employees which resulted in this damage. As I said before, if the plaintiff had proved—as he probably could have done without much difficulty—that molasses had been placed in the same wagon and if there was a finding to this effect, I should have allowed this revision; but as it is I am of opinion that misconduct has not been proved. This being my view, I dismiss this application with costs.

Mussalman Waqf Act (XLII of 1923 as amended in Bombay by Act XVIII of 1935), ss. 2 (e), 3, 5, 10-B—Trustee, if can dedicate—Applicability of Act to any property of waqf within jurisdiction of local Court—S. 5, scope of—S. 10-B—Mussalman Waqf Rules, 1936, r. 26—Person failing to deliver accounts under s. 3—Court holding that person fell within terms of Act and directing papers to be sent to Public Prosecutor—There was held sufficient compliance with r. 26.

It cannot be said that the only person who can dedicate a property must be a beneficial owner; a trustee can also dedicate. The collection of money on terms which made it charitable in the hands of the trustees who held it, their subsequent investment of that money in immovable property, and their declaration of a trust of that immovable property for the charitable purpose for which it was held constitutes a good dedication.

A mutwalli with property within the local limits of the Small Cause Court at Bombay, has to furnish under s. 3 the required particulars, although other properties of the waqf may be situate and those who benefit from the waqf may be resident, outside Bombay or outside British India. The Act applies to any property of a waqf within the jurisdiction of the local Court.

There cannot be an offence under s. 5 unless a statement has been delivered under s. 3.

The accused was called upon to deliver accounts under s. 3, Mussalman Waqf Act, and he failed to do so. Thereupon the Court,—the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court—holding that the accused fell within the terms of the Act, directed that the papers be sent to the Public Prosecutor in order that he might take the appropriate action:

Held, that there was sufficient compliance with r. 26 of Mussalman Waqf Rules, 1936, as required by s. 10-B though it would be better in order to avoid any question, that formal sanction should be given independently of the judgment.

Cr. A. from the conviction and sentence passed by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Bombay.

Sir Jamshedji Kanga and Mr. R. M. Shah, for the Accused.

Messrs. M. C. Setalvad (Advocate-General) and R. A. Jahagirdar, (Govt. Pleader), for the Crown.

• Beaumont, C. J.—This is an appeal by the accused against his conviction by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Bombay, under s. 10, Mussalman Waqf Act (XLII of 1923), for failure to comply with ss. 3 and 5 of the said Act. The facts are not in dispute so far as they are material for the present purpose. The accused with others collected monies from Dawoodi Bohras at Sunnel, which is in the Indore State, for the purpose of building a Madressa at Sunnel, and a Madressa was duly built. On February 26, 1932, the trustees of the Madressa purchased an immovable property at Bhoiwada in Bombay out of the funds belonging to the Madressa, and on December 7, 1934, they executed a declaration of trust, which is Ex. D, admitting that they had purchased the Bhoiwada property out of monies collected from Dawoodi Bohras at Sunnel for the support of a Madressa of Sunnel, and declaring that they held the property upon trust, in substance, for the Madressa. The appellant was called upon to deliver accounts under s. 3, Mussalman Waqf Act, and he failed to do so. Thereupon the Court,—that is the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court at Bombay who is the Court for the purposes of this case—holding that the appellant fell within the terms of the Act, directed that the papers be sent to the Public Prosecutor of Bombay in order that he might take the appropriate action. This was done, and the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate convicted the accused under ss. 3 and 5, Mussalman Waqf Act.

Four points have been taken in appeal. The first is that the necessary sanction to the prosecution has not been given. By the Mussalman Waqf (Bom. Amendment) Act which is Bom. Act, XVIII of 1935, s. 13, there was added to the principal Act s. 10-B which directs that "no prosecution under this Act shall be instituted except by or with the previous sanction of the Court given in the prescribed manner." The prescribed manner means the manner prescribed by rules under the principal Act. Rule 26 of the Bom. Mussalman Waqf Rules, 1936, provides that the order of sanction shall state the offence in respect of which the accused is to be prosecuted. In my opinion, the last sentence of the judgment of the learned Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court in which he holds that the appellant has committed default by failing to file particulars and accounts, as required by ss. 3 and 5, Mussalman Waqf Act, in respect of this property and has thus rendered himself liable to be prosecuted under s. 10 and in which he directs the papers to be sent to the Public Prosecutor for taking necessary action against the appellant sufficiently complies with r. 26 though it might be better in future in order to avoid any question, that formal sanction should be given independently of the judgment.

The second point taken is that a trustee cannot create a waqf and the third point is that there can be no waqf of a foreign charity. These points can be dealt with together, because they both turn on the definition of "waqf" and the terms of s. 3 of the principal Act. Section 3 provides that within six months from the commencement of this Act every mutwalli shall furnish to the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property of the waqf of which he is the mutwalli is situated, a statement containing the particulars prescribed. So that if one finds a mutwalli with property within the local limits of the Small Cause Court at Bombay, it seems to me clear that he has to furnish the required particulars, although other properties of the waqf may be situate and those who benefit from the waqf may be resident, outside Bombay or outside British India. That disposes of the contention that the Act does not apply to a foreign waqf. It applies to any property of a waqf within the jurisdiction of the local Court.

Then we have to see what is the meaning of "waqf" in order to deal with the point that a trustee cannot create a waqf. Now, "waqf" is defined in s. 2 (e) of the principal Act and we are only concerned with that definition and we are not concerned with the question often difficult as to whether a particular trust constitutes a waqf under Muhammadan Law. Under the definition in this Act "waqf" means the permanent dedication by a person professing the Mussalman faith of any property for any purpose recognized by the Mussalman Law as religious, pious or charitable. It is not disputed that the purpose of benefiting the Madressa at Sunnel is a purpose recognized as charitable by the Mussalman Law; but it is argued that there has been no permanent dedication by a person professing the Mussalman faith, because it is said that the only person who can dedicate a property must be a beneficial owner and a trustee cannot dedicate. I know of no authority for that proposition, though of course a trustee must keep within the terms of his trust, but in any event the dedication here was not merely the declaration of trust of 1934 by trustees. The dedication is constituted by the collection of money on terms which made it charitable in the hands of the trustees who held it, their subsequent investment of that money in immovable property, and their declaration of a trust of that immovable property for the charitable purpose for which it was held. That, to my mind, constitutes a good dedication. In my opinion therefore the learned Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court was right in holding that this was waqf property and the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate was similarly right.

Then the fourth point taken is that the conviction under s. 5, Mussalman Waqf Act, is bad, because s. 5 cannot come into operation unless s. 3 has been complied with. It is not an argument which invokes my sympathy, because it really enable the accused to escape from the consequences of a breach of s. 5 by his own wrong in committing a breach of s. 3; but, on the wording of s. 5, I do not see any answer to the argument. Section 5 provides that within three months after March 31, next following the date on which the statement referred to in s. 3 has been furnished and thereafter within three months of March 31, in every year, every mutwalli shall prepare and furnish to the Court a certain statement; but unless a statement has been furnished under s. 3, there is no date within which he is required to furnish a statement under s. 5 and it seems to me that on the wording of s. 5, there cannot be an offence under that section unless a statement has been delivered under s. 3. I think therefore that we must set aside the conviction under s. 5, but we uphold the conviction under s. 3. The fine of Rs. 200 imposed under s. 5 to be refunded.

Sen, J.—I agree.

s. Order accordingly.

Bengal Village Local Self-Government Act (V of 1919), s. 17-A—Question whether person is properly elected as president of Union Board—Jurisdiction of Civil Court to decide—Rules for election of president—Suit for declaration that rival candidate is not properly elected president—Plaintiff, if can be declared president.

The Civil Courts have jurisdiction unless their jurisdiction has been definitely taken away. There is no section in the Bengal Village Local Self-Govt. Act which takes away the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to decide that certain person is not properly elected as a president of a Union Board.

In a suit by a candidate for a declaration that his rival candidate is not properly elected as a president of the Union Board, the plaintiff is not entitled to a declaration that he (the plaintiff) is the president unless it has been found that under the rules made by the Local Govt. he has been duly elected as president.

Mr. Radhika Ranjan Guha, for the Appellant.

Mr. Hemendra Kumar Das, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal is by defendant No. 1. The question at issue between the parties is whether defendant No. 1 or the plaintiff has been elected as president of a certain Union Board in the District of Dacca. There are altogether nine members of the board. They were all present at the election. As required by the rules, the circle officer presided over the meeting. The plaintiff obtained six votes, defendant No. 1, the remaining three. Both the plaintiff and defendant No. 1 voted for themselves. After the votes had been recorded, the circle officer on most flimsy grounds ignored three of the votes given in favour of the plaintiff, pretended that each candidate had no equal number of votes and proceeded to give his casting vote in favour of defendant No. 1. The finding of the Munsif that he was acting in collusion with defendant No. 1 is fully justified. The plaintiff then instituted the present suit and obtained a decree. Defendant No. 1 appealed without success to the District Court and now appeals to this Court. The first ground urged in support of the appeal is that the Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to decide the question and that the suit ought to have been dismissed as incompetent. There can be no question that the Civil Courts have jurisdiction unless their jurisdiction has been definitely taken away. It cannot even be pretended that there is any section in the Bengal Village Local Self-Govt. Act which takes away the jurisdiction of the Courts. There is merely an agreement based upon analogy. Section 17-A is concerned with the election of members of a Union Board. It provides that such an election shall not be called in question in any Court. Then s. 17-B provides a special tribunal for deciding such disputes.

The present suit has nothing to do with the election of a member of a Union Board. It is not the plaintiff's case that the appellant has been improperly elected. It is not disputed that he is a member of the Union Board. It cannot possibly be argued that, because a special tribunal has been provided to deal with election disputes, a precisely similar tribunal must by implication be provided to decide questions about the election of a president. There is no connection whatever between the two causes of action. As the jurisdiction of the Courts has not been excluded the Munsif was entitled to entertain and decide the suit. The second ground urged in support of the appeal is with regard to the relief granted. It is contended that the plaintiff should only be given a declaration to the effect that the appellant is not the president and that it should then be left to the District Board to appoint a president under the provisions of s. 8 of the Act. The precise relief to which the plaintiff is entitled must of course depend upon the findings in a particular case. Certainly the plaintiff is not entitled to a declaration that he is the president unless it has been found that under the rules made by the Local Govt. he has been duly elected as president. Rule 32 provides that the candidate for whom there is the largest number of votes shall be declared by the presiding officer to be the president of the Board. The plaintiff's case is that he obtained six votes while the appellant obtained only three. If he can establish this case then under the rules he is entitled to a declaration that he has been properly elected president of the Board.

Both the Courts below have found that the respondent obtained six votes. He examined the members who voted for him and he is supported by their evidence. The first vote he obtained was his own vote. The circle officer disallowed this on the ground that he had not signed the paper. The finding of the Munsif is that this was due to the trickery of the circle officer. The plaintiff was given to understand that he might sign his name on a piece of paper in order to show that he was a candidate. Then when he afterwards discovered that this was supposed to be the voting paper he asked that it might be returned to him so that he might affix his signature. The circle officer refused to do this. It is not disputed on behalf of the respondent that under the rules voting papers require to be signed. There can be no question that this paper was not signed. The Circle Officer ought to have returned it to the plaintiff in order that he might sign it. Of the next two papers, one was given in favour of Sheikh Maniruddin and the other in favour of Munshi Maniruddin. I do not pretend to understand how the circle officer can have thought that these two papers might have been meant to be votes in favour of the appellant whose name is Golam Mortuza Moulik. There cannot be any question that the decision of the Courts below to the effect that the plaintiff obtained six votes is the only decision which could be supported by the evidence. Finally it was argued that in deciding this question the learned Judge and the learned Munsif imported their own personal knowledge. They know nothing whatever about the parties to the case or what their names are. The learned Judge certainly says that to anyone having a smattering of Arabic, it would be clear that 'Maniruddin' is the real name; "Munshi" is an honorific title. I myself cannot even pretend to have a smattering of Arabic but I know perfectly well that "Munshi" may be a title, and I have no doubt whatever that the circle officer ignored these votes on merely flimsy grounds. The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), ss. 26 (2), 44—Partner continuing business of partnership after its dissolution—Whether succeeds to business within s. 26 (2)—S. 44, if applies.

A firm for the purposes of assessment to income-tax is an entity quite distinct from the partners who compose it. Consequently where a partner carries on the business of the partnership after dissolution of the partnership, he succeeds to the business within the meaning of s. 26 (2) and s. 44 does not apply to such a case. Karuppaswami Mooppanar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras (1), 181 Ind. Cas. 525 (2), 148 Ind. Cas. 594 (3) and Faraday, Rodgers & Eller v. Cartner (4), relied on, 159 Ind. Cas. 840 (5), explained.

O. P. reference by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras.

Mr. K. V. Sesha Ayyangar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. V. Ramaswami Iyer, for the Respondent.

Leach, C. J.—The main question raised in this reference is whether a partner who continues the partnership business after the dissolution of the partnership succeeds to the business within the meaning of s. 26 (2), Income Tax Act, 1922. On September 16, 1935 the assessee and one Venkatarama Ayyar entered into a partnership for the production and exhibition of a cinema film called "Pathi Bhakthi." The partnership continued until the month of May of the following year, when Venkatarama Ayyar retired from the partnership and was paid the amount of the profits which represented his share, namely the sum of Rs. 9,524. Thereafter the film was exhibited by the assessee for his own benefit. For the assessment year 1937-38 the income-tax authorities assessed Venkatarama Ayyar in respect of this sum of Rs. 9,524 and he paid the tax, but later the income-tax authorities considered that they were wrong in so doing, and to have the question settled, the Commissioner of Income-tax has, under the provisions of s. 66 (2) of the Act referred the following question:

"Whether the provisions of s. 26 (1) or s. 26 (2) of the Act are applicable to this case and the petitioner is liable to be assessed on the sum of Rs. 9,524 which represents the ex-partner's share of the profits of the film business."

In his statement of the case the Commissioner has very properly stated that should the Court answer this question against the assessee he would exclude the sum of Rs. 9,524 from the assessment of Venkatarama Ayyar, who, of course, would thereupon be entitled to a refund. Section 26 (2) reads as follows:

"Where at the time of making an assessment under s. 23, it is found that the person carrying on any business, profession or vocation has been succeeded in such capacity by another person, the assessment shall be made on such person succeeding, as if he had been carrying on the business, profession or vocation throughout the previous year, and as if he had received the whole of the profits for that year."

For the assessee it is said that inasmuch as he was a partner in the business of exhibiting this film before he acquired the right to exhibit it for his sole benefit there could be no succession, because as part owner of the business he could not succeed to himself. This argument ignores the fact that a partner is not the partnership. A firm for the purposes of assessment to income-tax is an entity quite distinct from the partners who compose it. In two cases which have come before this Court it has been accepted that where a partner carries on the business of the partnership after dissolution he does "succeed" within the meaning of s. 26 (2). These cases are Karuppaswami Mooppanar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras (1) and Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Muthukaruppan Chettiar (2). For the assessee, it has been suggested that the judgments in these cases cannot be regarded as deciding the question because this proposition was not disputed. It is true that the argument which has been addressed to this Court was not addressed to the Court in the two cases mentioned; but the cases cannot be ignored for this reason. Obviously it was not considered to be worth while taking the point. If the partnership is an entity distinct from the partners there must be succession in circumstances such as we have here. The Rangoon High Court took the same view in Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. N. N. Firm (3) and the same view has been taken in England: see Faraday, Rodgers & Eller v. Cartner (4).

In the course of his arguments, Mr. Ramaswami Ayyar has suggested that the decision of this Court in Kesava Rao v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras (5) has application here, but this cannot be accepted. There the Court was merely concerned with the question whether there could be succession within the meaning of s. 26 (2) in the case of the death of one member of a joint Hindu family. It was held that there could not be. It was not a matter of succession at all. It was a matter of survivorship. The family remained joint, notwithstanding the death of the member. In no sense of the word could it be said that there was succession or a change in the identity of the assessee. It has been also argued on behalf of the assessee, that as Venkatarama Ayyar has paid the tax on the Rs. 9,524, there cannot be a fresh assessment by reason of the provisions of s. 44 of the Act. That section says:

"Where any business, profession or vocation carried on by a firm has been discontinued, every person who was at the time of such discontinuance a member of such firm shall be jointly and severally liable for the amount of the tax payable in respect of the income, profits and gains of the firm."

This section only applies when there has been a discontinuance of the business, which

(1) 2 I T R 284; 7 I T C 283 (S B).

(3) 11 R 501; 148 Ind. Cas. 594; A I R 1934 Rang. 13; 2 I T R 85; 6 R Rang. 235 (S B).

(4) (1927) 11 Tax Cas. 565.

(5) 59 M 377; 159 Ind. Cas. 840; A I R 1936 Mad. 67; 70 M L J 13; 3 I T R 339; (1935) M W N 1237; 8 R M 553; 43 L W 155 (F B).

is not the case here. The section says that if a business is discontinued the partners shall nevertheless be jointly and severally liable for the profits which had been earned. We are not concerned here with a case where there has been a discontinuance of the business. We are concerned with a case where the same business has been carried on by one of the partners, and carried on without any break. In such a case the section which is applicable is s. 26 (2) and not s. 44. For the reasons indicated we answer the question referred in the affirmative. The Commissioner is entitled to his costs, Rs. 250.

AMEER ALI, J.

SOHONLAL DAGA—PLAINTIFF

versus

SREECHAND DAGA AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS

Libel—Action for—Publication to third party is essential—Tort—Action in—That defendant committed tort must be alleged—Allegation of tort against his guardian acting for him, whether allegation against defendant.

It is an essential part of a cause of action for libel, to allege publication which means to a third party, or such circumstances as will lead the Court to presume publication to a third party. Publication to the plaintiff, according to the law is not publication.

In order to found a cause of action in tort, it must be alleged that the defendant committed the tort. An allegation that the tort was committed by the defendant's guardian purporting to act on his behalf is not a pleading of a sufficient or proper nature alleging that the defendant committed the tort alleged.

Facts.—This was a suit on libel and there was an argument on the pleadings as to the maintainability of the suit. The following preliminary points were taken:

1. Has the Court jurisdiction to entertain the suit?
2. Has the plaintiff any cause of action?
3. Was there any publication of the letter alleged?
4. If so, was such publication by or on behalf of defendant No. 1.

Mr. S. M. Bose, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. K. P. Khaitan, for the Defendants.

Judgment.—This suit can be dealt with upon the pleading, and Mr. Khaitan was quite justified in asking me to deal with the issues of law, including those by way of demurrer. There are, in my opinion, two points where the plaint breaks down. In para. 2 the only publication alleged is to the plaintiff. That, according to the law, is not publication. I accept the position as set out in Bullen and Leake that it is an essential part of a cause of action for libel, to allege publication which means to a third party, or of course, such circumstances as will lead the Court to presume publication to a third party. This pleading in terms excludes publication to a third party. From this it follows that there is no cause of action, and secondly, no cause of action arose in Calcutta, the two points overlapping.

The other point on which the plaint fails is in the same paragraph, so far as defendant No. 1 is concerned. It is alleged that defendant No. 2 purported to act on behalf of defendant No. 1 though his lawyer. In my opinion in order to found a cause of action in tort, it must be alleged that the defendant committed the tort. It seems fairly obvious this is not the pleading. In point of fact, defendant No. 2 was the guardian of defendant No. 1; but in my opinion this is not a pleading of a sufficient or proper nature alleging that defendant No. 1 committed the tort alleged. Dealing therefore with the issues raised by Mr. Khaitan, which are before me, I answer Issue No. 1 in the negative, Issue No. 2 in the negative, Issue No. 3 in the negative and Issue No. 4 in the negative, the meaning of which I have just explained. This being the case, it will hardly be necessary to proceed to any evidence. The suit must be dismissed with costs. Certified fit for two Counsel.

UDHAO—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

NARAYAN—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VIII, r. 5—Defendant admitting to have executed bond for certain amount on certain date and admitting to have agreed to pay it on certain date—Case does not fall under O. VIII, r. 5—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 65—Debtor's application to Debt Conciliation Board, whether admission of liability within s. 65 (b)—C. P. Debt Conciliation Act (II of 1933), s. 9—Admission by debtor, of agreement to pay sum due on bond—S. 9 does not operate.

Where in a suit the defendant admits that he executed a bond for certain sum on a certain date, on taking accounts and also admits that he agreed to pay the amount on certain date, it is not a case which falls under O. VIII, r. 5, Civil P. C., of an implied admission. This is an example of an express admission.

The statement contained in the debtor's application to the Debt Conciliation Board cannot be regarded as an admission within the meaning of s. 65, Evi. Act. It is a statement. Under s. 6 of the Debt Conciliation Act the statement is not to be deemed a statement of the amount admittedly due but of the amount claimed. The debtor is in no sense promising to pay this amount: on the contrary he is applying to a Debt Conciliation Board with a view to having his liability cut down, and it cannot be inferred that there is any promise to pay anything or any admission of liability for anything.

Where there is an admission by the debtor of an agreement to pay the sum due on a bond, it is not necessary to prove the bond. Therefore s. 9 of the Debt Conciliation Act does not operate. That section does not declare that no suit could be brought on the debt. It merely states that some documents cannot be proved.

F. A. from the decree of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Yeotmal, dated August 26, 1936.

Mr. R. N. Padhye, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. V. Kelkar, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal is from a judgment decreeing the claim founded upon a loan for Rs. 4,000 effected on March 30, 1929. On the same date the defendant executed a bond in respect of the same transaction. Re-payments were made from time to time. On February 26, 1933 a payment of Rs. 5 was endorsed on the back of the bond. On March 25, 1933, there was a renewal. Rs. 4,400 was then found due and a bond was given for that amount. The bond, we are informed, contained interest clauses. The date of the suit is February 25, 1936.

On January 21, 1935, the debtor applied to a Debt Conciliation Board and included his debt on the bond of 1933, that item of his indebtedness being shown in his application in the following words:—

"Executed a bond for Rs. 4,400 in the year 1933. Interest at the rate of 8 annas per cent. per month. The amount of Rs. 4,870-6-0 is found due on the said bond."

The matter came before the Debt Conciliation Board, and the Board ordered the creditors to file statements and to produce various documents. The plaintiff failed to produce the bond of 1933. The Board accordingly treated his failure as coming within s. 9 of the Debt Conciliation Act, 1933, and intimated that the document would thereafter not be admissible in evidence against the debtor in any suit brought by the creditor or by any person claiming under him. A review application was made in which the creditor pointed out that his failure was due to floods. That review application failed and the Debt Conciliation Board maintained the position it had taken up. The matter came before the Civil Court in this case, and the Civil Court considered itself not bound by the findings of the Debt Conciliation Board. It said, however, that the Civil Court was bound by s. 9 (3) and held that the document could not be looked at; neither could the earlier bond be looked at for a like reason. But the Court decreed the claim on the ground that the plaintiff could resort to the original contract of loan and ignore the bond altogether.

Before us it has been pointed out that this is not a case of a loan with collateral security, but is a case of a loan transaction reduced to writing; and it is therefore argued that so far as the original contract of loan is concerned that is reduced to writing the terms of which are to be found in the bond executed in 1929, and therefore one cannot go outside that bond to find out what the terms were of that bond and the contract that it evidenced which came to an end when the new bond was brought into existence, because not only was the new bond brought into existence but a letter of even date signed by the plaintiff was given. That letter is proved in this case and contains the following statement: "after receiving credit for remission and payment, the previous stamp dated March 30, 1929, is cancelled." In other words the first bond ended and the contract it evidenced was brought to an end and was substituted by a new contract evidenced by the terms of the bond of 1933. Therefore it is said that as the contract has been reduced to the form of a document within the meaning of s. 91, Evi. Act, and as that document, the bond of 1933, in the circumstances here present, cannot be looked at by any Court, and as it follows from that and from s. 91, that no evidence at all can be given of the terms of the contract, the plaintiff's claim should have been dismissed with costs.

In this case, however, the defendant has admitted that he executed a bond for Rs. 4,400 on March 25, 1933, on taking accounts and has admitted that he agreed to pay the amount on April 15, 1935. That is, in our opinion, an admission that on March 3, 1935, he agreed to pay Rs. 4,400 on April 15, 1935 and in the light of that admission it was quite unnecessary for the plaintiff to prove anything in order to succeed to the extent of Rs. 4,400.

This is not a case, which falls under

O. VIII, r. 5 of an implied admission. This is an example of an express admission. It is said by the plaintiff that not only should Rs. 4,400 be awarded but that interest thereon should also be awarded because there is an implied admission as to interest derived through the other admissions contained in the written statement. But, in our opinion, bearing in mind the fact that this point has been taken for the first time in this Court, that there is no issue turning round the question of admission, and that we have a discretion in the case of an implied admission, under the proviso to O. VIII, r. 5, to require the fact to be proved otherwise than by such admission, we should require the fact of the interest reserved to be proved otherwise than by admission. Were the plaintiff driven to prove it he would find himself unable to do so because he would then have to put in the bond, and that bond the Court cannot look at. It is said, however, that the amount of interest can be derived from the entry abovementioned in the application, and s. 65 of the Evi. Act is relied on. It is necessary for the plaintiff to rely on s. 65 because obviously the primary evidence is the evidence of the bond; and the bond is in existence, is not destroyed or lost; but the plaintiff's difficulty is due to the fact that he is shut out by s. 9 of the Debt Conciliation Act from proving it.

Section 65 of the Evi. Act only helps the plaintiff, however, if the statement contained in the defendant's application to the Debt Conciliation Board can be regarded as an admission. We are not prepared to treat it as an admission. It is a statement. Under s. 6 of the Debt Conciliation Act the statement is not to be deemed a statement of the amount admittedly due but of the amount claimed. The defendant is in no sense promising to pay this amount: on the contrary he is applying to a Debt Conciliation Board with a view to having his liability cut down, and it cannot, we think, be inferred that there is any promise to pay anything or any admission of liability for anything.

However that may be here there is in the pleadings an admission of an agreement to pay Rs. 4,400 due on a bond. It is therefore not necessary to prove the bond. Therefore s. 9 of the Debt Conciliation Act does not operate. That section does not declare that no suit could be brought on the debt. It merely states that some documents cannot be proved. Here it is not necessary to prove the bond in order to establish liability to the extent of Rs. 4,400 due on April 15, 1935. The admission, however, does not go beyond that; and beyond that the plaintiff is unable to prove his claim.

The result is that the decree is varied, and the plaintiff's claim is allowed to the extent of Rs. 4,400 only together with proportionate costs in the lower Court. The defendant will have half his costs of this appeal.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 27—S. 27, if affected by s. 162, Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898)—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 395—Evidence of identification of those taking part in dacoity—Value of—Criminal trial—Evidence—Report of Police Sub-Inspector to his superior that certain persons were going to commit dacoity—Source of information not disclosed—Whether can be treated as first information—Trial by jury—Unanimous opinion of Judge and assessors as to credibility of witness—High Court is reluctant to differ.

Section 27, Evi. Act, is not affected by s. 162, Criminal P. C., being saved by s. 1 (2), Criminal P. C. 184 Ind. Cas. 593 (2) and 181 Ind. Cas. 1001 (3), approved. [p. 123, col. 2.]

Evidence of identification of those taking part in dacoities at night is apt to be unreliable. [p. 122, col. 2.]

The report made by the Police Sub-Inspector to his superiors that certain suspected persons were going to commit dacoity cannot be used as a sort of first information, if the Sub-Inspector has not in his report disclosed the source of his information, and the mere fact that he says that somebody told him that certain persons were going to commit a dacoity is no evidence at all against those persons. If the Sub-Inspector of Police wanted to prove as against the accused the information which he had received, he would be bound to give evidence as to the source of his information, and to call his informant. [p. 123, col. 1.]

The High Court always differs with reluctance from the unanimous opinion of the trial Judge and the assessors as to the credibility of witnesses. [ibid.] appeal against their convictions. We are indebted to Mr. R. R. Desai, who has represented the accused as amicus curiae, for the industry he has devoted to the case and the ability with which he has presented it. The case has some peculiar features. All the accused, except accused No. 18, are from the village of Savkheda in taluka Yaval, and it appears that on March 5, 1940 the Sub-Inspector of Police of Yaval received information that a dacoity was contemplated that night at the village of Shirsoli, taluka Jalgaon. So he went to Jalgaon and reported to the Sub-Inspector of Police there and put in a written report, which is Ex. 8, in which he mentioned the names of the nineteen men who, he was informed, were going to commit the dacoity. The Sub-Inspector of Police of Jalgaon and the City Sub-Inspector of Police of Jalgaon accordingly went to Shirsoli with a party of Police, some of them armed and some unarmed. Unfortunately they did not arrive at Shirsoli until about 11 o'clock at night, when the dacoity was in progress, and instead of blocking the exits from the village, the Police seem to have entered the village at one end, and, when the dacoits started to throw stones at them, the Police fired, whereupon all the dacoits ran away from the other end of the village.

Mr. R. R. Desai (amicus curiae), for the Accused.

Mr. R. A. Jahagirdar, Govt. Pleader, for the Crown.

Beaumont, C. J.—In this case the accused, other than accused No. 6, who were convicted by the Additional Sessions Judge of East Khandesh under s. 395, I. P. C.

The result was that full advantage of this information, which at any rate was good as to the fact that a dacoity was contemplated, was not taken and no arrests were made. But the Police suspecting that the dacoits would go back to Savkheda, and realizing that for that purpose they would have to cross the river Tapti at one or other of the fordable places at Kolnhavi or Thorgaon, posted Police at those places. But the Police did not arrive at Kolnhavi until about 6 o'clock in the morning by which time there had been ample opportunity for any of the dacoits to get across the river. Accused No. 1 and accused No. 2 were arrested at Jalgaon. Accused Nos. 8 and 10, among the present appellants, were arrested at Savkheda, and the other appellants were arrested at Thorgaon trying to cross the river. All the arrests were made on the 6th, that is to say, in the early morning after the dacoity. None of the stolen property was recovered, and the evidence against the various accused consists primarily of evidence of identification, and experience shows that evidence of identification of those taking part in dacoities at night is apt to be unreliable.

I think that we shall have to be very critical in dealing with the evidence because of this report which the Police had obtained and which mentioned the names of various persons. The learned Govt. Pleader has made a great effort to induce us to treat Ex. 8, report made by the Sub-Inspector of Police of Yaval to his superior in Jalgaon, mentioning the names of suspects, as a sort of first information, and as affording evidence that the persons named in that report were under suspicion in connection with this dacoity; but it is quite clear that the report cannot be used for any such purpose. The Sub-Inspector of Police has not in his report disclosed the source of his information, and the mere fact that he says that somebody told him that certain persons were going to commit a dacoity is no evidence at all against those persons. If the Sub-Inspector of Police wanted to prove as against the accused the information which he had received, he would be bound to give evidence as to the source of his information, and to call his informant and that, no doubt for sufficient reasons he was not prepared to do.

All that the report amounts to therefore is that the Sub-Inspector of Police did receive information which caused him to think that there might be a dacoity at Shirsoli and which induced him to go to Shirsoli with a Police party. But his information affords no ground of suspicion whatever against any of the accused, and we have to see whether the evidence against the various accused is sufficient to justify their conviction. The learned Sessions Judge and the assessors were for the most part unanimous in believing the different witnesses, and this Court always differs with reluctance from the unanimous opinion of the trial Judge and the assessors as to the credibility of witnesses. In this case I am prepared to assume that the witnesses who were regarded as honest by the learned Sessions Judge and the assessors were in fact honest; but as to some of them I think they were not in a position to be certain of the facts to which they deposed. I think that the risk of mistake on their part is in some cases too great to be run. (His Lordship after discussing the evidence against the accused proceeded further.) Mr. Desai has also raised a point of law which is occasioning a good deal of trouble to the High Courts in India, and that is the question whether information leading to the discovery of a fact and prima facie admissible under s. 27, Evi. Act, is inadmissible having regard to the terms of s. 162, Criminal P. C. That trouble started with the decision of the Privy Council in Pakala Narayana Swami v. Emperor (1). In that case their Lordships pointed out that s. 162, Criminal P. C., which prohibits any statement made by any person to a Police Officer in the course of an investigation under Ch. XIV from being used as evidence for any purpose, except as mentioned in the section, is wide enough to include a statement made to the Police by a person who either at the time of the statement was or afterwards became an accused; and as far as I know that view had always been acted upon by this Court. Their Lordships further pointed out that on that reading of s. 162 there would to some extent be a conflict between that section and s. 27, Evi. Act, and they observed that the question might arise whether s. 162, pro tanto repeals the provisions of s. 27, Evi. Act, or whether s. 27, Evi. Act, is saved by s. 1, sub-s. (2), Criminal P. C., and their Lordships left that question open.

Since that decision the matter has been considered by four of the High Courts in India. The High Court of Madras in re Subbiah Tevar (2), and the High Court of Patna Emperor v. Mayadhar Pothal (3), have taken the view that s. 27, Evi. Act, is not affected by s. 162, Criminal P. C., being saved by s. 1 (2). On the other hand, a Full Bench of the Lahore High Court in Hakam Khudayar v. Emperor (4), by a majority have held that s. 27, Evi. Act, is pro tanto repealed by s. 162, Criminal P. C., and the same view has also been taken by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Baldeo v. Emperor (5). Having read the various judgments of the other High Courts, some of which extend to a considerable length, I am reluctant to add to the number of judgments on the point; but the lower Courts in this province are entitled to guidance. I prefer the view taken by the High Courts of Madras and Patna to the view taken by the High Courts of Lahore and Allahabad. Section 1 (2), Criminal P. C., reads :

"In the absence of any specific provision to the contrary, nothing herein contained shall affect any special or local law now in force."

Most, if not all, of the learned Judges agree that s. 27, Evi. Act, is a special law in force at the date of the passing of the amended s. 162 and that point seems to me beyond question. It is a law applicable to a particular subject within s. 41, I. P. C. But the view accepted in Lahore and Allahabad is that s. 162 amounts to a "specific provision to the contrary" because the prohibition therein is expressed in the most clear and emphatic terms. But surely much more than that is required. Section 1 (2) enacts a rule of construction to be applied in the interpretation of the Code. That rule is that where there is a conflict between the Code and a special law, the special law is to prevail in the absence of a specific provision to the contrary. But the provision must be to the contrary of the rule of construction, and not merely of the special law. The section presupposes a conflict, and a conflict is none the less a conflict because it is clear for all to see. Reliance has been placed on the use of the word "specific" rather than "express".

I am myself inclined to think that "specific provision" is a stronger expression than "express provision," and means a provision clearly expressed. I do not see how a provision arising by implication only can be said to be specific. But, if this is going too far, I am clearly of opinion, that the language of the Code giving rise to the implication must at any rate be so directly contradictory to the special law that it can be affirmed with certainty that the Legislature intended to override the special law. There is, however, nothing in the language of s. 162 which suggests that the Legislature had in mind s. 27, Evi. Act. The language of the two sections is quite distinct, and to a large extent the respective subject-matters are not identical. Section 162, deals with all statements made to a Police Officer in the course of an investigation ; s. 27, Evi. Act, merely deals with information received from a person accused of an offence in the custody of a Police Officer which leads to a discovery. The two sections only overlap in respect of statements made to a Police Officer in the course of an inquiry which lead to a discovery. It seems to me impossible to hold that s. 162, contains a specific provision that s. 27, Evi. Act, is not to prevail over it.

Another argument which appealed to the High Courts of Lahore and Allahabad is based on the history of the two sections. It is said that the Legislature must have known when they amended s. 162 in 1923 that originally the subject-matter of s. 27, Evi. Act, had been included in the Code ; that prior to 1893, when the terms of s. 162 were in conflict with s. 27, Evi. Act, the latter section was expressly saved from the operation of the former section, and that the Court is bound to assume that the omission to insert in 1923 an express provision saving the operation of s. 27 was deliberate, more particularly as in the section as it existed from 1898 there was an express saving of s. 32, Evi. Act. I do not suppose that anyone seriously doubts that the omission of the Legislature in 1923 to deal with s. 27 in one sense or another was due to the fact that it was not present to the minds of the legislators that the amendment of s. 162 would appreciably affect s. 27 ; but if the Court must deal with the matter pedantically, one may suggest that the omission to save s. 27 may have been due to a just appreciation by the Legislature of the true effect of s. 1 (2), and to a reluctance to insert an unnecessary saving clause in respect of s. 27, merely because the Legislature of 1898 had inserted such a clause in the case of s. 32. This explanation, if not conspicuous for its probability, seems to me much more probable than the hypothesis that the Legislature, realizing the conflict between the amended s. 162 and s. 27, and intending to repeal the latter section pro tanto, and thereby to alter the law as it had existed for 50 years nevertheless omitted any mention of s. 27. In my opinion to read s. 162, Criminal P. C., as overriding s. 27, Evi. Act, is to ignore the terms of s. 1 (2) of the Code.

The point is really not of very much substance in the present case as against the accused whose appeals have been dismissed. But, as I have said, the lower Courts are entitled to have a lead from this Court on a question which arises so frequently, particularly in dacoity cases, as to the admission of evidence under s. 27, Evi. Act. I think that those Courts may safely proceed on the assumption that at present the law has not been altered by anything which the Privy Council said. In the result, the appeals of accused Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 15 and 18 will be allowed and the appeals of accused Nos. 8, 10, 12, 13, 14 and 16 will be dismissed.

Full Bench

First Appeal No. 149 of 1939

January 2, 1941

TEK CHAND, ABDUL RASHID AND SALE, JJ.

MOHAMMAD SOHAIL AND OTHERS

versus

GHULAM RASUL AND ANOTHER—

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (iv) (b), Sch. II, Art. 17 (vi)—Suit by Muhammadan co-sharer in actual possession of portion of property for partition alleging his joint possession of entire property by reason of possession of another co-sharer—Court-fees payable—It makes no difference for purpose of Art. 17 (vi) that in one case joint property is held by parties as joint tenants and in other they own it as "tenants-in-common"—Muhammadan Law—Co-heirs of deceased Muhammadan succeeding to his property hold it as co-owners until partition—Possession of one is possession of all.

Section 7 (iv) (b) applies to cases relating to joint family property, where the plaintiff has been ousted from its enjoyment and seeks to be restored to joint enjoyment. It does not apply where he is in enjoyment of the right but merely seeks to change the mode of such enjoyment. It does not apply to a suit for partition of joint property by a person alleging himself to be in joint possession whether he owns property in co-parcenary or as a tenant-in-common with the defendants. Hence a Muhammadan co-sharer, who alleges that he is in joint possession of the entire property by reason of the possession of another co-sharer and who is also in partial actual possession of certain portion of the property as indicative of his right to co-ownership in the whole property, can bring a suit for partition on a stamp of Rs. 10 only and the case falls under Art. 17 (iv) and not under s. 7 (iv) (b), Court Fees Act. 186 Ind. Cas. 328 (1), Overruled.

Clause (vi) of Art. 17, Sch. II, Court Fees Act, applies to a suit by a co-parcener for partition and equally to a similar suit by a co-owner. It makes no difference for this purpose, that in one case the joint property is held by the parties as 'joint tenants', while in the other they own it as 'tenants-in-common.' And in the latter class of cases, it is again, immaterial that the parties are governed by Muhammadan Law, or that they do or do not belong to the same family. [p. 129, cols. 1 & 2.]

The co-heirs of a deceased Muhammadan, who have succeeded to his property in specific shares under their personal law, hold it as co-owners until there has been a partition by metes and bounds, and possession of one is the possession of all. 109 Ind. Cas. 658 (8), 118 Ind. Cas. 905 (9) and 117 Ind. Cas. 803 (10), relied on. [p. 129, col. 2.]

F. A. referred by Dalip Singh and Sale, JJ., dated January 25, 1940.

Order of Reference.

Dalip Singh, J.—One Mehr-un-Nisa was married first to Rahim Bakhsh from whom she had a son Abdul Latif. Abdul Latif had three sons and two daughters as shown at p. 3 of the printed paper-book. Subsequently Rahim Bakhsh died and Mehr-un-Nisa married Ghulam Rasul, defendant No. 1. Abdul Latif predeceased his mother

Mehr-un-Nisa. Four of the children of Abdul Latif have now sued for partition of their share of the property of Mehr-un-Nisa. Ghulam Rasul is the contesting defendant. In the plaint the plaintiffs alleged that they were in actual possession of houses Nos. 2 and 8 out of the property in dispute through tenants and they were constructively in possession of the entire property jointly with Ghulam Rasul, defendant No. 1. Accordingly they sued for partition on a ten-rupee stamp on the ground that their case fell within Art. 17 (vi). The defendant took various defences, which need not now concern us, and the Court framed preliminary issues given at p. 11, the relevant issues for the purposes of this appeal being :

"Issue No. 1: Whether the plaintiffs are in possession of any portion of the property in dispute and so are entitled to sue on a court-fee stamp of Rs. 10 ? and Issue No. 2: Whether the plaintiffs have locus standi to sue when their father died during the lifetime of Mst. Mehr-un-Nisa ?"

On Issue No. 1 the trial Court held that at best the plaintiffs by force or fraud have succeeded in getting possession of properties Nos. 2 and 8, but they were not in constructive joint possession of the entire property because they were not co-sharers at all under the Muhammadan Law as their father Abdul Latif had predeceased their mother, Mst. Mehr-un-Nisa. If they had been co-sharers the suit could have been properly brought on a ten rupee stamp but as they were not co-sharers with Ghulam Rasul they had neither locus standi to bring the suit nor could their suit proceed on a ten rupee stamp. It therefore dismissed the plaintiffs' suit but left the parties to bear their own costs in the circumstances of the case. The plaintiffs have come in appeal and their Counsel urges that the plaintiffs are co-sharers under Muhammadan Law as they would only cease to be co-sharers if there were sons of Mehr-un-Nisa other than Abdul Latif, now alive.

The learned Counsel for the respondent does not contest this proposition nor does he support the judgment of the trial Court on any of the other issues which were found against him. All he contends is on the authority of Nisar Ali Khan v. Nawazish Ali Khan (1), that neither the suit nor this appeal is competent on a ten rupee stamp. The contention appears to be that granting that they are co-sharers they are still constructively not in possession of the entire property and even if they were constructively in possession their title not being joint with Ghulam Rasul, defendant, but their shares being specific and ascertainable their suit for possession of specific shares amounts to a suit to enforce a share in joint family property and therefore falls under s. 7 (iv) (b), Court Fees Act. As the trial Court has not decided the case except the preliminary issues, apart from the objection raised by the learned Counsel for the respondents, the appeal would have to be accepted and the case remanded for disposal on the merits to the trial Court. There is no doubt however that the contention of the learned Counsel for the respondents is supported by the authority to which he refers. The reasoning of that authority, which was a Division Bench authority of this Court appears to be as given at p. 571*, cols. 1 and 2. There a Full Bench ruling, Asa Ram v. Jagan Nath (2), where in a case of a joint Hindu family it was held that a suit of this kind would proceed on a ten rupee stamp, is distinguished in the following manner: All the members of a Hindu co-parcenary were in actual or constructive possession of the whole of the property and the plaintiffs were merely seeking a change in the form of the enjoyment of the property. The distinction therefore according to the ruling, is that where the title is joint each co-parcener is in possession of every portion of the joint property and his share is not defined and hence Art. 17, Court Fees Act, becomes applicable but where the shares of co-sharers are known and ascertained, a suit for partition is virtually a suit to enforce a right to a share in joint family property. The plaintiffs in such a case are not in actual or constructive possession of their share and therefore the suit falls under s. 7 (iv) (b), Court Fees Act.

The reasoning does not seem to be correct to me, speaking with respect to the learned Judges, for the simple reason that though the shares of tenants-in-common may be defined yet nevertheless until actual partition each co-sharer is in constructive possession of the entire property for in each particle of that property he has a share and therefore though he cannot claim the whole of each particle of that property nevertheless he remains in possession of the whole property to the extent of a share. Therefore I do not see any validity in the distinction sought to be drawn. If this were not so then the possession of one co-sharer would be adverse to that of the other co-sharer, but this is contrary to various rulings of the Privy Council. I therefore do not think that this reasoning is correct. However as the matter has been decided by a Division Bench, the point is of importance and I think arises frequently. I would refer this point to a Full Bench for decision, namely, "Whether a Muhammadan co-sharer who alleges that he is in joint possession of the entire property by reason of the possession of another co-sharer and who is also in partial actual possession of certain portion of the property as indicative of his right to co-sharership in the whole property can bring a suit for partition on a stamp of Rs. 10 only and the case falls within Art. 17 (vi) and not under s. 7 (iv) (b), Court Fees Act?"

Sale, J.—In this case the learned Subordinate Judge has held on a preliminary issue that the plaintiffs are not heirs under Muhammadan Law because they are children of a predeceased son. He has further expressed the view that the suit would lie on a ten-rupee stamp only if the plaintiffs can show that they are heirs under the Muhammadan Law. It was urged before us by Counsel for the appellants, and conceded by Counsel for the respondents, that the decision that the plaintiffs are not heirs under the Muhammadan Law cannot stand, because, there being no other sons of Mehr-un-Nisa alive, the plaintiffs though not entitled to the status of 'sharers' under the Muhammadan Law, would at any rate succeed as residuaries. We must therefore assume for the purposes of court-fees in this case that the plaintiffs are heirs under Muhammadan Law and as such entitled to a share in the property. Now, under the Division Bench authority, Nisar Ali Khan v. Nawazish Ali Khan (1), which related to a case of heirs under Muhammadan Law suing for partition of their share, the present case would fall for the purposes of court-fee under s. 7 (iv) (b), Court Fees Act, which requires the plaintiff to state for purposes of court-fee the amount at which he values the relief sought.

With all due respect I feel a double difficulty in following this authority. In the present case a right to share in the property in question is conceded. It is difficult therefore to see how the suit can be described as a suit to enforce a right to share as contemplated by s. 7 (iv) (b), Court Fees Act. What the plaintiffs want in this case is not to enforce a right to share, but to change the mode of enjoying their share from a state of jointness, to a state of exclusive possession. It is possibly arguable that the case might fall under s. 7 (v), Court Fees Act, as being in effect a suit for possession of property; in the alternative it would be, as contended by Counsel for the appellants before us, a suit falling under Art. 17 (vi) of Sch. II, Court Fees Act, on the ground that it is not possible to estimate at a money-value the subject-matter in dispute. But in any case it is difficult to see how the suit can fall under s. 7 (iv) (b), Court Fees Act. The second difficulty which I see in this case is that with all due respect to the Division Bench decision it seems to me that the title of one co-sharer in such a case is joint with that of the other co-sharers and every co-sharer therefore is, as pointed out by my learned brother, in constructive possession of the entire property. Accordingly I would agree with the terms of reference to a Full Bench as proposed by my learned brother.

Messrs. Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din and Abdul Aziz, for the Appellants.

Mr. Madan Mohan Kapur, for the Respondents.

Tek Chand, J.—The facts of the case which has given rise to this reference are as follows: The property in dispute belonged to one Mst. Mehr-un-Nisa. She was originally married to Rahim Bakhsh. On Rahim Bakhsh's death many years ago, she married Ghulam Rasul (defendant No. 1). From Rahim Bakhsh she had a son, Abdul Latif. Abdul Latif died in 1929, in the lifetime of his mother (Mst. Mehr-un-Nisa), leaving three sons, Mohammad Sohail, Subah Sadiq and Abdul Hafiz (plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3) and two daughters, Mst. Shamshad Ara Begum (plaintiff No. 4) and Mst. Balqis Ara Begum (defendant No. 2). Mst. Mehr-un-Nisa died sometime in 1935. It is alleged by the plaintiffs that at the time of her death she owned nine houses which are now in dispute. On June 16, 1936, Ghulam Rasul, describing himself as the exclusive owner of these houses, executed a document, whereby he purported to make them waqf for the purposes mentioned therein. On May 25, 1938, the plaintiffs, who are the three sons and one of the daughters of Mst. Mehr-un-Nisa, instituted a suit for possession by partition of 21/32nd share in nine houses left by Mst. Mehr-un-Nisa, alleging that they were in actual possession of two of the houses (Nos. 2 and 8) and were in constructive possession of the others as co-sharers, that the so-called waqf created by Ghulam Rasul was fictitious and had been effected to deprive the plaintiffs of their lawful rights, and that it was ineffectual against them. They, further averred that they did not want to keep their share in the properties in dispute joint with the defendants. They, therefore, prayed that:

"A decree for possession by partition (i. e., change from joint to separate possession) of 21/32nd share in the houses in dispute be passed in their favour against the defendants."

The suit was valued for purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 60,000 and a court-fee of Rs. 10 was paid under Art. 17 (vi) of Sch. II, Court Fees Act. The defendant, Ghulam Rasul, resisted the suit on various grounds, of which those material for our present purposes are: (1) that the plaintiffs were not in possession of any part of the joint property and, therefore, they must pay ad valorem court-fee on the market value of their share and (2) that under Muhammadan Law, which admittedly governed the parties, the plaintiffs had no locus standi to sue for partition as they were not heirs of Mst. Mehr-un-Nisa, their father Abdul Latif having predeceased her. The trial Judge found as a fact that the plaintiffs were in actual possession of houses Nos. 2 and 8, but as, in his view of the Muhammadan Law, the plaintiffs were "not heirs of Mst. Mehr-un-Nisa, they were not co-sharers and could not be in constructive joint possession of the entire property." He therefore held that the court-fee paid on the plaint was insufficient, and also that the plaintiffs had no locus standi to sue for partition. On these findings he dismissed the suit, leaving the parties to bear their own costs.

From this decree the plaintiffs preferred a first appeal to this Court, which came up for hearing before Dalip Singh and Sale, JJ. Before them, it was conceded by Counsel for Ghulam Rasul, respondent, that the finding of the lower Court that the plaintiffs were not heirs of Mst. Mehr-un-Nisa under Muhammadan Law was incorrect. The plaintiffs being the children of a predeceased son of Mst. Mehr-un-Nisa were no doubt not "sharers," but as no child of Mst. Mehr-un-Nisa was alive at the time of her death, the plaintiffs were "residuaries" and as such were entitled to succeed under Muhammadan Law. Counsel however contended that neither the suit nor the appeal was competent on a ten rupee stamp, as the plaintiffs, even though they were co-heirs with Ghulam Rasul, could not, in the eye of the law, be held to be constructively in possession of the entire property, and even if they were constructively in possession their title not being joint with Ghulam Rasul but their shares being specific and ascertainable their suit for possession of specific shares was really a suit to enforce a right to a share in joint family property and therefore falls under s. 7 (iv) (b) and not under Art. 17 (vi), Court Fees Act. In support of this contention the learned Counsel relied upon a Division Bench ruling of this Court reported in Nisar Ali Khan v. Nawazish Ali Khan (1). That case certainly supported the contention of Counsel for the respondents, but as the learned Judges doubted its correctness they have referred the following question to the Full Bench :

"Whether a Muhammadan co-sharer who alleges that he is in joint possession of the entire property by reason of the possession of another co-sharer and who is also in partial actual possession of certain portion of the property as indicative of his right to co-ownership in the whole property can bring a suit for partition on a stamp of Rs. 10 only and the case falls within Art. 17 (vi) and not under s. 7 (iv) (b), Court Fees Act?"

Article 17 (vi) is the residuary article and would apply to a particular case only if it did not fall within any other provision of the Act. In Nisar Ali Khan v. Nawazish Ali Khan (1) a suit by a Muhammadan co-sharer for partition of joint properties on allegations similar to those described in the above question was held to be governed by cl. (b) of sub-s. (iv) of s. 7 of the Act, which prescribes the court-fee payable on suits "to enforce the right to share in any property on the ground that it is joint family property." It will be seen that the clause applies to those cases only, in which the allegation in the plaint is that the property in dispute is "joint family property" and the relief asked for is to "enforce the right to share" in it. Now, a suit by a Muhammadan co-sharer for partition of alleged joint property is not a suit of this description at all. A Muhammadan family, as such, has no property, and property owned by two Muhammadans in co-ownership, even though they are related to each other, is not "joint family property" in the sense in which this expression is used in the clause. Secondly, a claim for partition of alleged joint property is not a suit "to enforce the right to share" in it. As pointed out by the Full Bench in Asa Ram v. Jagan Nath (2), at p. 560*, this clause applies to cases relating to joint family property, where the plaintiff has been ousted from its enjoyment and seeks to be restored to joint enjoyment, and not where he is in enjoyment of the right, but merely seeks to change the mode of such enjoyment. The Calcutta and the Bombay High Courts, also, have interpreted this clause in the same way.

In Bidhata Rai v. Ram Chariter Rai (3), at p. 655 Mookerji, J., observed that the clause referred to a suit for joint possession and not to a suit for partition. In Dagdu Sakharam v. Totaram Narayan (4), at p. 663 Batchelor and Beaman, JJ. held that cl. (b) was intended merely for suits to enforce what may be called an "abstract claim or right to share" in joint property. In Madras however the contrary view prevailed for several years. In Rangiah Chetty v. Subramania Chetty (5), the majority of a Full Bench of three Judges disagreed with the interpretation put on the clause by the Calcutta and Bombay High Courts in the cases cited above and held that it applied to a suit by a co-parcener in possession for partition of joint family property. The question was recently reconsidered in Ramaswami Ayyangar v. C. S. Rangachariar (6), when a Full Bench of five Judges overruled the majority decision in Rangiah Chetty v. Subramania Chetty (5), and unanimously adopted the interpretation put on the clause by the Calcutta, Bombay and the Lahore High Courts, and held that "Section 7 (iv) (b) cannot be deemed to apply to a partition suit, where the plaintiff is in joint possession. It can only apply in seeking relief in respect of possession of immovable property, when he is out of possession."

Abdur Rahman, J., who discussed the question at length (p. 285*) observed that this clause

"is apparently applicable to persons who own joint family property in the sense in which that expression is used in the Hindu Law and could not be applied to persons who are merely tenants-in-common.....As for the words used in s. 7 (iv) (b), ordinarily the expression to 'enforce the right to share' would convey the meaning that the plaintiff wanted to enforce a right which he had been deprived from sharing and not that he wished to exercise a right which he had been enjoying although in a different form or manner."

The learned Judge, after referring to various provisions of the Act, came to the conclusion that a suit by a person for partition of property, of which he is in joint possession, either as a co-parcener or as a tenant-in-common, is governed by Art. 17 (vi) of

(3) 6 C L J 651; (655); 12 C W N 37; 3 M L T 33.

Sch. II, Court Fees Act. In this connection, reference may also be made usefully to Art. 127, Lim. Act, the wording of which is analogous to that of s. 7 (iv) (b), Court Fees Act. In interpreting that article, it has been laid down in numerous cases that the expression "to enforce a right to share in joint family property" contemplates a suit by one member of a co-parcenary against the other members for his restoration to joint enjoyment (status quo ante) from which he has been excluded. The leading case on the subject is Amme Raham v. Zia Ahmad (7), in which it was held by the Full Bench that the article has no application to the case in which members of a Muhammadan family are suing for possession by right of inheritance of shares in immovable property alleged to have been that of a deceased common ancestor of themselves and the defendants, but that it relates to properties held by a family in co-parcenary.

It will thus be seen that the consensus of opinion among the High Courts is that s. 7 (iv) (b) does not apply to a suit for partition of joint property by a person alleging himself to be in joint possession, whether he owns the property in co-parcenary, or as a tenant-in-common, with the defendants. The learned Judges, who decided Nisar Ali Khan v. Nawazish Ali Khan (1), observed that in this matter there was a distinction between the case of a Hindu co-parcener suing the other co-parceners for partition of joint property and that of a Muhammadan co-owner suing the other co-owners for the same relief as though in both cases, there is unity of possession; in the latter case (unlike the former) there is no unity of title, the shares of the co-owners being known and ascertained. With great respect, it is difficult to see how this circumstance has any bearing on the question of payment of court-fee—it certainly cannot bring the case of a co-owner suing for partition within the purview of cl. (b) of sub-s. (iv) of s. 7, which as already shown above, is meant to apply to an entirely different type of cases.

Further the reason as to why a suit by a co-parcener for partition falls within cl. (vi) of Art. 17 of Sch. II, Court Fees Act, applies equally to a similar suit by a co-owner. In either case, the relief sought is the change in the mode of enjoyment of joint property of which the plaintiff ex hypothesi, is in joint possession and it is not possible to estimate at money value the subject-matter in dispute. It makes no difference for this purpose, that in one case the joint property is held by the parties as 'joint tenants,' while in the other they own it as 'tenants-in-common.' And in the latter class of cases, it is, again, immaterial that the parties are governed by Muhammadan Law, or that they do or do not belong to the same family. It is well-settled that the co-heirs of a deceased Muhammadan, who have succeeded to his property in specific shares under their personal law, hold it as co-owners until there has been a partition by metes and bounds, and possession of one is the possession of all. Ahmed Bibi v. Shamas Din (8), Muhammad Bakhsh v. Fateh Mahammad (9) and Jano v. Narsingh Das (10). It has accordingly been held that if a Muhammadan co-heir, alleging himself to be in constructive joint possession of the property left by the common ancestor, and in actual possession of a part of it, sues the other co-heirs for partition, his claim is merely one for change in the mode of enjoyment of the alleged joint property and this relief is one which is not capable of being valued in money and is governed by Art. 17 (vi) of Sch. II, Court Fees Act, under which a court-fee of Rs. 10 only is payable, see Ahmuddin Tamijuddin v. Amiruddin, 44 Ind. Cas. 216 (11), at p. 218, Ma Ma Nyun v. Maung Mya (12), Hassan Khan v. Ahmed Khan (13), Kurshit Kathumby v. Hyder Khan, 75 Ind. Cas. 93 (14), Nikka v. Fazal Dad Khan (15), Hajaran v. Muhammad Shafi Khan (16) and Haji Yusif v. Ghulam Hussein, 16 Ind. Cas. 771 (17). The only ruling to the contrary is a Single Bench decision of Harrison, J., in Rakhi v. Khairan (18), but that case was dissented from in Hajaran v. Muhammad Shafi Khan (16), and has been disapproved by the Full Bench in Asa Ram v. Jagan Nath (2), at pp. 554 and 561*.

It will be seen that the decision in Nisar Ali Khan v. Nawazish Ali Khan (1), that such a suit for partition by a Muhammadan co-heir is governed by s. 7 (iv) (b) is supported neither by the plain wording of the section nor by authority, and it must be held that that case was not correctly decided. My answer to the question referred to us is that in a suit for partition of joint property by a Muhammadan on the allegations mentioned in the question, the proper court-fee payable is Rs. 10 under Art. 17 (vi) of Sch. II, Court Fees Act, and that the case does not fall within s. 7 (iv) (b) of the Act. The case will now be sent back to the Division Bench for disposal.

Easement—Right of way—Use of, by person for less than prescriptive period—If can sue to prevent stranger from obstructing his way—Interference of—Right of way—Principles applicable.

A person who has been using a particular way over land adjoining his, but for less than the prescriptive period, cannot maintain an action to prevent a stranger from obstructing him using the way. An action can only be maintained if the obstruction to user will have the effect of substantially depriving a person of the enjoyment of his property. 29 Ind. Cas. 255 (2), approved, 6 Ind. Cas. 266 (3), explained, Jeffris v. Williams (5) and Bibby v. Carter (6), explained and approved, Jootoor Acchanna v. Vanamala Venkamma (4), referred to. [p. 131, col. 2; p. 132, col. 2.]

The considerations which may apply when the interference complained of has reference to the access of light and air or to support from adjoining land may not apply when the interference has reference to the use of a way over another's land. [p. 131, col. 2.]

S. A. against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Vizagapatam, in A. S. No. 101 of 1936.

Order of Reference

Krishnaswami Ayyangar, J.—The appellant in this second appeal was the defendant in a suit instituted by the respondents for a declaration that they are entitled to a right of way along the passage marked E in the plan attached to the plaint and for an injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with their exercise of the right. According to the respondents the passage which is the subject-matter of the dispute between the parties is a portion of the gramakantam land of the village belonging to the Govt. They alleged that from time immemorial the owners of the house which now belongs to them have been exercising the right. They further alleged that they anticipated obstruction to their right of way by the appellant and hence instituted the suit. The appellant denied that the passage E is a portion of the gramakantam and denied also the right of passage along it claimed by the respondents. The main issue framed in the suit by the District Munsif was whether the plaintiffs are entitled to the easement claimed. The learned District Munsif did not frame any issue to the title to the property in which the passage E lay, though as I have mentioned the plaintiffs claimed that the whole of the land in which that passage lay was gramakantam. Indeed he made it perfectly clear at about the end of para. 8 that in his opinion this question of title did not require to be decided and he accordingly gave no decision regarding it. He however considered the evidence on the question whether the plaintiffs had established user of the passage as of right for the statutory period and came to the conclusion that they had not made out their case. The suit was accordingly dismissed. The plaintiffs preferred an appeal which was heard by the Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam. In the appellate judgment two findings have been recorded both findings of fact viz. (1) that the site in which the passage E lay was not proved to be the property of the defendant and (2) that the plaintiffs had established long user for over 20 years of the passage E for egress and ingress to their house.

From the finding of the learned Judge that the site in which the passage lay did not belong to the defendant it followed that the title was in the Govt., the land being gramakantam land. On this footing the learned Judge was of opinion that the respondents had not prescribed a right of easement as against the Govt. as there had been no enjoyment as of right for 60 years which is the period of limitation as against the Govt. None the less he held that the appellant who was a mere stranger cannot obstruct the respondents who had had more than 20 years enjoyment of the right of way and who were in the process of acquiring a

"The progress of the acquisition of easement cannot be obstructed by any other than the owner of the servient tenement and a mere stranger cannot obstruct any person in the exercise of what may be called an inchoate easement."

In support of this opinion he relied upon the observations of the learned Judges who decided the case reported in Chinnasami Goundan v. Balasundara (1). On a reading of the case cited above it is clear that no decision was actually rendered on the precise question which arises for consideration in this second appeal. It may be that there is some indication of an inclination in favour of the view of the Subordinate Judge in this sentence which occurs at p. 264*:

"It may be a question whether a mere stranger can obstruct another person in the exercise of even what may be called an inchoate right of easement."

But it is fairly clear that a decision regarding the correctness of the proposition was not called for in the view that the learned Judges took of the facts of the case before them. Lower down in the same paragraph the Court observed:

"All that I am concerned to point out is that the case cannot be compared to that of a mere stranger interfering with the use of a right of way by a person who is in the process of acquiring it by a course of prescriptive enjoyment."

Mr. Govindarajachari appearing for the appellant has drawn my attention to the decision reported in Narasappayya v. Ganapati Rao (2) where Miller and Sadasiva Ayyar, JJ. held that unless an easement had ripened into a prescriptive one, mere enjoyment of the user for any length of time short of the full period of prescription gave no right for the enjoyer to maintain an action against any person infringing such a user. There is a reference in this decision to an earlier decision of a Bench of this Court reported in Kondappa Rajan Naidu v. Dewarakonda Suryanarayana (3). The headnote in the latter case runs as follows:

"It is well settled law that a trespasser, in enjoyment of land for less than the statutory period, is entitled to be maintained in possession against all persons except the true owner. The same principle is applicable to incorporeal rights such as rights to light and water courses. A person in enjoyment of a water course for less than 20 years is entitled to protection in such enjoyment against persons who have no right to such water course."

In spite of the observations in Narasappayya v. Ganapati Rao (2) to the contrary I find it impossible to reconcile the two decisions or to escape the conclusion that they are really in conflict. It appears to me the only way in which this conflict is to be solved is by having the point referred to a Full Bench and obtaining an authoritative ruling and not by my preferring one view to the other. The papers will therefore be placed before my Lord the Chief Justice for orders as to the case being posted before a Full Bench, for a decision of the following question, namely, whether a person who is in the enjoyment of an easement but who has not acquired a title to it by prescription or otherwise, can maintain an action to prevent its obstruction by any person other than the owner of the servient tenement?

Messrs. V. Govindarajachari and B. V. Ramanarasu, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. Rama Rao, for the Respondents.

Leach, C. J.—The question which has been referred reads as follows:

"Whether a person who is in the enjoyment of an easement but who has not acquired a title to it by prescription or otherwise, can maintain an action to prevent its obstruction by any person other than the owner of the servient tenement?"

The considerations which may apply when the interference complained of has reference to the access of light and air or to support from adjoining land may not apply when the interference has reference to the use of a way over another's land and as this reference arises out of a case relating to an alleged right of way we consider that the question should be reframed in these terms: "Can a person who has been using a particular way over land adjoining his, but for less than the prescriptive period, maintain an action to prevent a stranger from obstructing him using the way."

In Jootoor Acchanna v. Vanamala Venkamma (4) a Bench of this Court (Collins, C. J., and Parker, J.) held that a plaintiff who had received light through a window opening on vacant ground, but had not enjoyed the light sufficiently long to acquire an easement, was entitled to an injunction against a person who was not the owner of the vacant land, restraining him from building on it so as to cause obstruction to the light. The Court said:

"It was not necessary for plaintiff to establish prescriptive rights of easement against a wrongdoer and that the mere fact of plaintiff's enjoyment is sufficient to entitle him to an injunction."

(4) 5 M L J 24.

The authority for this statement was the well-known case in Jeffris v. Williams (5) where Parke, B. observed :

"If a house is de facto supported by the soil of a neighbour, this appears to us to be sufficient title against any one but that neighbour, or one claiming under him. Just as one who should prop his house up by a shore resting on his neighbour's ground, would have a right of action against a stranger, who, by removing it, causes the house to fall ; but none against his neighbour or one authorized by the neighbour to do so, if he took it away and caused the same damage."

The strict form of pleading of the olden days was an important factor in the decision in Jeffris v. Williams (5), but nevertheless the case established the principle that a person without title cannot interfere with the enjoyment of property by one whose title does not even extend beyond possession. Jeffris v. Williams (5) cannot however be read as laying down the proposition that there is in the person in possession the right of action against a stranger who interferes with the acquisition of an easement which is not essential for the enjoyment of the property possessed. Interference with the normal enjoyment of the property is the essence of the decision.

What the Court is called upon to decide in this case is whether a person who has been in the habit of using a way over his neighbour's land, but has not acquired an easement, can prevent a stranger obstructing his user of the way. There is no direct authority to be found either in the English or in the Indian decisions, but there are emphatic statements against the maintenance of such an action to be found in "The Common Law" by Holmes, in Salmond on "The Law of Torts" and in Pollock "On Torts." Holmes takes the case of a way used de facto for four years, but in which no easement has been acquired, and asks whether the possessor of the quasi dominant tenement would be protected in his use as against third persons. He says, "it is conceivable that he should be, but I believe that he would not." ("The Common Law" by Holmes at p. 241). At p. 354 we have this passage:

"A way, until it becomes a right of way, is just as little susceptible of being held by a possessory title as a contract."

And at p. 382 this :

"But, as has been said before, the Common Law does not recognize possession of a way. A man who has used a way ten years without title cannot sue even a stranger for stopping it. He was a trespasser at the beginning, he is nothing but a trespasser still. There must exist a right against the servient owner before there is a right against anybody else."

(5) (1851) 5 Ex. 792; 20 L J Ex. 14; 155 E R 347.

Salmond (Salmond on the Law of Torts, Edn. 8, p. 259) says that the rule in Jeffris v. Williams (5) and Bibby v. Carter (6), the latter case followed Jeffris v. Williams (5) — cannot be extended, "to cover all cases of the de facto enjoyment of servitudes. It cannot be the law that a mere trespasser who has been in the habit of crossing another man's land can sue a stranger for an act which obstructs his use of this de facto easement. Nor can it be supposed that a poacher can sue a stranger who by polluting the water of a stream has interfered with his practice of catching fish therein."

Having put the question as to what forms of de facto possession the principle recognised in Jeffris v. Williams (5) does apply, Salmond submit that the true principle is this : (p. 259) :

"As against strangers the possessor of land is entitled to the use and enjoyment of it free from all harmful interference due to acts done on the adjoining land; and all such interference by a stranger is actionable, even though had it been done by the lawful owner of the adjoining land it would have been damnum sine injuria because of the absence of any acquired servitude making it illegal. Where, on the other hand, the act complained of has produced no harmful effects upon the plaintiff's land, it is necessary for him to plead and prove, even against a stranger, that he has a legal right to the benefit of which he complains that he has been deprived."

In dealing with wrongs to easement and other incorporeal rights in property, Pollock says : (Edn. 14, p. 299).

"The enjoyment which may in time ripen into an easement is not possession, and gives no possessory right before the due time is fulfilled," and proceeds to quote the passage from Holmes which says, "a man who has used a way ten years without title cannot sue even a stranger for stopping it." Later he says (Edn. 14, p. 300) :

"De facto enjoyment does not even provisionally create any substantive right, but is material only as an incident in the proof of title."

There are here strong expressions of opinion that where the right of way has been enjoyed for less than the prescriptive period the person enjoying it cannot bring an action against a stranger who obstructs the use of the de facto easement, the principle being that a person cannot assert even against a trespasser a right which does not really interfere with enjoyment of his own property. It is conceivable that a case might arise where the principle involved in Jeffris v. Williams (5) could be appropriately applied, but it would be a very exceptional one. Take for instance, the case where as the result of some catastrophe access to land could only be obtained over the land of another. If a stranger attempted to prevent the possessor of the land so cut off from gaining access to his land the Court would surely

At this stage it will be convenient to refer to two decisions of this Court which are in conflict and in consequence have given rise to this reference. In Kondappa Rajan Naidu v. Dewarakonda Suryanarayana (3), Benson and Krishnaswami Ayyar, JJ. after observing that it was well settled law that if any trespasser was in enjoyment of land for less than the statutory period he would be entitled to protect that possession against any one but the true owner, went on to say that they did not think that there was any distinction in principle, because the right to be protected was in the nature of an incorporeal right in process of acquisition. This statement is certainly open to strong criticism and it was criticized in Narasappayya v. Ganapati Rao (2), but as pointed out in that case, Kondappa Rajan Naidu v. Dewarakonda Suryanarayana (3) can be supported on the ground that the plaintiff was in possession of the channel which had been obstructed and having a possessory title had a cause of action against the defendant for obstruction. In Narasappayya v. Ganapati Rao (2) Miller and Sadasiva Ayyar, JJ. held that mere enjoyment of an easement for any length of time short of the full period of prescription gave no right of action against a person obstructing the user. In that case the plaintiff sought an injunction preventing the defendants from cutting a channel from a tank from which he watered some of his fields, so as to deprive him of the water. The District Munsif granted the injunction, but this was dissolved by the District Judge, who held that the plaintiff had no right to the water of the tank, though he had been in the habit of taking the water through a channel for some years. A second appeal was filed to this Court and the learned Judges upheld the decision of the District Judge. I regard the decision as being a correct decision. It was not a case where the plaintiff was in physical possession of the channel from the tank, but a case where the defendants were claiming a right to water which they did not possess.

In my opinion where a right of way has not been acquired by enjoyment for the prescriptive period there is ordinarily no right of action for interference. In a very exceptional case where access to the plaintiff's land would otherwise be cut off altogether a suit might be maintained against a stranger on the principle propounded in Jeffries v. Williams (5) but not otherwise. The answer that I would give to the question referred in its altered form is that an action cannot be maintained in ordinary circumstances. It can only be maintained if the obstruction to user will have the effect of substantially depriving a person of the enjoyment of his property. To avoid any misunderstanding I would add that the Court is not dealing with the rights of the villagers to pass over gramakantam land.

Charge—Charge for allowances granted under will may attach to general estate although testator had not provided for their payment out of specified properties.

A charge for allowance granted under a will may attach to the general estate although the testator in his will may not make provision for the charge or allowances to be paid out of specified properties.

A will provided that the testator's two sons should each get at the rate of Rs. 50 a month from his estate month by month "for defraying the expenses of maintenance etc., of their sons, daughters, wives and their own selves" after the testator's death. There was a further provision that the sons should get "at the rate of Rs. 2,000" from the testator's estate for defraying the expenses of the marriage of each of their daughters. The will further provided for a monthly allowance at the rate of Rs. 8 a month to be paid to the testator's youngest daughter, who was a widow, out of the testator's estate so long as she lived:

Held, that even though the testator did not provide that the allowances were to be paid from specific property, the allowances granted by the will formed charges.

Messrs. B. C. Ghosh and D. N. Sen, for the Applicants.

Mr. B. N. Ghosh, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This is an application by the auction-purchaser to set aside a sale by the Registrar on the ground that good title has not been made out. The applicant contends that the property is subject to charges under the will of Krishna Das Kundu which have never been disclosed. The will was not mentioned in the abstract of title, nor in the conditions of sale, and it is alleged that the existence of the charges were deliberately suppressed. The mortgagee contends that the charges do not exist. The will was discovered after searches. Probate has never been granted. The will in cl. 3 provides that the testator's two sons who are the mortgagees shall reach get at the rate of Rs. 50 a month from his estate month by month "for defraying the expenses of maintenance etc., of their sons, daughters, wives and their own selves" after the testator's death. There is a further provision that the sons shall get "at the rate of Rs. 2,000" from the testator's estate for defraying the expenses of the marriage of each of their daughters. Clause 4 provides for a monthly allowance at the rate of Rs. 8 a month to be paid to the testator's youngest daughter, who was a widow, out of the testator's estate so long as she lives. These are the material portions of the will, and the question before me is whether the allowances granted by the will form charges. For the mortgagee it is contended that no charges will be created unless the testator provides that the allowances are to be paid from a specific property. That is by no means clear, and it appears from Theobald on Wills, Edn. 7 p. 508 that an annuity may be given without words creating an express charge. If the annuity is given in general terms and there is then a gift of residue, the annuity is charged upon the corpus.

In Bridges v. Hinxman (1) the testator by his will devised certain property to his son for life and after his death to the first, second, third and fourth son and so on "paying" to the testator's wife "£ 16 a year of lawful money of Great Britain," also to the testator's daughter £ 10 a year of lawful money quarterly for life. The Vice-Chancellor held that the word "paying" created not a trust but a charge or condition. The matter was dealt with recently by the Division Bench of this Court in Bhola Nath Banerjee v. Sarbamangala Debi (2). There a Hindu testator created two successive life estates and gave the remainder to the defendants who were his grandsons. He further provided that monthly allowances should be paid to his granddaughter out of the estate left by him, and whoever was in possession of the estate would be bound to pay. There it was argued as the property was not specified no valid charge could be created, but the Court held that the charge would attach to the corpus of the estate which was bequeathed by the testator successively to the two ladies and then to the daughter's sons who were the defendants in that case. It is clear therefore on these decisions that a charge may attach to the general estate although the testator in his will may not make provision for the charge or allowances to be paid out of specified properties. In any event whether the allowances form charges or not it is quite clear that this possibility should have been brought to the notice of the prospective purchaser, and since that was not done the purchaser is entitled to have the sale set aside. Order in terms of prayers (a), (b), (c), (d), and (e). The mortgagee (Mr. B. N. Ghose's client) to pay the costs of the application to the auction-purchaser and the mortgagee will add those costs to his claim.

Order accordingly.

All questions of succession which come up before the Courts after Act VI of 1935 has come into force, must be decided according to Muhammadan Law irrespective of the fact as to whether the person whose estate is in dispute had died before that Act came into force or after. 192 Ind. Mr. Pir Bakhsh, for the Appellant.

Mr. Abdur Rab Nishtar, Kazi Abdul Wahab and Pandit Anup Chand, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 5.

Mir Ahmad, J.—The facts of this case have been given in great detail in the judgment of the trial Judge and have also been briefly noticed by the lower Appellate Court. One Sherdil Khan died in 1933 leaving a widow Mst. Bibi Aisha, a married daughter, Mst. Zamo Jan, a married sister, Mst. Nawab Jan and an unmarried sister, Mst. Babo Jan. His wife died in 1933-34. The property left by Sherdil was mutated in the name of Mst. Babo Jan, his sister, who died in 1937. Some collaterals of Sherdil have brought this suit for possession of their customary law share in the property left by him. One of the defences taken was that the Shariat Act (VI of 1935) having come into force on December 6, 1935, the plaintiffs had no locus standi to bring the suit because the daughter and the sister of Sherdil were his only heirs under the Muslim Personal Law. The trial Judge gave decree to the plaintiffs for 23/32 share in the estate left by Sherdil. An appeal was preferred by the daughter of Sherdil, her husband and the sister of Sherdil to the District Court at Peshawar. The District Judge agreed with the Original Court and dismissed the appeal. The same persons have come up on further appeal to this Court.

A preliminary objection was taken that no appeal lies. The value for jurisdiction of the land in suit is Rs. 388-2-0 and the like value of the other property is Rs. 1,900-8-0. According to s. 34, Law and Justice Regulation, the value in a land suit should be Rs. 1,000 or upward and in an unclassified suit it should be Rs. 2,500 or upward in order to entitle a party to a further appeal. In this case the value of each portion of the suit is below the prescribed limit. Judicial Record Volume I Case No. 76 is the authority for the view that the two values cannot be combined to make the case liable to further appeal. We consequently hold that the appeal does not lie and we treat it as an application for revision. A Bench of this Court has held in the ruling reported in Fazal Haq Dilzada v. Dawar Shah (1); that all questions of succession which come up before the Courts after Act VI of 1935 has come into force shall be decided according to Muhammadan Law irrespective of the fact as to whether the person whose estate is in dispute had died before that Act came into force or after. The rule of decision, therefore, in this case would be Muhammadan Law and we have to see whether the plaintiffs can bring a suit for possession of a portion of the estate of Sherdil as heirs under Muhammadan Law. The plaintiffs are distant collaterals and have under that law no right to inherit the property left by Sherdil in preference to his daughter and sister. This is not denied by the learned Counsel who appeared for the respondents. The plaintiff-respondents have therefore, no right to maintain the suit.

(1) A I R 1940 Pesh. 52; 192 Ind. Cas. 343; 13 R Pesh. 37.

The two Courts below have wrongly decided this case. They have committed a material irregularity in applying custom. We therefore, accept the petition, set aside the order of the two Courts below and dismiss the suit of the plaintiffs-respondents with costs throughout.

HARI RAKSHAK DUTT—ACCUSED—PETITIONERversusCHAIRMAN, DISTRICT BOARD,*BIRBHUM—OPPOSITE PARTY

Bengal Food Adulteration Act (VI of 1919), s. 6 (1) and (3)—Accused taking consignment of mustard oil at Railway Station for sale—Sanitary Inspector taking sample while goods were still on railway premises—Oil found adulterated—Accused, if can be convicted—Fact that accused had no time to examine goods, if good defence.

The accused took delivery of some tins of mustard oil at the Railway Station for the purpose of selling them. On the same day while the goods were actually on the railway premises a sample was taken from these tins by the Sanitary Inspector and it was found that the mustard oil contained therein was adulterated.

Held, that although the goods had not actually left the railway premises, they were nevertheless being stored for sale by the accused within the meaning of s. 6 (1) of the Bengal Food Adulteration Act. The requisite initial onus had been discharged by the prosecution. The accused came into physical possession of the consignment as soon as he took delivery thereof at the Railway Station and from the moment that he took such delivery until the goods were actually exposed for sale in his shop there could be no doubt that he was actually storing them with a view to their ultimate disposal by sale. The fact that he could have had no opportunity to examine the nature of the goods between the time when he took delivery of them and the time when a sample was taken was no defence in view of s. 6 (3). 188 Ind. Cas. 398 (1), distinguished.

Messrs. Jitendra Mohan Banerjee and Hari Prasanna Mukherjee, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Satindra Nath Mukherjee and Samarendra Nath Mukherjee, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—The petitioner in this case has been convicted under s. 6 (1) read with s. 21, Bengal Food Adulteration Act (Ben. Act VI of 1919). It appears that, on October 17, 1938, the petitioner took delivery of some tins of mustard oil at the Bolpur Railway Station. On the same day a sample was taken from these tins by the Sanitary Inspector and it was found that the mustard oil contained therein was adulterated. The petitioner and certain other persons were subsequently prosecuted and the petitioner was convicted. It is said that the prosecution did not discharge the onus which lay on the Crown to show that the adulterated goods had actually been stored for sale within the meaning of s. 6 (1) of the Act and it is also contended that any presumption which may have arisen under s. 6 (4) of the Act was rebutted by reason of the fact that the goods were actually on the railway premises at the time when the sample was taken by the Sanitary Inspector. The finding contained in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is that there can be no doubt that the petitioner had taken delivery of this consignment of the oil for the purpose of selling it. This being the case, it would follow that although the goods had not actually left the railway premises, they were nevertheless being stored for sale by the petitioner within the meaning of s. 6 (1) of the Act. It followed that the requisite initial onus has been discharged by the prosecution. In this connection it may be mentioned that in Sachi Nandan Piri v. Chairman, Midnapore District Board (1), I pointed out that :

"In my view, in a case in which a person is prosecuted for storing adulterated food for sale, it must ordinarily be proved affirmatively that such food is actually being stored, and in my opinion, such storage cannot be taken to include transit to a place of storage unless the adulterated food in question is actually in the physical possession of a person to whom sub-s. (4) of s. 6 expressly applies."

That case related to the prosecution of a certain person in respect of a consignment which was found in the possession of his carter. On the facts of that case, if the petitioner himself had been in physical possession of the consignment, the position would have been different. In the case with which we are now dealing the petitioner came into physical possession of the consignment as soon as he took delivery thereof at the railway station and from the moment that he took such delivery until the goods were actually exposed for sale in his shop there can be no doubt that he was actually storing them with a view to their ultimate disposal by sale. It is argued that it would be unreasonable to convict the petitioner in this case in view of the fact that he could have had no opportunity to examine the nature of the goods between the time when he took delivery of them and the time when a sample was taken. This argument is, however, answered by sub.s. (3) of s. 6 of the Act which is in the following terms :

"In any prosecution under this section it shall be no defence to allege that the vendor, manufacturer or storer was ignorant of the nature, substance or quality of the article sold, exposed for sale, or manufactured or stored for sale by him."

In cases of this nature, it is obviously necessary that all dealers and consignees of goods such as those which are mentioned in s. 6 of the Act should exercise greatest caution as to the persons with whom they deal. In my view, the petitioner has been properly convicted, but if he considers that he has a grievance against the person who supplied him with these goods, it will be for him if so advised, to consider the propriety of instituting a suit for damages against that person. This Rule must accordingly be discharged and the decision of the learned Magistrate is affirmed.

of 1908), Art. 120—Suit for accounts by one co-owner against another—Art. 120, applies—Right to sue when accrues.

On partition, the mother is entitled to share equal to that of the son.

In a suit for partition of joint family property a claim by a member for certain property belonging to him and said to have been entrusted by him to the plaintiff personally is a separate and distinct matter, and it can find no room in a suit for partition. [p. 139, col. 2.]

The institution of a suit for partition by a member of a joint family is an unequivocal intimation of his intention to separate and there consequently is a severance of his joint status from the date when it was instituted. A decree may be necessary for working out the results of the severance and for allotting definite shares, but the status of the plaintiff as separate in estate is brought about by his assertion of his right to separate whether he obtains a consequential judgment or not. A plaintiff claiming a partition even if withdrawn would unless explained afford evidence that an intention to separate had been entertained. [p. 150, col. 1.]

A defendant in a partition suit need not pay ad valorem court-fees on the share he claims in such a suit. [p. 153, col. 2.]

In a partition suit every person interested in the property to be partitioned whether ranged as plaintiff or defendant is a plaintiff. [p. 154, col. 1.]

In a suit for partition the manager of a joint family as such cannot be called upon to render a general account of his dealings with the joint family property. He is however bound to satisfy the Court what property is available for partition, and on this point his ipse dixit is not to be accepted, especially when it is alleged that he has secreted and done away with much property. [p. 155, col. 2.]

[Case-law referred to.]

A claim by widows for future and present maintenance and residence arises from day to day and there can be no question of limitation.

There is no presumption that any particular property in the hands of one of the coparceners is joint family property and the burden therefore is upon the person who alleges that these properties are joint family properties liable to partition, to prove it. [p. 152, col. 1.]

Where after the partition a co-owner has chosen to mix his separate movable property with property held in co-ownership the burden lies heavily upon him to prove that the immovable properties acquired after the partition were acquired from his own separate funds and not out of the income of the property held by him in co-ownership. [p. 153, cols. 1 & 2.]

Possession by one of the junior members of the joint family is the possession of the manager of the family and can give manager's co-owner no advantage when the manager or karta of the family denied, or in any case is not proved to have admitted that co-owner's rights. [p. 143, col. 1.]

Possession of a co-owner in law is the possession of his co-owners. It is not possible for him to put an end to that possession by any secret intention in his mind. Nothing short of ouster or something equivalent to ouster can bring about the result. It is not necessary to show that adverse possession was brought to the knowledge of the person against whom it was claimed. It is sufficient that the possession was adverse and without any attempt at concealment; so that the person against whom time was running ought, if he exercised due vigilance, to have been aware of what was happening. Non-participation by one of two co-owners in the possession and enjoyment of the property belonging to them as co-owners for an extended period, coupled with the absence of any claim or demand for participation, may amount to ouster of such co-owner; whether it does or not, depends upon the facts and circumstances of each individual case. If in the circumstances of any particular case such non-participation and absence of demand cannot be interpreted by themselves as exclusion or ouster, it is necessary for the party claiming title by adverse possession to prove some further specific act or specific acts of ouster. Such ouster must in its nature be an open assertion of a hostile title, such that actual or constructive knowledge thereof is clearly attributable to the party intended and sought to be excluded. Adverse possession will then start from the date of such act or acts. [p. 144, col. 1; p. 148, col. 1.]

[Case-law discussed.]

Title by adverse possession cannot originate during the minority of the person sought to be defeated by adverse possession. To acquire adverse possession there must be acts of exclusion or ouster amounting to open assertion of hostile title, knowledge of which must be attributable to the person sought to be excluded so as to enable him to resist the acts. A minor is not in a position to know of or to resist acts of ouster and there can be no overt acts amounting to open assertion of a hostile title against a minor. 70 Ind. Cas. 678 (27), dissented from. [p. 148, col. 2; p. 149, col. 1.]

It is only the father and mother who are the natural guardians of a minor.

While it is possible that a private temple should be so dealt with that in the course of years it becomes dedicated to the public as a public temple, dedication requires to be proved. 185 Ind. Cas. 305 (38), relied on. [p. 151, col. 2.]

A co-owner in possession of the entire estate held in co-ownership is constructive trustee of the minor co-owner in respect of his share. Sections 94 and 95, Trusts Act, are clearly applicable to such a case. [p. 148, col. 1.]

A suit for accounts by one co-owner against another co-owner in sole possession of property belonging to the co-owners is governed by Art. 120, Lim. Act, and the right to sue accrues only when there is a demand for accounts and a refusal to render them. Where there has been no demand for accounts and refusal to render the same the plaintiff is entitled to an account from the defendant for the entire period during which the defendant was in sole possession of the property. [p. 154, col. 2; p. 155, col. 1.]

[Case-law relied on.]

Mr. Jamiatrai Lalchand, for the Plaintiff.
Messrs. Kodumal Lekhraj, Srikishindas H. Lulla, Sunderdas Jethanand, A. P. Fonseca, Saganlal Hassanand, and Dingomal Narainsing, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 3, 2, 4, 5, 6 and 7, respectively.

Judgment.—The judgment in this case really begins with an order made by me on December 20, 1938 in which I decided in the affirmative the preliminary issue: "Whether there was a separation between the two branches of Dayaram and Wadhuram." In that order, Ex. 49, I have set out in great detail the history of the family involved in this litigation and the facts leading up to the present suit, and have generally cleared the ground for the reception of evidence on and the determination of the other issues in the suit. Issues 15 in number, were originally framed on August 13, 1937, as under:

"(1) Was the joint status of the parties severed in 1934 by the filing of suit No. 179 of 1934?"

(2) What is the family property liable to be partitioned and in whose possession is the said property?

(3) Is defendant No. 3 entitled to a share as claimed by her or to maintenance only as alleged in para. 5 of the plaint? If to the latter, to what maintenance is she entitled?

(4) Are defendants Nos. 4 to 6 or any of them entitled to any share in the properties in suit? If not are they entitled to maintenance? If so, at what rate?

(5) Are the claims, if any, of defendants Nos. 4 to 6 or any of them barred by limitation?

(6) Are defendants Nos. 4 to 6 or any of them estopped from claiming their shares and/or maintenance?

(7) Can the claim, if any, of defendants Nos. 4 to 6 or any of them be determined in this suit?

(8) Had defendant No. 5 deposited cash, ornaments and gold with the plaintiff? If so, of what value?

(9) To what relief, if any, is defendant No. 5 entitled on this account?

(10) Can defendant No. 5 claim the things mentioned in issue No. 8 from the plaintiff in this suit? If so, can she do so without first paying courts-fee on the amount claimed by her?

(11) Is the suit properly framed?

(12) Is the plaint sufficiently stamped?

(13) To what shares are the various parties entitled in the joint family property?

(14) To what relief are the parties entitled?

(15) General."

To these I added the preliminary issue referred to above by an order Ex. 30 dated November 30, 1938. After the decision of this preliminary issue another order Ex. 50 was passed by me on January 19, 1939 in which, after hearing the learned Advocates for the parties, I laid down the procedure I proposed to adopt in the further hearing of the suit. This hearing however was resumed only on November 24, 1939; between February and May 1939 no progress could be made because of holidays and more urgent work, and from July to October I was officiating as Judicial Commissioner. It soon became apparent that the decision on the preliminary issue which at one stroke threatened to deprive Dayaram's branch of the family of one-half of the family property had fallen upon defendants Nos. 1 to 3 as an unexpected blow, and the cross-examination of Khemchand, the plaintiff, and the evidence of Dayaram quite clearly betrayed a desire on the part of Dayaram to minimize the loss his branch of the family appeared likely to sustain. A distinction began to be made between those immovable properties set out in the schedule to the plaint which were with the family prior to the partition held to have taken place on July 30, 1905, and those subsequently acquired, and the learned Advocates for defendants Nos. 1 to 3 made no secret of the fact that they proposed to contend that in any case Kesarbai, defendant No. 4, could claim no share in or benefit from those of the 31 properties set out in the schedule to the plaint which had been required subsequent to July 30, 1905. To meet this situation defendant No. 4 filed an application to amend her written statement so as specifically to embrace in her claim partition, accounts and mesne profits of all the properties mentioned in the schedule to the plaint at whatever time they had been required. The application was of course strenuously opposed on behalf of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 but was allowed by me in an order, Ex. 57, recorded on December 4, 1939.

The operative part of that order reads :

"I am therefore of opinion that the amendment should be allowed. An amended written statement to be filed within 3 days and a copy thereof supplied to the plaintiff and each of the other defendants. Further written statement or rejoinder by the other parties to be filed within 10 days thereafter. Further issues, if any, to be framed on December 21, next."

Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 5 filed further written statements and on February 6, 1940 he following additional issues were framed:

"(1) Is defendant No. 4 entitled to a share in any of the immovable properties shown in the schedule annexed to the plaint? If so, what properties?"

(2) Can she claim a share in the suit properties without paying ad valorem court-fees on her share?"

(3) Were the various immovable properties shown in para. 1 of the further written statement of defendant No. 1 dated December 19, 1939 or any of them acquired and built upon by defendant No. 1 after the alleged partition with Hiranand in 1905 from his own monies or from the alleged joint funds comprising of the rents of other joint immovable properties?"

(3A) Is defendant No. 4 entitled to a share in any of the said properties?"

(4) What amounts if any were spent by defendant No. 1 on the development, improvement and repairs of the various immovable properties mentioned in para. 2 of the said further written statement of defendant No. 1?"

(5) Can defendant No. 4 get her share in the said properties without paying her share of the monies so spent by defendant No. 1?"

(6) Is defendant No. 4 entitled to an account of the rents and profits of the immovable properties shown in the schedule annexed to plaint or any of them?"

(7) Is her claim for such accounts for more than 3 years prior to November 1936 barred by limitation?"

(8) Is her claim for accounts of the sale proceeds of the Hyderabad property and Malir garden referred to in para. 2 of her amended written statement barred by limitation?"

Of the 23 issues which now appear on the record, original issues Nos. 6, 11 and 12 have been abandoned. Issues Nos. 3, 8, 9 and 10 of the original set are easily disposed of and I proceed to do so. Issues Nos. 13 to 15 are general and will be dealt with at the conclusion of this judgment. The additional issues will most of them be capable of simple answers once issues Nos. 4 and 5 are disposed of.:

"Issue No. 3. Is defendant No. 3 entitled to a share as claimed by her or to maintenance only as alleged in para. 5 of the plaint? If to the latter, to what maintenance is she entitled?"

In the course of final arguments, it was conceded by the learned Advocates for all the parties that Gomibai defendant No. 3 was on partition entitled to a share equal to that of the plaintiff or of each of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. This is clearly the law and there is no evidence on the record to support the plaintiff's contention in para. 5 of the plaint "according to the customs of the community to which the parties belong the mother is entitled to a reasonable allowance for maintenance only out of the family property but not to any share." I hold accordingly.

Issue No. 8. "Had defendant No. 5 deposited cash, ornaments and gold with the plaintiff? If so, of what value?"

Issue No. 9. "To what relief, if any, is defendant No. 5 entitled on this account?"

Issue No. 10. "Can defendant No. 5 claim the things mentioned in issue No. 8 from the plaintiff in this suit? If so, can she do so without first paying court-fees on the amount claimed by her?"

Paragraph 5 of the written statement of defendant No. 5 Hetibai, widow of Tikamdas, reads thus :

"This defendant further submits that she had with her large cash, ornaments and gold all of the value of Rs. 60,000 which she deposited with the plaintiff and has been lying with him in trust. She is entitled to the account of the said claim and payment thereof."

Now this is a suit for partition of joint family property and though by holding that there was a partition on July 30, 1905 Kesarbai becomes entitled to a share therein, and defendant No. 1 representing the joint family consisting of himself and plaintiff and defendants Nos. 2, 3, 7 and 8 must be held to be co-owners with Hiranand and after his death with Kesarbai, the suit still remains in substance a suit for partition of family property. The claim in para. 5 of the written statement of defendant No. 5 is a claim for certain property belonging to her and said to have been entrusted by her to the plaintiff personally. Such a claim is a separate and distinct matter, a matter between defendant No. 5 and the plaintiff only, and it can find no room in a suit for partition such as this is. It is open to defendant No. 5 to institute a separate suit against the plaintiff on this alleged cause of action if she so chooses. I therefore hold that defendant No. 5 cannot make such a claim in this suit even if she were to pay court-fees thereon. I decline to enquire into the merits of her claim embodied in para. 5 of the written statement. This disposes of issues Nos. 8 to 10.

"Issue No. 4. Are defendants Nos. 4 to 6 or any of them entitled to any share in the properties in suit? If not, are they entitled to maintenance? If so, at what rate?"

On July 30, 1905, there was a partition between the branches of Wadhuram and Dayaram of the properties movable and immovable belonging to them jointly. Wadhuram himself had died in 1902 or 1903 and his son Tikamdas had died in April 1905; it was Hiranand who actually effected partition with Dayaram. Hiranand himself and his two sons Nenumal and Sugnomal died on 3 successive days in 1908. Sugnomal was the last of these three to die, and on his death the share of Wadhuram branch passed to Padmabai the mother of Sugnomal as the heir of the sole surviving member of one branch of a joint Hindu family. Padmabai died a few months later and the estate passed to Kesarbai, sister of the last male owner Sugnomal. The facts recited above are deposed to by the plaintiff Khemchand and the legal position is clear and has not been disputed. In these circumstances Kesarbai, defendant No. 4, who is alive is alone entitled to the estate which came to the Wadhuram branch as a result of the partition on July 30, 1905. Hetibai, defendant No. 5, widow of Tikamdas, and Thakribai, defendant No. 6, widow of Nenumal, are, under the Hindu Law, entitled to maintenance and provision for residence from Kesarbai only. This again is not seriously disputed. Defendants Nos. 5 and 6 have not gone into the witness box and have led no evidence as to their position and circumstances. No arguments on their behalf were advanced by their learned Advocates at the close of the case. I hold therefore, on this issue that defendant No. 4 Kesarbai is entitled to a share in the properties in suit, subject to the decision on other issues in the case, and that defendants Nos. 5 and 6, Hetibai and Thakribai, are entitled in law to claim maintenance and residence from defendant No. 4. Such a claim on their part arises from day to day and there can be no question of limitation; no past maintenance has been claimed by these defendants.

But I do not think that the further questions which arise in this connection can be conveniently or effectively dealt with in this suit. Even if I hold hereafter that Kesarbai's claim is not time-barred the quantum and nature of the property which will come to her share will not be ascertainable till the time of the final decree, and even then there will be no material on the record to determine whether the claims for maintenance and residence should in fact be allowed, or what rate of maintenance would be proper in the case of these defendants, or what provisions, if any, should be made for the residence of each. Defendants Nos. 5 and 6, as already stated, have not gone into the witness box; they have led no evidence. There is no evidence on the record that either of these defendants at any time prior to the suit claimed maintenance and provision for residence from Kesarbai or from Dayaram. In these circumstances it will be proper only to make the declaration referred to above and to leave defendants Nos. 5 and 6 to enforce their claims for maintenance and residence in separate suits declining to determine these questions in this suit. Issue No. 5. "Are the claims, if any, of defendants Nos. 4 to 6 or any of them barred by limitation?" The question whether Kesarbai's claim to a share in the properties in suit is or is not barred by limitation has been by far the most debated question in the entire hearing of this suit. In order to understand and fully appreciate this matter and to determine the true legal position, it is necessary to set out the facts established on the record even though some repetition is inevitable. When in 1908 the tragedy occurred which left Kesarbai, defendant No. 4, the sole heiress of the large share in property movable and immovable which came to the Wadhuram branch of Jessomal's family in 1905, Kesarbai was an infant about a year old. The entire estate came under the management of Dayaram, defendant No. 1: he collected the rents of the immovable properties and managed them, he was in charge of the money-lending business. The evidence shows that Kesarbai, after the death in 1908 of her own mother Padmabai, found a mother in Thakribai, defendant No. 6, with whom she lived and by whom she was brought up in Shikarpur.

At an early age, between 12 and 15 she was married to one Gopaldas with whom she went to live at Jacobabad. Dayaram appears to have evinced no interest whatever in Kesarbai; he did not maintain her, he spent nothing on her marriage, he took no part in it. Khemchand, the plaintiff who at a remarkably early age had in 1902 or 1903 been sent by his father Dayaram to start a hundi business in Shikarpur, and who had settled there, alleges that he got Kesarbai married and incurred all the expense connected with the marriage. Khemchand admits he had in his hand considerable movable property inherited by Kesarbai from her father Hiranand. Gopaldas whom Kesarbai married was a man in a humble walk of life. About 1929 or 1930 he came to Karachi to take up employment in the firm of Lilaram Radhakishen, having secured the post of a Munim probably through the good offices of the plaintiff Khemchand himself, a partner in the firm. Kesarbai alleges that Khemchand was then living in Sadar Bazar in a part of property No. 8 in the schedule attached to the plaint, and that for 5 or 6 months she, her husband and their three children occupied an adjoining tenement in the same property. Thereafter as her husband Gopal-das was working in the town, and living in town was more convenient, the family shifted to the town, but she retained possession of the tenement in Sadar Bazar by placing her lock on the door thereof and leaving therein some household goods. Kesarbai deposes that after she came to Karachi Khemchand, the plaintiff, for the first time revealed to her that she was in fact a co-sharer with Dayaram in the property in suit in a half share, that she went to Dayaram and demanded her share, that Dayaram did not deny her claim but merely put her off; that on about four occasions she has participated in the income of the property in suit by receiving from Dayaram sums of Rs. 100 each. Dayaram has denied that he gave any moneys to Kesarbai or ever admitted she had a share in the property in suit, and in the absence of any other evidence on these two points I cannot accept the uncorroborated testimony of Kesarbai interested as it is. In July 1934 Dayaram filed suit No. 179 of 1934 for partition impleading at first only his wife Gomibai and his two sons and their sons as defendants. In November 1935, however, he amended his plaint by joining the present defendants Nos. 4 to 6 as defendants Nos. 4 to 6. The amended plaint is Ex. 64, and para. 9 thereof reads:

"That defendants Nos. 4, 5 and 6 are joined on their own application as per Court's orders dated July 12, 1935 August 23, 1935, and October 25, 1935 respectively. The plaintiff denies that defendants Nos. 4, 5 and 6 have any interest in the property subject-matter of this suit."

It is clear therefore that it was in 1934 or 1935 during the pendency of suit No. 179 of 1934 that Kesarbai for the first time definitely and openly claimed a share in the family property. It is equally clear, excluding at the moment Kesarbai's allegation that she is in possession of a portion of one of the family properties since 1929 or 1930, that from the time of the death of Hiranand in 1908 till Kesarbai put forward her claim in suit No. 179 of 1934, Dayaram was in sole possession and enjoyment of the property in which Kesarbai was a co-owner with a half-share, that Kesarbai did not in any way participate in that possession or enjoyment, and that she never at any time during a period of over 26 years demanded her share or participation in the enjoyment thereof. It is to be remembered however that Kesarbai was a minor till somewhere in 1924 or 1925, and that on her own showing she was entirely ignorant of her rights till Khemchand enlightened her after she came to Karachi in 1929 or 1930. According to Khemchand she came to Karachi in 1931 or 1932. In August 1908 Dayaram filed in this Court Suit No. 279 of 1908 against one Dipomal Pokarmal for the recovery of Rs. 4,300 on a mortgage. The plaint in the suit is Ex. 36. In the heading of the plaint Dayaram and his three sons Khemchand, Taroomal and Nevandmal (since deceased) are shown as plaintiffs; the plaint is signed and verified by Dayaram as manager and para. 6 of the plaint reads:

"That the said Jessomal Valiram died in February 1899 leaving him surviving his two sons named Wadhupal and Dayaram who were joint with him in business and estate. Thereafter, the said Wadhupal died leaving him surviving his two sons Hariomal and Tikandas who were joint with the said Dayaram. The said Hariomal and Tikandas, having since died leaving the plaintiffs alone as the survivors of the joint Hindu family."

Again in August 1910 Dayaram filed a similar suit in this Court against one Tharc walad Haji, suit No. 255 of 1910. The plaint in this suit is Ex. 37, Dayaram's son Nevandmal appears to have died between 1908 and 1910 for his name is not mentioned as a plaintiff in the heading of the plaint which is signed and verified by Dayaram. Paragraph 5 of this plaint reads:

"That Jessomal walad Valiram died in February 1899 and being a member of Hindu joint family with the plaintiffs, they by survivorship are entitled to the benefit of the aforesaid mortgage."

Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 place much reliance on Exs. 36 and 37 as evidencing clear and definite and overt acts of ouster against Kesarbai even apart from her exclusion from the possession or enjoyment of any share in the property in suit for a period of over 26 years. In 1921 or 1922 there was a re-survey of the city of Karachi and mutation in the Records of Rights after investigation by an enquiry officer. Exhibit 38 is an extract from the Record of Rights relating to one of the properties included in the schedule to the plaint. Column 8 of the extract showing the name of the holder reads:

"Dayaram wd. Jessomal, manager; Hindu joint family consisting of Dayaram Jessomal, Hiranand Wadhupal, Tikandas Wadhupal, Khiomal wd. Dayaram."

The "Remarks" column which purports to have been filled in on December 12, 1922 reads :

"Two of the members Hiromal and Tekoomal died without male issue. Khionmal continues to be joint with his father and does not wish his name to be recorded."

Exhibit 38 is strongly relied on by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 as a further overt act of ouster of Kesarbai. Suit No. 179 of 1934 came to an abrupt end in this way. The present plaintiff, defendant No. 1 in that suit, applied under O. XI, r. 12, Civil P. C. for discovery of documents by the plaintiff Dayaram and an order for discovery was made. Plaintiff Dayaram failed to comply with the order, and persisted in such failure. Defendant No. 1 on July 6, 1936 filed an application under O. XI, r. 21 for the dismissal of plaintiff's suit for want of prosecution. On July 7, the plaintiff's Advocate stated in Court : "I do not oppose the application under O. XI, r. 21, Civil P. C., and let the suit to be dismissed..." The Court's order on that date which is Ex. 65 in this case reads: "Suit dismissed under O. XI, r. 21, Civil P. C." On July 28, 1936, just three weeks after, Khemchand filed the present suit impleading Kesarbai as defendant No. 4. In para. 5 of the plaint Khemchand explains why Kesarbai has been impleaded in these words :

"Defendant No. 4 is joined as a party as she claims to be entitled to a share in the property as the daughter and heir of Hiranand Wadhuram, Seth Wadhuram being an uncle of the plaintiff and a co-owner in properties with defendant No. 1 and his family."

For defendants Nos. 1 to 3 it has been argued that though on this Court's finding on the preliminary issue Kesarbai became in 1908 a co-owner with Dayaram and his branch of the family in the immovable properties belonging to the two branches of Jessomal's family and held by them till the partition as joint family property, at the date of this suit she had no existing title, that long before 1936 Dayaram representing the joint family consisting of himself, his sons and grandsons, plaintiff and defendants Nos. 2, 7 and 8 had acquired ownership of Kesarbai's share by adverse possession. The case for these defendants on the facts recited above is that exclusion from participation in possession and enjoyment of one co-owner by another for an extended period of time is strong evidence of ouster and may by itself amount to adverse possession, and that in the circumstances of this case it does. But even if the Court holds that it does not, Dayaram in 1908 and again in 1910 and again in 1921 or 1922 openly asserted a title adverse to Kesarbai by acts which clearly amounted to ouster, and Dayaram's adverse possession of Kesarbai's share in the property had ripened into ownership long before she had in 1935 put forward a claim in suit No. 179 of 1934. It has been contended that ignorance of her rights on the part of Kesarbai is irrelevant and of no consequence. It has been urged that Kesarbai's minority might have availed against the plea of adverse possession had Kesarbai filed a suit within three years after she attained majority in 1924 or 1925, but it cannot be of any assistance to her in respect of a claim put forward for the first time in 1935. With the law that has been quoted in support of these various contentions I shall deal when examining Kesarbai's case on this point.

Mr. Sunderdas for Kesarbai has contended that no case of adverse possession against Kesarbai can arise. He has placed his arguments under four heads thus : (a) Kesarbai was at the time of the filing of this suit and for some years before in actual physical possession of part of the property in suit; she was therefore in joint possession and no question of adverse possession can arise. (b) Even otherwise Khemchand was admittedly in joint possession with defendant Dayaram and as he does not deny and never has denied Kesarbai's title as co-owner, his possession enures for the benefit of Kesarbai. There can be no ouster of one co-owner unless all the remaining co-owners deny his title. (c) Mere exclusion of a co-owner from participation in possession and enjoyment even for a long period cannot in the circumstances of this case amount to ouster; there must necessarily be other overt acts of ouster to the knowledge, actual or constructive, of Kesarbai, and such as she was in a position to resist. Kesarbai was a minor till 1924 or 1925, the overt acts relied on for ouster were acts done during Kesarbai's minority and cannot avail defendants Nos. 1 to 3, for Kesarbai could have had no knowledge of these acts and was unable owing to her minority to resist them (d) Dayaram was the nearest male agnate of Kesarbai, he was her agent and de facto guardian; in this fiduciary position he could not by any acts whatever acquire a title adverse to Kesarbai (After considering the evidence as to joint possession by Kesarbai, His Lordship concluded.) I hold on this point that Kesarbai has not proved actual physical possession of any part of the property in suit at any time whatever.

I cannot agree that Khemchand's admitted possession of a portion of the property in suit can enure for the benefit of Kesarbai. The co-owners in this case were Kesarbai on the one hand and Dayaram on the other, representing the joint Hindu family of which he was the manager of karta. Possession by one of the junior members of the joint family was the possession of the manager of the family and can in my opinion give Kesarbai no advantage when the manager or karta of the family denied or in any case is not proved to have admitted Kesarbai's rights. Besides, as has been pointed out by the learned Advocate for defendant No. 2, Khemchand has never at any time definitely admitted Kesarbai's rights as a co-owner in the property in suit. In para. 6 of his plaint he does not state that Kesarbai has a one-half share in the property in suit as co-owner. All he says is that Kesarbai is impleaded in the suit because "she claims" to be a co-owner. There is no evidence that Khemchand at any time before the filing of this suit admitted Kesarbai's rights as co-owner. He has not even done so definitely in his deposition in this case. I think, therefore that the second ground on which Mr. Sunderdas contended that there was no case of adverse possession against Kesarbai is without substance and cannot be accepted.

The third ground put forward by the learned Advocate for Kesarbai is a legal one. A large number of cases has been cited by the learned Advocate for defendant No. 4, Kesarbai, and by the learned Advocates for defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on this point, and it is necessary for me to examine all these cases and to record what in my opinion is the true legal position on this point to be gathered from the various authorities quoted. As to the facts, these have been set out in great detail above and are really not in dispute. What is in dispute is the nature of the legal inference to be drawn from these facts. The question is whether on the facts established in this case Dayaram, who was a co-owner with Hiranand till his death, and who became a co-owner with Kesarbai on the death of Hiranand and his sons in 1908, has thereafter acquired a title adverse to Kesarbai in consequence of which Kesarbai's claim to any part of the property in suit has been extinguished. The case of Corea v. Appuhamy (1) a decision of the House of Lords reported in Corea v. Appuhamy (1) is in authoritative decision on the rights of co-owners and adverse possession between co-owners. At p. 236* of the report in this case their Lordships state:

"The principle recognized by Wood V. C. in Thomas v. Thomas (2) holds good: 'Possession is never considered adverse if it can be referred to a lawful title'."

Their Lordships proceed to state:

"The two learned Judges in the Court of Appeal did not adopt in its entirety the suggestion of the trial Judge. They both held that Iser is entered as "sole heir," and that his title has been adverse ever since he entered. They held that he entered as "sole heir," apparently because he had it in his mind from the first to cheat his sisters. But is such a conclusion possible in law? His possession was in law the possession of his co-owners. It was not possible for him to put an end to that possession by any secret intention in his mind. Nothing short of ouster or something equivalent to ouster could bring about the result."

In the present case Dayaram who was a party to the partition in 1905 could not but have been aware that after the death of Hiranand and his sons on successive days in 1908, and the death of Padmabai a few months later, Kesarbai had by inheritance become a co-owner with him in the family property. He may have intended and probably did secretly intend to cheat his co-owner who was an infant entirely ignorant of her position, but in the words of their Lordships it was not possible for him to put an end to his possession as co-owner by any secret intention in his mind and nothing short of ouster or something equivalent to ouster could bring about that result. Mr. Lulla, on behalf of defendant No. 2, has contended that this decision of the House of Lords turned largely on the provisions of an ordinance applicable to Ceylon and cannot be regarded as an authority in the present case. No doubt the actual decision in the case turned to some extent on the wording of s. 3 of an Ordinance of 1871, part of the Law of Ceylon, but in the passage which has been cited above their Lordships are discussing the general law of acquisition of title by adverse possession as between co-owners. The case in Corea v. Appuhamy (1) was referred to by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Hardit Singh v. Gurmukh Singh (3). The judgment of the Board was delivered by Lord

Buckmaster who states :

"If by exclusive possession of joint estate is meant that one member of the joint family alone occupies it that, by itself, affords no evidence of exclusion of other interested members of the family. Uninterrupted sole possession of such property without more must be referred to the lawful title possessed by the joint holder to use the joint estate and cannot be regarded as an assertion of a right to hold it as separate so as to assert an adverse claim against other interested members.

If possession may be either lawful or unlawful, in the absence of evidence it must be assumed to be the former. The fact therefore that this village of Bhagsar has been occupied for many years by defendants and their predecessors is insufficient to prove exclusion of the plaintiffs without further evidence."

Their Lordships were dealing with a case of joint family property in the Punjab; but I do not think that that makes any material difference. The case of Govindrao v. Rajabai (4) a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported in Govindrao v. Rajabai (4) was a case of tenants-in-common. Citing with approval the case in Corea v. Appuhamy (1) their Lordships held in this case that the rule that possession by one tenant-in-common cannot be adverse to another, meant that it cannot be so until ouster. Their Lordships held in that case that adverse possession had been established in the following circumstances: The plaintiff and the defendant belonged to two branches of the same family which were not joint. It appeared that plaintiffs' title to the property in question had never been expressly denied till 1912, but the two branches had separated long before and the plaintiff had never had possession or participation of profits since 1880, and when a predecessor of the defendant who had been managing the properties of the plaintiff during his minority handed them over on his coming of age more than 20 years before the suit this property was not included. In these circumstances it was held that in regard to the property in suit the action brought by the plaintiff in 1917 was barred by limitation, because the plaintiff must have known more than twelve years before the suit that his title was not admitted and the possession of the defendant had been adverse for more than the statutory period.

The case in Baghbhari v. Khatun (5), lays down the same principle as that enunciated by the House of Lords in Corea v.

Appuhamy (1), it was held in this case that possession or occupation of property by one co-sharer does not constitute adverse possession against any other co-sharer until there has been a disclaimer of the latter's title by open assertion of hostile title on the part of the former. Where a co-sharer deals with property in which some women are interested, there is a presumption that acts done by him are as manager and agent of the latter. In order to constitute adverse possession the possession must be actual, visible, exclusive, hostile and continued for the time necessary to create the bar of limitation. The same question of the acquisition of title by adverse possession by one co-sharer against another was again discussed by a Bench of our own Court in Mangalmal Aganmal v. Muhamad Usif Bhoro (6). It was there held that to constitute a title by adverse possession in one co-owner as against another there must be disclaimer by the one of the other's title by open assertion of a hostile title. It was not sufficient to show acts of possession. It was also held in this case that it was not necessary to show that adverse possession was brought to the knowledge of the person against whom it was claimed. It was sufficient that the possession was adverse and without any attempt at concealment; so that the person against whom time was running ought, if he exercised due vigilance, to have been aware of what was happening. This decision is of special importance in the present case, because every act of ouster set up by the learned Advocate for defendant No. 1 was an act done at a time when Kesarbai was a minor. In Gobind Chandra v. Upendra Chandra (7), it was held that :

"In order to establish adverse possession by one tenant-in-common against his co-tenants there must be exclusion or ouster and the possession subsequent to that must be for the statutory period.....What is sufficient evidence of exclusion must depend upon the circumstances of each case. Mere non-participation in rents and profits would not necessarily of itself amount to adverse possession but such non-participation or non-possession may, in the circumstances of a particular case, amount to adverse possession. Regard must be had to all the circumstances and a most important element is the length of time."

"Merely to find overt acts of a notorious character unequivocally referable to an assertion of hostile title and that whether the co-sharer sought to be ousted knew of it or not, he would have known if he were diligent, would not therefore suffice. It is essential to find further his knowledge."

I am however bound by the decision of our own High Court reported in Mangalmal Aganmal v. Muhamad Usif Bhoro (6), where it has been held that actual knowledge need not be proved. It is sufficient if the acts of ouster relied on are overt acts so visible and publicly hostile to a co-sharer that he must have had knowledge of them. In Jagadeshchandra v. Taiyab Sarab (9), a Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that there can be no adverse possession by one co-sharer as against others until there is ouster or exclusion. The possession of a co-sharer becomes adverse to another co-sharer from the moment when there is an ouster; that is, after there is an assertion of a hostile title by one co-sharer against the other and to the knowledge of the latter, and the burden of proving the adverse possession or ouster was on the party who claims to defeat the title of his co-sharer by adverse possession. To the same effect is the decision of the Bombay High Court in Chandbhai Mahamadbbhai v. Hasanbhai Rahimtoola (10), where it was held by the Chief Justice and Shah, J. that :

"The sole possession by one of two joint owners itself is no evidence of his denial of the right of the other joint owner, and time does not run against the joint owner out of possession until the joint owner in possession has done some act to the knowledge of the other which amounts to a denial of the latter's right."

The decision cited above and reported in Gobind Chandra v. Upendra Chandra (7) and Chandbhai Mahamadbbhai v. Hasanbhai Rahimtoola (10), were referred to with approval in Malhari Vaman v. Vinayak Ravji (11), which is a decision of a single Judge of the Bombay High Court. In Harcharan v. Bindu (12), it was held that co-sharers who collect profits for other co-sharers are in a position similar to that of a lambardar. Where no adverse title has been set up, the mere fact that a co-sharer plaintiff has not received profits for more than twelve years before suit will not bar his claim.

Again in Narsingh Das v. Gokul Chand (13), it was held by a Bench of the Lahore High Court that in the case of co-owners in the absence of an open assertion of a hostile title by one to the knowledge of the others there can be no ouster, and that non-participation in the profits by one and exclusive occupation by the other do not establish adverse possession. In support of their decision, their Lordships have referred to the case in Corea v. Appuhamy (1) and to a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Lachmeswar Singh v. Manowar Hossein (14). In Munshi v. Beli Ram (15), it was held that the possession of one co-sharer must be deemed to be the possession of all the other co-sharers, and in order to defeat the title of absentee co-sharers it is for the co-sharer in possession to prove that by some overt act he converted his possession into adverse possession to the knowledge of other co-sharers. The case in Jagannath Marwari v. Chandni Bibi (16), is a judgment of Mookerjee and Buckland, JJ., and is of special importance because it deals with a case of adverse possession against a minor co-sharer. In the judgment of Mookerjee, J. at p. 651* the following passage occurs :

"The fundamental rule is that in order to establish adverse possession as between co-sharers there must be evidence of an open assertion of a hostile title by one of them to the knowledge of others. Mere non-participation in the profits by one party and exclusive occupation by the other is not conclusive. Apart from this we have the important circumstances that in this case the rightful owner, the second plaintiff Ramnibas who when a child a few months old was taken in adoption in 1892, was a minor till at least 1910; it is thus difficult to appreciate how the contesting defendants began to hold adversely to the knowledge of the infant in 1901."

The learned Judge has relied on the cases in Corea v. Appuhamy (1), Hardit Singh v. Gurmukh Singh (3), referred to before, Muttu Nayagam v. Brito (17) and Varada Pillai v. Jivaratnammal (18), which, he says, emphasize the principle that if possession may be either lawful or unlawful, in the absence of evidence, it must be assumed to be the former, or in the language of Wood, V. C. in Thomas v. Thomas (2), possession is never considered adverse if it can be referred to a lawful title. On the other hand a number of authorities have been cited and relied on by the learned Advocates for defendants Nos. 1 to 3. But if these are closely examined, it will be apparent that they lay down no principle contrary to those to be found in the authorities I have referred to above which were quoted and relied on by the learned Advocate for defendant Kesarbai. In the case in Gangadhar Balvant v. Parashram Bhalchandra (19), it was held by Sir Lawrence Jenkins and Batty, J. that

"to constitute an adverse possession as between tenants-in-common there must be an exclusion or an ouster. Sole possession by one tenant-in-common continuously for a long period without any claim or demand by any person claiming under the other tenant-in-common is evidence from which an actual ouster of the other tenants-in-common may be presumed."

Reliance has been placed in the judgment of Sir Lawrence Jenkins in this case on the case reported in Fisher and Taylor v. Prosser (20), in which Lord Mansfield left it to the jury to presume an actual ouster from the fact that for about forty years one tenant-in-common had been in sole possession of lands without any claim or demand by any person claiming under the other tenant-in-common, though no actual ouster was proved. The facts in this Bombay case however were entirely different. Not only was there no evidence to show that the plaintiffs or their fathers ever received their share of the property in question, but they had taken no steps to have their names entered as co-defendants in a redemption suit filed in 1892 by Vishnubhat Godbole against Ganesh, the party who claimed adversely to them. None of the plaintiffs in that suit besides were minors. The decision of our own High Court reported in Aludomal Jhangimal v. Ali (21) is not of much assistance. It was a second appeal and as the two lower Courts had found on the facts exclusion by adverse possession, the High Court refused to interfere. Sardar Amarsingh v. Sardarni Shiv Datt Kaur is a decision of a Single Judge of the Lahore High Court reported in Amar Singh v. Shiv Datt Kaur (22). The learned Judge held that "non-participation in rents and profits by a co-sharer for a very long time may justify an inference of ouster. The fact was also evidence of abandonment, that is, of intentional quitting of possession by a proprietor coupled with an intention not to resume it." At p. 891* of the judgment the learned Judge states:

"The crucial point which seems to me to require decision in the case is whether the removal of plaintiff's name from the revenue records can or cannot be considered to be an overt act on the part of other co-sharers amounting to ouster.....I do not see why the removal of the name of Narainsingh should not be considered to be an overt act amounting to ouster. It was done openly and if the plaintiff had taken any interest at all in the land he could not have failed to learn about it for the records of right are attested every four years and there was also a settlement of the Lahore District about the year 1912-13."

A little further the learned Judge states:

"It is true that no notice is proved to have been given to the plaintiff or his father, but for reasons given above it seems to me that the removal of the plaintiff's name from a public record was bound to come to plaintiff's notice in the ordinary course if he took any interest in the land, and hence his knowledge of the adverse claim set up by the defendants may be reasonably presumed. It may be noted in this connexion that though plaintiff was a minor in 1907 he appears to have become a major in 1912 when his property was released from the Court of Wards. Plaintiff however took no action to assert his claim till 1930. The defendant's title therefore became perfected by adverse possession for over 12 years in the meantime."

The passages quoted sufficiently distinguish this decision from the present case. In the circumstances of that case the learned Judge held that the removal of Narainsingh's name was an overt act which must have come to his knowledge when he attained majority in 1912. The suit was not filed till 1930, eighteen years after Narainsingh attained majority. The decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case in Secretary of State v. Devandra Lalkhan (23) is of no assistance, as it was not a case of adverse possession as between co-owners. Besides, their Lordships held that the person against whom adverse possession was being claimed had constructive knowledge of an act which constituted an open assertion of a hostile title. The case in Anant Ganpati v. Vishnu Rambhau (24) is a decision of a Single Judge who held that where a special relationship exists between persons, such as tenants-in-common or members of an undivided family, the Court will presume that possession held by one is possession held on behalf of all the co-owners or members of the family. It does not follow that because a tenant-in-common is out of possession, time immediately begins to run against him. The possession of one co-owner is in itself rightful and does not imply hostility as would the possession of a stranger. To constitute adverse possession as between tenants-in-common there must be an ouster, and exclusive receipt of profits continuously for a long period may point to an ouster if the Court is satisfied that such taking of profits is an indication of denial of right in the other co-tenant to receive them. It was also a Single Judge of the Madras High Court who decided the case in Mariammal v. Augustine Roy (25). It is there stated that

"if one co-tenant is in possession of property which belongs to him as well as to other tenants-in-common his possession should not be considered to be adverse unless there be circumstances from which the Court could come to the conclusion that the possession is adverse; but the question is not one of pure law but it is a question of fact. If from the circumstances the Court should come to the conclusion that the possession of one tenant-in-common was not on behalf of other tenants-in-common, the Court is entitled to do so notwithstanding the fact that the possession of one co-tenant is not necessarily adverse to the others. An undisturbed and quiet possession for a long time is a sufficient ground to presume actual ouster."

The case in Ram Dulari v. Sher Bahadur Singh (26) was quoted in support of the contention that adverse possession may be acquired against a minor. It is the decision of a Single Judge who states:

"It cannot be said that there can be no adverse possession during the continuance of minority. Section 6 does not prevent the possession being adverse or the running of limitation against a minor. It only gives an extension of limitation in favour of the minor after the cessation of disability on the death of the person subject to it."

This was not a case between co-owners, and the possession of Mst. Ram Dulari was not on behalf of the minor Inderjitsingh as it would have been if Ram Dulari and Inderjitsingh had been co-owners. The learned Judge has relied on the decision of the Madras High Court in Seetaramaraju v. Subbaraju (27) but as I will show later this decision of a Bench of the Madras High Court is strongly in favour of the defendant Kesarbai in the present case. The case in Shidlingava Sadeppa v. Rajava Tanesahab (28) is the judgment of a Single Judge of the Bombay High Court. It is not of any assistance, as it was not a case of adverse possession between co-owners. This brings me to the last of the cases cited by the learned Advocates for defendants Nos. 1 to 3 which is of special importance, namely, the case in Seetaramaraju v. Subbaraju (27). In the judgment in this case the question of acquisition of title by adverse possession against a minor has been discussed at great length. After referring to the case in Smjth v. Byrne (29) and the case in In re Biss; Biss v. Biss (30) and the case in Thomas v. Thomas (2) the learned Judges state:

"We do not think it can be stated as a general proposition that there could be no adverse possession of property which belongs to a lunatic or a minor during the continuance of the lunacy or minority of the owner. The question has in each case to be decided with reference to the anterior relationship between the person taking possession and the minor or lunatic, and to whether any circumstances exist which would entitle the Court to hold that the person who entered into possession did so under circumstances which would in law make him only an agent or bailiff of the minor or lunatic. The scheme of the Lim. Act shows that though time begins to run against minors and lunatics an extended period of limitation is given. Section 6 provides that where a person entitled to institute a suit or make an application for the execution of a decree is at the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned, a minor, or insane or an idiot, he may institute the suit or make the application within the same period after the disability has ceased as would otherwise have been allowed from the time prescribed therefor in col. 3 of Sch. I to the Act, and that where the disability continued up to the death of such person his legal representative may institute the suit or make the application within the same period after the death as would otherwise have been allowed from the time so prescribed; and where the legal representative is also under disability at the date of the death he will have the same privileges as are conferred by cls. 1 and 2 to s. 6. Section 8 provides that the period within which any suit must be instituted or application made will not be extended to more than three years from the cessation of the disability or the death of the person affected thereby. Section 9 provides that when once time has begun to run no subsequent disability or inability to sue stops it. Article 144 provides a period of 12 years from the date when the possession becomes adverse to the plaintiff. It seems to us from the provisions of the Lim. Act that lunacy or minority would not by itself prevent limitation from running as against a lunatic or minor and that in cases where it is clear that the person entering into possession was under no duty to the lunatic or minor and entered into possession for his own benefit and in assertion of a title hostile to that of the lunatic or minor, limitation would begin to run from the date when he so took possession though the lunatic

The learned Advocate for defendant Kesarbai should feel himself indebted to Mr. Lulla the learned Advocate for defendant No. 2 for referring me to this case; because it helped me to overcome the one great difficulty I had in my mind on the point I am discussing. Unlike the alienees in this Madras case Dayaram in the present case did not enter into possession without any anterior relations with the defendant Kesarbai against whom he claims adverse possession. He was a co-owner with the infant Kesarbai's father, and he entered into possession and continued in possession of the entire estate held in co-ownership under circumstances which would in law make him the constructive trustee of the minor Kesarbai in respect of her share. Sections 94 and 95, Trusts Act, are clearly applicable to the position of Dayaram in these circumstances. It appears to me from a careful consideration of all the authorities cited above that the following propositions of law are clearly deducible:

(a) Non-participation by one of two co-owners in the possession and enjoyment of the property belonging to them as co-owners for an extended period, coupled with the absence of any claim or demand for participation, may amount to ouster of such co-owner; whether it does or not, depend upon the facts and circumstances of each individual case; (b) if in the circumstances of any particular case such non-participation and absence of demand cannot be interpreted by themselves as exclusion or ouster, it is necessary for the party claiming title by adverse possession to prove some further specific act or specific acts of ouster; (c) such ouster must in its nature be an open assertion of a hostile title, such that actual or constructive knowledge thereof is clearly attributable to the party intended and sought to be excluded; (d) adverse possession will then start from the date of such act or acts; (e) minority is no bar to acquisition of title by adverse possession if the person claiming such adverse possession does not bear to the person against whom he claims it any anterior relationship such as that of agent, bailiff, trustee, etc.

Applying these principles to the established facts of the case before me I have no hesitation in holding that Kesarbai's non-participation in the possession and enjoyment of the property in suit from 1908 to 1934 and her failure to claim or demand such participation did not in the circumstances of this case amount to ouster or exclusion. Dayaram's position was that of a co-sharer in respect of Kesarbai's share of the property and the rents and profits collected in respect thereof; he was in law a constructive trustee. Kesarbai was a minor till 1925 and the 12 years' period for acquisition of title by adverse possession had not elapsed between the date of Kesarbai's attaining majority and her definitely claiming her share in suit No. 179 of 1934. Besides it is clear on the evidence on the record that Kesarbai was entirely ignorant of her rights up to the time of the filing of suit No. 179 of 1934. If Dayaram then is to succeed in his plea of adverse possession against Kesarbai, he must necessarily prove some further act or acts of ouster of the nature stated above. Exhibits 36 and 37 are undoubtedly not such acts of ouster. Suits Nos. 279 of 1908 and 255 of 1910 were filed against certain mortgagors, strangers to the family. Kesarbai, even if she had been a major could not have had knowledge and cannot be expected to have had knowledge of statement made in the plaints by Dayaram as plaintiff in those suits. Even as a major she could not be fixed with knowledge actual or constructive of the statements relied upon as overt acts asserting a hostile title; but in fact Kesarbai was an infant and Exs. 36 and 37 cannot, in these circumstances, be held to amount to acts of ouster or an open assertion of a hostile title.

There is no evidence on record as to the circumstances in which the entry relied upon in Ex. 38 came to be made. The earliest date which can be attached to this entry is December 12, 1922, and Kesarbai was on that date still a minor. Exhibit 38 therefore is of no greater value than Exs. 36 and 37 as an act of ouster. Further, though it is not clear on the record, it would appear that within twelve years of December 12, 1922, Kesarbai had asserted her title and claim in suit No. 179 of 1934, for, she was added as a party in that suit by reason of an order dated July 12, 1935, and there is good reason for believing that the application on which that order was made must have been filed before December 1934. Indeed speaking for myself, and with all respect to the learned Judges who decided the case in Seetaramaraju v. Subbaraju (27), I cannot see how title by adverse possession can originate during the minority of the person sought to be defeated by adverse possession. To acquire adverse possession there must be acts of exclusion or ouster amounting to open assertion of hostile title, knowledge of which must be attributable to the person sought to be excluded so as to enable him to resist the acts. A minor is not in a position to know of or to resist acts of ouster and I cannot therefore understand how there could be overt acts amounting to open assertion of a hostile title against a minor.

I hold therefore that at the time of the filing of this suit Kesarbai had a subsisting title to the share of the family property which came to her by inheritance from her father Hiranand and in which she became a co-sharer with Dayaram, and that Dayaram and his branch of the family had not acquired title by adverse possession against Kesarbai in respect of that share. It is unnecessary in view of this to discuss at any length the fourth head under which Mr. Sunderdas for defendant Kesarbai placed his arguments on the question of adverse possession. I do not think, however, there is much substance in this fourth line of argument. Dayaram was indeed the nearest male agnate of Kesarbai but he was not her guardian in law or de facto. He was not her guardian in law for under the Hindu law it is only the father and the mother who are the natural guardians of a minor. He was not a de facto guardian because he had never placed himself in the position of one or evinced any concern whatever in the minor Kesarbai. It is not therefore necessary for me to refer to the cases relied on by the learned Advocate for Kesarbai on this point, namely the decisions reported in Sreeramulu Naidu v. Andalammal (31) Vasudeo v. Eknath (32), Fakir Gowda v. Dyamava Gowdappagowda (33) and Mahalakshamma v. Suryanayana (34). I hold on issue No. 5 that the claim of Kesarbai is not barred by limitation. I have already held that defendants Nos. 5 and 6 are only entitled to maintenance, that they have not claimed past maintenance and that a claim for present and future maintenance is one which arises from day to day and is not barred by limitation.

Issue No. 7.—“Can the claim, if any, of defendants Nos. 4 to 6 or any of them be determined in this suit?” I have already held that defendants Nos. 5 and 6 in respect of their claim to maintenance and suitable residence can in this suit have merely a declaration which I have given them. They have not chosen to place any material on record to enable the Court to determine whether they should be granted maintenance and a provision for residence, or the amount that should be allowed, or the nature of residence that should be determined and therefore they will have to enforce their claim by separate suits against Kesarbai if they so desire. The claim of Kesarbai, defendant No. 4, must undoubtedly be determined in this suit for there cannot be a partition between the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 to 3 without its being determined whether Kesarbai is entitled to one-half of the property of which partition is sought by the plaintiff against defendant Nos. 1 to 3. In respect of defendant No. 4 therefore I hold on Issue No. 7 in the affirmative. I come now to Issue No. 1 of the original issues.

Issue No. 1.—“Was the joint status of the parties severed in 1934 by the filing of suit No. 179 of 1934?” Before dealing with the authorities on this point which are mainly decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council, it is necessary to be clear about the facts. Suit No. 179 of 1934 filed by Dayaram in July 1934, was a suit for partition of joint family property. The suit did not ripen into a decree. It was not withdrawn with the common consent of the parties thereto. What actually happened has been set out by me in an earlier part of this judgment and is to be found in Ex. 65, the proceedings in Court on July 7, 1936, when the suit was dismissed with costs. The plaintiff in that suit, Dayaram, had contumaciously refused to comply with the order of the Court to file an affidavit of documents, and in answer to an application by Khemchand, defendant No. 1, under O. XI, r. 21, Civil P. C. Dayaram's Advocate stated in Court “let the suit be dismissed.” The learned Advocate who appeared for Khemchand, defendant No. 1 in that suit, strenuously opposed the dismissal of the suit for non-prosecution under O. XI, r. 21. He stated:

“My submission is that the suit should not be dismissed on this ground. I should be permitted to withdraw this application.”

The Advocate who appeared for the added defendant Kesarbai claimed his costs. It is clear in these circumstances that the dismissal of the suit by the order of the Court on July 7, 1936, was not with the concurrence of, but in spite of the wishes of, the defendants in the suit. The Court was entitled to pass the order which it did and the defendants in the suit had no power to prevent it from doing so. But that they did not assent is clear not only from Ex. 65 but from the fact that within three weeks Khemchand, defendant No. 1 in that suit, filed the present suit for partition. Reliance has been placed by the learned Advocate for defendant No. 1 upon a statement of Khemchand in his deposition to the effect:

"In 1934 Dayaram filed suit No. 179 of 1934 for partition. I did not desire partition, but in the written statement I filed I did claim a share."

I prefer however to rely upon Ex. 65 as indicating Khemchand's state of mind in connection with suit No. 179 of 1934 and the dismissal thereof. Dayaram's intentions in permitting the suit to be dismissed may well be gauged from the following passage in his evidence:

"In 1934 I filed a suit for partition against Khemchand and Tarachand. The suit was dismissed. I did not mind the dismissal as there was going to be great trouble (rola); since Khemchand and Kesarbai put forward a claim by Kesarbai, I did not mind the suit being dismissed."

In Mulla's Hindu Law at p. 391 the learned author states:

"The institution of a suit for partition by a member of a joint family is an unequivocal intimation of his intention to separate and there consequently is a severance of his joint status from the date when it was instituted. A decree may be necessary for working out the results of the severance and for allotting definite shares, but the status of the plaintiff as separate in estate is brought about by his assertion of his right to separate whether he obtains a consequential judgment or not. But if the suit is withdrawn before trial the plaintiff not desiring separation there is no severance of the joint status."

In a note below this paragraph the learned author states:

In Palani Ammal v. Muthuvenkatachala Moniagar (35), the Judicial Committee observed that a plaintiff claiming a partition even if withdrawn would unless explained afford evidence that an intention to separate had been entertained."

In the present case though the plaintiff Dayaram deliberately allowed the suit to be dismissed. His explanation is not that he did not desire partition, or that the other members of the joint family agreed to the withdrawal of the suit, he states that he withdrew the suit because he apprehended trouble. Kesarbai had appeared on the scene and he was in no mood to allow the claim of Kesarbai to be investigated. There is therefore no such explanation as would lead to an inference that the parties did not desire separation. The case of Palani Ammal v. Muthuvenkatachala Moniagar (35) is reported in 48 Mad. 254 (35). It was referred to in

Shagun Chand v. Data Ram (36) decided by a Bench of the Allahabad High Court and reported in 49 All. 664 (36). Ashworth, J. who refers to Palani Ammal's case (35) states: "The bringing of a suit for partition is only presumptive evidence of separation and that evidence may be rebutted by other evidence such as the fact of the withdrawal of the plaintiff on the ground that separation had not taken place or was not desired; but not by evidence merely of withdrawal of the plaintiff."

In Jethanand Udhandas v. Kewalram (37) it was held by a Bench of this Court that "it is open to a member of a joint Hindu family to effect a division of status by a clear and unequivocal expression of intention to do so without the necessity of any concurrence on the part of the other coparceners, and the filing of a plaintiff in a suit for partition is such an unambiguous and unequivocal manifestation of intention."

and again,

"When an adult Hindu files a partition suit, it effects severance of the joint status from the date when the suit was instituted."

I am clearly of the opinion that in the circumstances of this case there was a severance of the joint tie in July 1934 when suit No. 179 of 1934 was filed and it is unnecessary for me therefore to refer to the other authorities which have been cited at the bar. The entire law on this subject has already been discussed by me at great length in the order dated December 20, 1938 by which I have disposed of the preliminary issue. I accordingly answer issue No. 1 in the affirmative.

"Issue 2:—What is the family property liable to be partitioned and in whose possession is the said property?"

I deal with this issue in its application to plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 to 3. As regards defendant No. 4 Kesarbai, I will deal with it when I come to the additional issues which have special reference to this defendant. With regard to immovable property there is little dispute. The plaintiff has set out in the schedule annexed to the plaintiff thirty-one immovable properties. Defendant No. 1 claims that of the properties shown in this Schs. 11 and 15 are charitable, dedicated to public charitable purposes and therefore not liable to partition. As regards movable property the position is this: The plaintiff in the schedule attached to his plaint says that there is available for partition a sum of Rs. 4,00,000 (four lakhs) in the hands of defendant No. 1 and in his own hand Rs. 6,000. Defendant No. 1 denies the possession of Rs. 4,00,000 admitting only a sum of Rs. 35,000 invested in hundis. He alleges on his part that the plaintiff is in possession of Rs. 45,000 in cash, and ornaments, sovereigns, gold, silver, etc. of the value of Rs. 55,000, and claims that these are liable to partition. Defendant No. 2 alleges that plaintiff is in possession of cash to the extent of rupees one lakh and this amount is liable to partition. His learned Advocate has further contended that partition is to be effected also of two immovable properties purchased by the plaintiff at Shikarpur in the name of his wife, and of the plaintiff Khemchand's share in the business of Dilaram Radhakishen in which he was a partner. In regard to properties Nos. 11 and 15 in the schedule attached to the plaint alleged to be charitable properties Dayaram Ex. 36 states :

"Two of the properties shown in the schedule to the plaint are dedicated to charity. They are survey Nos. 186 and 206 Sadar Bazar. There are shrines of Lord Shiva in each of these properties. The shrines are open to the public. Rents are realized from portions of these properties ; about Rs. 180 from both a month. These rents are used for the purposes of the shrine. They were so used till the receiver took possession. No other use was made of these rents. The expenses of the shrines are pay of the pujari, his clothing and food, the cost of feeding Brahmans and other miscellaneous matters including articles for the ritual of worship. The shrine on property No. 206 existed in my father's time."

In cross-examination Dayaram has stated :

"The rents of properties Nos. 186 and 206 Sadar bazar used to be entered in the same books as the rents of other properties."

This is all the evidence that Dayaram has led on the point. On the other hand Khemchand, the plaintiff Ex. 20, states :

"In two properties there is an image of Shiva in one of the rooms in a space as large as this witness-box. These are private chapels. Rents are realized from the rest of each of these properties. These are utilized like the rents of all the other properties."

Again in another part of his evidence he states :

"The other property shown as charitable bears No. 206. So far as I know the temples in both these properties are for the use of the members of the family only."

Tarachand, Ex. 69, defendant No. 2, has apparently not been asked anything about these shrines. Dayaram has not produced any books of account. He has not called in evidence the pujari who he alleges is in charge of these shrines. He has not called any member of the public to depose that the shrines are places of public worship. I cannot, in these circumstances, accept his bare statements and hold that properties Nos. 11 and 15 in the schedule attached to the plaint are properties dedicated to public charity. As was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the recently reported case in Bhagwandin v. Gir Har Sarup (38), "while it is possible that a private temple should be so dealt with that in the course of years it becomes dedicated to the public as a public temple dedication requires to be proved."

So far as immovable property is concerned therefore, all the thirty-one immovable properties specified in the schedule attached to the plaint are liable to partition. They are admittedly in the possession of the defendant No. 1. If defendant No. 1 desires to maintain the shrines referred to, it is for him to arrange at the time of actual partition that properties Nos. 11 and 15 should be allotted to him as part of his share. The plaintiff has led no evidence to prove the possession by defendant No. 1 of a sum of rupees four lakhs as liable to partition. All that has been argued on his behalf is that defendant No. 1 was alone in receipt of the rents and profits of the immovable properties and of the money-lending business from the very start up to date and he has to render an account in respect of his management in the sense that the burden is on him to prove what movable property there now exists liable for partition in this suit. The plaintiff admits that an item of property liable to partition in this suit is the hundi business carried on by him in Shikarpur in connection with which he admits he received a sum of Rs. 35,000 from his father, defendant No. 1. Defendant No. 2 has led no evidence that plaintiff is in possession of a sum of rupees one lakh which is liable to partition in this suit. As regards the two immovable properties, admittedly purchased by Khemchand in the name of his wife now deceased, Khemchand has deposed thus :

"In the schedule of immovable properties attached to the plaint I have not shown one property in Shikarpur which stands in the name of my wife. I had purchased it in her name therefore it belongs to her. I purchased it in 1981 or 1982. I had invested the money I got from my maternal grandmother with the firm of Dilaram Radhakishen in 1984. It was that money with which I purchased the property. I received the money from my maternal grandmother in 1961 or 1962. Between then and 1984 I invested the money in hundis. I have kept no account of this money received from my maternal grandmother.....I paid about Rs. 4,200 for this property."

Again Khemchand states :

"I purchased two properties in the name of my wife not one, for Rs. 1,800 and Rs. 2,350. They are one in Dadwai quarter, the other in Jumakhan Mandi. The latter is an open plot. The former has a shop on it..... The property costing Rs. 1,800 I purchased in 1985. The one costing Rs. 2,350 I purchased in 1988. What I have stated before as to the date of purchase is wrong. The wife whom I have referred to and who is dead was named Lilawati."

Now neither Dayaram nor Tarachand had in suit No. 179 of 1934 claimed these properties as being liable to partition. Dayaram has not mentioned them in the schedule attached to the plaint, Ex. 64. Tarachand has not referred to them in his written statement, Ex. 67. In his written statement and evidence in the present suit, Dayaram has not referred to these properties at all and the claim that these properties are liable to partition in this suit is made by Tarachand alone. Now, these properties admittedly purchased by Khemchand, the plaintiff, were either purchased out of family property in his hands in connection with the hundi business carried on by him at Shikarpur, or out of his own private funds as he alleges. There is no presumption that any particular property in the hands of one of the co-parceners is joint family property and the burden therefore is upon Tarachand, defendant No. 2, who alleges that these properties are joint family properties liable to partition to prove it. He has offered no evidence on the point. It seems to me, however, that at the present stage it is premature to decide whether the two properties in question at Shikarpur are liable to partition in this suit. Khemchand is liable and will be directed to render an account of his hundi business. If on an examination of that account it is found hereafter that Khemchand has accounted for all moneys that came into his hands in connection with this business, there is no ground for holding that the two properties which he purchased in the name of his wife were purchased from joint family funds. If he fails to account for the moneys in his hands the evidence he has given with regard to the purchase of these two properties from his private funds will have to be assessed in the light of his failure to account to that extent for joint family funds. This point will therefore have to be left open for the present. In the same way the questions whether Khemchand, the plaintiff's investment and share in the firm of Lilaram Radhakishen is or is not liable to partition in this suit, will have to be left over till Khemchand has rendered an account of the joint family funds in his hands in connection with his hundi business at Shikarpur. Khemchand has stated that Rs. 8,800 which he invested in 1984 in the firm of Lilaram Radhakishen was his own private money inherited by him from his maternal grandmother. There is no evidence to the contrary and it is only upon an examination of the account which the plaintiff will hereafter furnish that it can be decided whether his evidence on this point is or is not to be accepted.

I hold, therefore, for the present on issue No. 2 that the family property liable to partition in this suit so far as plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 to 3 are concerned is the immovable property specified in the schedule attached to the plaint. What other movable and immovable property there is liable to partition in this suit will depend upon the accounts which the plaintiff and defendant No. 1 will hereafter be directed to render. It may be that on a taking of those accounts movable property may be found in the possession of defendant No. 1 liable to partition in the suit; it may be that movable and immovable property is found in the possession of plaintiff liable to partition in this suit. These matters must however be determined later. (After examining evidence regarding certain safe his Lordship concluded) I entirely discard the whole of this evidence and hold it not proved that there exists any safe with valuable contents liable to partition as part of the property in this suit. I now come to the additional issues framed on February 6, 1940, after defendant Kesarbai had been permitted to amend her written statement and the other parties had been given an opportunity to file, and filed rejoinders.

"Additional Issue No. 1—Is defendant No. 4 entitled to a share in any of the immovable properties shown in the schedule annexed to the plaint. If so, what properties?"

It is common ground that out of the 31 properties set out in the schedule attached to the plaint, all were acquired by the family before the partition of July 1905, except Nos. 11, 30, 31 and half of property No. 24. These were acquired after the partition. It is not contested that if Kesarbai's claim is held to be within time she is entitled to a partition of immovable properties acquired before the partition. It is contended however that she is not entitled to any share in the properties acquired after the partition. The argument of the learned Advocate for defendants Nos. 1 and 2 is that after the partition Dayaram was in possession of separate movable property and a thriving money-lending business of his own. He could well have acquired properties Nos. 11, 24, 30 and 31 out of his separate funds. It is argued that there is no presumption that any item of property in possession of any one member in a coparcenary is joint family property and that similarly there is no presumption that any particular item of property in possession of one co-sharer is the joint property of himself and his co-sharers. It appears to me however that in the circumstances of this case these arguments cannot prevail. Dayaram's own case is that after the death of Hiranand his (Dayaram's) branch of the family were the sole survivors of a joint Hindu family and that he managed the family property upon that basis. He has stated in his evidence:

"The household expenses were entered in the books of the money-lending business. New rent account books were not started after Hiranand's death. Account books were continued till they were finished and then new books were started. The money spent on repairs, re-building of properties, for taxes etc., were entered in the books of the money-leading business. The rents collected and entered in the rent account books were carried over into the books of the money-leading business periodically.

It is clear therefore that Dayaram kept no separate sets of accounts, that there was one account in respect of the entire property of the family and all the income of the family was thrown into one fund. By the partition of July 30, 1905, Dayaram became a co-owner with Hiranand and thereafter with defendant No. 4 Kesarbai, but nevertheless he has throughout the years treated the entire property as belonging to himself and the members of the joint family consisting of himself, his sons and grandsons. I am of opinion that the case falls under ss. 94 and 95, Trusts Act, which provides:

"In any case not coming within the scope of any of the preceding sections where there is no trust but the person having possession of property has not the whole beneficial interest therein, he must hold the property for the benefit of the persons having such interest or the residue thereof, as the case may be, to the extent necessary to satisfy their just demands;"

and s. 95 proceeds to stated :

"The person holding property in accordance with any of the preceding sections of this chapter must so far as may be perform the same duties and be subject so far as may be to the same liabilities and disabilities as if he were a trustee of the property for the persons for whose benefit he holds it."

I feel no doubt that Dayaram was a constructive trustee for the defendant Kesarbai of her share of the property held in co-ownership and of the income of that property. If Dayaram had any separate movable property of his own after the partition he has chosen to mix it up with property held in co-ownership. There has been on his part a deliberate mingling of funds, and in these circumstances the burden lies heavily upon him to prove that the immovable properties acquired after the partition were acquired from his own separate funds and not out of the income of the property held by him in co-ownership with defendant Kesarbai. His evidence on the point is not worth the paper on which it is recorded. I refuse to accept it uncorroborated as it stands. Reference has been made to the case in John Kennedy v. Mary Annette de Trafford (39), in which it has been held by the House of Lords that "there is no fiduciary relationship between tenants-in-common of real estate as such. Nor can one tenant-in-common of real estate by leaving the management of the property in the hands of his co-tenant impose upon him an obligation of a fiduciary character."

I have read this case very carefully and it is entirely distinguishable. Besides, in India we are governed by the provisions of Indian Trusts Act and the provisions of ss. 94 and 95 thereof which I have set out above are clearly applicable. Reference has also been made to the case in Abdul Rahman v. Haji Mahomed Idris (40), where it was also held by a Bench of our Court that

"no presumption can be drawn from the fact that the head of a family has acquired property that it is joint family property as understood in Hindu Law."

This case, again, is entirely distinguishable. It was held as a fact that Haji Umer who after the death of the propositus had acquired agricultural lands had no joint funds in his hands and was in position to purchase the agricultural land for himself. Reference has also been made to the case in Shakrulla v. Zohra Bibi (41). A perusal of the case however shows that it is of no assistance. I therefore hold that in the circumstances of this case defendant No. 4 is entitled to partition of the immovable properties belonging to the family before the partition of 1905 as well as of the properties acquired after that date, and of the entire income of those properties.

"Additional issue No. 2.—Can she claim a share in the suit properties without paying ad valorem court-fees on her share?"

My answer is in the affirmative. The defendant Kesarbai is a defendant in a partition suit and I can see no reason why she should pay court-fees on the share she claims in such a suit. She will have to pay her share of stamp duty on the decree in respect of the property allotted to her at partition. It is argued that though defendant No. 4 is ranged as a defendant, in respect of her claim she is for all practical purposes a plaintiff. There is no substance in the argument: in a partition suit every person interested in the property to be partitioned whether ranged as plaintiff or defendant is a plaintiff.

Additional issue No. 3.—Were the various immovable properties shown in para. 1 of further written statement of defendant No. 1 dated December 19, 1939, or any of them acquired and built upon by defendant No. 1 after the alleged partition with Hiranand in 1905 from his own moneys or from the alleged joint funds comprising of the rents of other joint immovable properties?

I have, for all practical purposes already answered this issue. There is no evidence whatever that can be accepted to show that the properties acquired after 1905 were acquired or rebuilt out of the separate funds of Dayaram and his family. The burden of proof on this issue was on Dayaram, defendant No. 1, and he has failed to discharge it. No further finding is necessary on this issue in view of my finding on Issue No. 1 above:

"Additional issue No. 3.—Is defendant No. 4 entitled to a share in any of the said properties?"

My answer is in the affirmative for reasons stated above.

"Additional issue No. 4.—What amounts, if any, were spent by defendant No. 1 on the development, improvement and repairs of the various immovable properties mentioned in para. 2 of the further written statement of defendant No. 1?"

This is a matter of accounting and will be covered by the directions to be given hereafter in regard to accounting to be done by the plaintiff and defendant No. 1:

"Additional issue No. 5.—Can defendant No. 4 get her share in the said properties without paying her share of the moneys so spent by defendant No. 1?"

As I have held that there is no proof that the income of the property held in co-ownership by Dayaram and Kesarbai was not utilized in whole or in part for the acquisition and development of properties after the partition of 1905, there is no reason why defendant No. 4 should have to pay her share of the moneys expended in acquisition and development, etc. I answer this issue in the affirmative.

"Additional issue No. 6.—Is defendant No. 4 entitled to an account of rents and profits of the immovable properties shown in the schedule annexed to the plaint or any of them?"

Additional issue No. 7.—Is her claim for such accounts for more than three years prior to November 1936 barred by limitation?

Additional issue No. 8.—Is her claim for accounts of the sale proceeds of the Hyderabad property and Malir Garden referred to in para. 2 of her amended written statement barred by limitation?"

These three issues must be dealt with together. It is not disputed that defendant

No. 4 in the view that I have taken of her case is entitled to claim accounts of the property held in co-ownership from defendant No. 1 or that Dayaram is only accountable to her as the karta or manager of a joint Hindu family. In the view that I have taken of the case, Dayaram, defendant No. 1, is accountable to defendant Kesarbai in regard to her share of the rents and profits of the property held in co-ownership as a constructive trustee. The point really in dispute in connection with this accounting is the period for which defendant No. 1 is liable to account to defendant Kesarbai. It is common ground that the article of limitation applicable is Art. 120 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act. But whereas on the one hand it is contended for defendants Nos. 1 to 3 that Kesarbai is entitled to accounts only for a period of six years prior to the date when she first put forward her claim in this suit, it is contended for defendant No. 4 that the right to sue in such cases accrues only when there has been a demand and refusal thereof. In this case Dayaram has stated:

"I have never at any time paid anything to Kesarbai out of the rents and other moneys received by me. She has never at any time made any demand on me. I have always considered myself the owner of the entire income."

The learned Advocate for defendant No. 4 in these circumstances contends that no question of limitation arises and defendant No. 4 is entitled to an account from defendant No. 1 for the entire period during which he was in sole possession of the property belonging to the co-owners and in sole receipt of the rents and profits thereof. As pointed out in B. B. Mitra's Commentary on the Lim. Act, there is a great conflict of decisions of the various High Courts as to what article of Sch. I, Lim. Act, applies in a case such as this, where one co-owner is demanding an account from another. The applicability of Arts. 62, 89, 109 and 120 has been debated in innumerable rulings of the various High Courts. I feel however that I will be on safe ground if I follow the view taken by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Yerukola v. Yerukola (42). That was a case between co-owners or tenants-in-common and it was held by the learned Judge who decided that case that Art. 120 of Sch. I, Lim. Act, was applicable and the right to sue accrued only when there was a demand for accounts and a refusal to render them. This decision of the Full Bench of the Madras High Court has been followed in 1933 by Madhavan Nair J., who decided the case in Lervai Rowther v. Syed Ammal (43). It has also been followed in two decisions of the Bombay High Court in Babasaheb Bhairojirao Chorpade v. Gopal Hanmant Kulkarni (44) and Jaffar El Edrus v. Mahomed El Edrus (45). The learned Advocates for defendants Nos. 1 to 3 have referred me to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Midnapur Zamindari Co. Ltd. v. Naresh Narayan Roy (46) and the same case at p. 270 of the same report Midnapur Zamindari Co. Ltd. v. Naresh Narayan Roy (47) where their Lordships allowed mesne profits for 6 years only prior to the date of suit. That was however an entirely peculiar case not between co-owners or tenants-in-common and it must be taken that their Lordships in so holding in that case were not laying down any general principle but were merely determining the rights of the parties in the special circumstances of that case.

I have been referred also to the case in Pateal Siddalingana Gowd v. Tatna Gowdra Bhimana Gowd (48), but that case lays down no different principle. Article 120 of Sch. I, Lim. Act, was held to apply and the case in Yerukola v. Yerukola (42) was cited with approval. I hold therefore that Art. 120 applies in this case. There has been no demand for accounts and refusal to render the same, and defendant No. 4 is therefore entitled to an account of the nature I have specified before for the entire period referred to from defendant No. 1. I accordingly answer Issue No. 6 in the affirmative and Issue No. 7 in the negative. As regards Issue No. 8 it follows from what I have decided on Issues Nos. 6 and 7 that defendant No. 4 is entitled to an account of the sale proceeds of the Hyderabad property and Malir Garden which were sold by defendant No. 1 after the partition of July 30, 1905 and I hold accordingly. There remains the question of the accountability of the plaintiff and defendant No. 1, and of the nature of the accounts that they should be required to render. In this connection, I would first deal with the question of the books of account. I have already in my order Ex. 49 on the preliminary issue expressed the opinion that the account books relating to the money-lending business carried on by defendant No. 1 and the rents and profits of immovable properties belonging to the family have been deliberately suppressed by defendant No. 1. The evidence recorded after the date of that order and the documents which have been exhibited merely confirm my view in this matter. (After considering evidence his Lordship proceeded further.) There is no dispute as to the accounts which the plaintiff has to render. He carried on hundi business in Shikarpur from 1902 or 1903 up to 1936; he has filed his books of account in Court. No suggestion has been made by any of the parties to the suit that he has not filed all the account books in connection with the business. The plaintiff has declared his willingness to render an account in respect of his entire business.

It is only in the case of Dayaram that the question of the nature of accounts to be filed needs special consideration. In regard to Kesarbai, defendant No. 4, he was, I have held, a constructive trustee, and therefore from the date of Hiranand's death in 1908 up to the date in 1936 when the Official Assignee as Receiver took charge of the properties in suit he must file a full and true account of all incomings and outgoings in connection with the immovable properties. In regard to plaintiff and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 however Dayaram's position is somewhat different, at least in the abstract, for he was the karta or manager of a joint family. As such, in a suit for partition, he cannot be called upon to render a general account of his dealings with the joint family property. He is however bound to satisfy the Court what property is available for partition, and on this point his ipse dixit is not to be accepted, especially when it is alleged that he has secreted and done away with much property. The law on this point presents no difficulty. In Mulla's Hindu Law, English Edition, at p. 267, the law is stated thus:

"238 (1). In the absence of proof of misappropriation or fraudulent and improper conversion by the manager of a joint family estate, he is liable to account on partition only for assets which he has received, not for what he ought or might have received if the family money had been profitably dealt with. the absence of any such proof, a co-parcener seeking partition is not entitled to require the manager to account for his past dealings with the family property. All that he is entitled to is an account of the family property as it exists at the time he demands a partition. But it is open to him to show that the expenditure which the manager alleges he has incurred has not in fact been incurred, or that more properties are available for partition than those disclosed by him. (2) Since the institution of a suit for partition amounts to a severance of joint status, the manager is, from and after the date of such a suit, strictly bound to account for all receipts and expenses, and can take credit only for such expenses as have been incurred for the benefit or necessity of the estate, and the net income after deducting such expenses is to be divided among the co-parceners according to their shares."

In Sri Ranga Thathachariar v. Srinivasa Thathachariar (49), it was held that :

"In an ordinary suit for partition, in the absence of fraud or other improper conduct, the only account the karta or manager is liable for is as to the existing state of the property divisible and the parties have no right to look back and claim relief against past inequality of enjoyment or other matters; but it is open to the plaintiff to prove specifically fraud, misrepresentation or other improper conduct on the part of the manager with respect to such management.....but subsequent to the date of suit, the plaintiff and the defendant (the manager) are only tenants-in-common or co-sharers, and therefore the manager is strictly bound to account for all receipts and expenses....."

The dictum of Jwala Prasad, J. in Jyoti-bati Chaudhurn v. Lakshmeshwar Prasad (50), was clearly not intended to enunciate the law on this point. The question in that case was one of court-fees, and the learned Judge decided, there could be no suit for accounts against the karta of a joint Hindu family; such a suit was essentially a suit for partition and court-fees were payable on this basis. In Sukhdeo v. Basdeo (51), a Bench of that High Court decided that :

"In the absence of proof of misappropriation or fraudulent or improper conversion by the manager of a joint family a co-parcener seeking partition is not entitled to call upon the manager to account for his past dealings with the family property. The co-parcener is entitled only to an account of the joint family as it exists on the date he demands partition."

The case in Sri Balusu Gurulingaswami v. Sri Balusu Ramalakshamma (52) a judgment of their Lordships of Privy Council, was also referred to in argument by the learned Advocate for defendant No. 1, but that judgment, a very long one indeed, deals with the question of the validity of an adoption and I have been unable to find in it any passage relevant to the point under discussion. In Damodardas Manehlal v. Uttamram Manehlal (53) a very strong Bench of the Bombay High Court held that :

"A manager of a Hindu family cannot refuse to render any account whatever of his management on the occasion of a partition, or require the other members of the family to accept his ipso dixit as to the property subject to partition. What that account should be so as to discharge him from his liability to account as manager, and what objection the other members of the family can take to it, must depend upon the conduct of the manager and the other members of the family, and cannot be stated in definite terms."

I think it would be hard to find a clearer statement of the law on this point and it is therefore unnecessary for me to refer to the other cases cited, e. g., those reported in Perrazu v. A. Subbarayadu (54), Tam-mireddi v. Gangi Reddi (55) and Rammath Chhoturam v. Goturam Radhakisan (56). In the present case, considering the fact that defendant No. 1 has suppressed the books of account, and the fact that he has for a period of over 30 years been in sole management of a vast estate and of a thriving money-lending business, there is no question of accepting his ipso dixit as to the property available for partition. From the date of the filing of suit No. 179 of 1934 Dayaram has to file a regular and complete account. For the period prior to that he must file an account showing the income of the immovable property and business and how he has disposed of it.

(Original) Issue No. 13.—"To what shares are the various parties entitled in the joint family property?" On my findings on the issues in the suit defendant No. 4 is entitled to a one-half share in the immovable properties in the schedule to the plaint. She is also entitled to one-half share in the net rents and profits of these immovable properties and a half share in the net sale proceeds of the Hyderabad and Malir properties. Of the remaining one-half share of the immovable properties the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 are each entitled to a one-fourth share. They are also each entitled to a one-fourth share in half the net rents and profits of the immovable properties and the sale proceeds of the Hyderabad and Malir properties. In the money-lending business carried on by defendant No. 1, Kesarbai has no interest. The plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 to 3 therefore will be entitled each to a one-fourth share therein, on the accounts of the said business being taken. Similarly the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 to 3 are each entitled to a one-fourth share of the hundi business carried on by the plaintiff in Shikarpur on the accounts thereof being rendered by the plaintiff. Two matters will, for the present, stand over: (1) the two immovable properties in Shikarpur purchased by the plaintiff in the name of his deceased's wife, Lilavati, and (2) Khemchand's investment of Rs. 8,800 in the firm of Lilaram Radhakishen. The shares in movable properties, which I have held above the parties to be entitled to, are of course all dependent upon the accounts which defendant No. 1 will furnish in accordance with directions given hereafter in this judgment.

(Original) Issue No. 14.—“To what relief are the parties entitled?”

Defendant No. 4 is entitled to a partition and separate possession of one-half share in the immovable property in suit set out in the schedule attached to the plaint. She is also subject to the accounts to be rendered by defendant No. 1, entitled to a one-half share of the net rents and profits of those immovable properties on the same being ascertained after accounts have been rendered by defendant No. 1, and to a one-half share in the net sale proceeds of the Hyderabad and Malir properties. Plaintiff and each of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 are entitled to partition and separate possession on one-eighth share in the immovable properties in suit and in the net rents and profits thereof after the same have been accounted for by defendant No. 1, and of a one-eighth share in the sale proceeds of the Hyderabad and Malir properties. They are also each entitled to one-fourth share in the money-lending business carried on by defendant No. 1 on behalf of the joint family and of the hundi business similarly carried on at Shikarpur by the plaintiff on the accounts of these businesses being rendered by defendant No. 1 and the plaintiff respectively. Defendants Nos. 5 and 6 are in law entitled to claim maintenance and suitable provision for residence from defendant No. 4; but they will have to do so in separate suits. Defendants Nos. 7 and 8 have filed their own separate suit for partition against the plaintiff, their father, and are not entitled to any relief in this suit.

The plaintiff is directed within two months from the date of this judgment to file in Court a detailed account of the hundi business carried on by him at Shikarpur from its very inception in 1902 or 1903 till the closing of that business in 1936 and in respect of properties Nos. 30 and 31 in the schedule to the plaint and the rents and profits thereof and to supply a copy of that account to each of defendants Nos. 1 to 3. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 are directed to file objections to that account if they so desire within a month thereafter. Defendant No. 1 is directed to file the following accounts within two months of this date: (a) an account showing the movable property in his hands liable to partition on the date of the filing of this suit and thereafter till the date of this judgment. This account must show the amount received by him at the partition of July 30, 1905 and the income received by him from August 1, 1905 and on the other side expenditure incurred by him during the same period; (b) a separate account from August 1, 1905 relating to the immovable properties shown in the schedule attached to the plaint and the property in Hyderabad disposed of by him and the Malir Garden sold by him. This account must show on one side all receipts of rents and profits till the Receiver took possession and on the other all items of expenditure connected with the immovable properties.

Copies of these accounts of defendant No. 1 to be supplied to plaintiff and defendants Nos. 2 to 4 and objections by them, if any, to be filed in a month thereafter. A preliminary decree to be drawn up in terms of this judgment. The question of costs is for the present reserved. I have made no reference in this judgment to a point raised by the learned Advocate for defendant No. 2 in his final arguments. He contended that as by the document, Ex. 72 Kesarbai, defendant No. 4, had assigned 10/16ths of her share in the property in suit to an alienee, she could not get a decree in this suit for more than 6/16ths of her half share. This point was not taken in the written statement filed by defendant No. 2 even in February 1940. No issue was sought on the point and I have not permitted the learned Advocate to press this point in his final arguments. One other remark requires to be made. I have held that defendant No. 3 is entitled to a share on partition equal to that of the plaintiff or each of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The nature of her estate in that share is a matter of law with which I am not concerned at this stage. I have held defendant No. 4 entitled to a half share. How this claim to a half share is to be satisfied and by which of the parties to the suit is a matter which will have to be determined before the final decree is prepared. This point is therefore not referred to in this judgment.

D. Preliminary decree ordered.

APPLICANTS

Hakim Qari NASIR AHMAD—

OPPOSITE PARTY

Contempt of Courts Act (XII of 1926), s. 2—Articles in newspaper—Test to see, whether amount to contempt of Court.

In considering whether articles published in newspaper amount to contempt of Court, what the Court has to see is, whether the publications had a tendency to prejudice the public or the Court for or against any party before the cause was finally heard. If they had such a tendency, the editor is guilty of contempt of Court.

Cr. Misc. App. an application dated November 26, 1940 filed by the above named applicants under s. 2 of the Contempt of Courts Act, the following order was passed by this Hon'ble Court.

Mr. K. P. Misra, for the Applicants.

Mr. Siraj Husain, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is an application under s. 2 of the Contempt of Courts Act.

The applicant Anis Ahmad Abbasi is the Editor of the paper named Haqiqat, and the other applicant Maulvi Mohammad Idrees is the Printer of that paper. The opposite party Hakim Qari Nasir Ahmad is the Editor, Printer and Publisher of another paper Hamdam.

An account of an interview between certain Punjab Khaksar leaders and a Sunni leader, Maulana Abdul Shakur, was published in the Hamdam of July 23, 1940.

An article over the signature of one Shaikh Mohammad Kamil was published in the Haqiqat of July 25, 1940. The heading of that article was 'Lies told by the Hamdam, King of liars', and it was alleged in it that the whole account of the interview in the Hamdam of July 23, 1940 was a fabrication. On July 30, 1940 the Editor of the Hamdam filed a complaint in Court against the Editor and the Printer of the Haqiqat under s. 500, I. P. C. A paragraph was published in the Hamdam of August 1, 1940 the heading of which was :

'Challenge to those who call Hamdam a liar. Criminal proceedings started by the Editor of the Hamdam against Haqiqat newspaper. Our opponents must come to the Court and prove that the news in the Hamdam was false, or they will go to jail. The well-known barrister of Lucknow Mr. Nasir Ullah Beg has filed a case in the Court of the City Magistrate of Lucknow.'

It was stated in this paragraph that Shaikh Mohammad Kamil had contradicted in the paper Haqiqat the news published by the Hamdam and had abused it to his heart's content and accused it of publishing lies and that the Editor of the Hamdam had filed a defamation suit in the Court of the City Magistrate of Lucknow. It was also stated in it—

'We challenge those who by their insinuations and malicious fabrications mislead the public against the Hamdam to come to the Court and prove that any news published in the Hamdam is false'.

A letter purporting to be sent by Akram Ahmad, the leader of the deputation of Khaksars was also published in the Hamdam of August 1, 1940. He wrote in that letter that the report of the interview between Maulvi Abdul Shakur and the Khaksar leaders published in the Hamdam of July 23, 1940 was word by word true. The heading of this letter was 'Truth about those who make false accusations against Hamdam.' The Haqiqat published a short editorial paragraph in its issue of August 3, 1940 with the heading 'jhootaun ke badshah ka dawa. Haqiqat ke khilaf muqadma.' (Complaint by the King of liars. Case against the Haqiqat.) It was stated in this editorial paragraph that the case brought by Hamdam would be fought, and if it was proved that Hamdam was a liar there would be a suit for damages and costs by Haqiqat, and that the Haqiqat gladly accepted the challenge which had been thrown to it. The Editor of the Hamdam made a complaint to this Court under s. 2 of the Contempt of Courts Act against the Editor and the Printer of Haqiqat on September 13, 1940 in respect of the editorial paragraph published in the Haqiqat of August 3, 1940. Both the Editor and the Printer were found guilty of contempt of Court, and the Editor was fined Rs. 200 and the Printer Rs. 100 and they were further ordered to pay Rs. 50 as costs to the Editor of Hamdam. The judgment in that case was pronounced on October 28, 1940. On October 30, 1940, Hamdam published a paragraph with the heading

'God's lathi on the head of the opponents of Hamdam. Haqiqat called Hamdam a liar. Prosecution instituted by the Editor of the Hamdam. Prosecution aside, God took such a vengeance that by reason of the abusiveness of the Haqiqat a prosecution for contempt of Court was launched in the Chief Court and ended in a fine of Rs. 300 besides costs of the suit. The Court decided that it was a case of heinous offence of contempt of Court'.

It was stated in that paragraph that the Editor and the Printer of the Haqiqat were both fined Rs. 200 and Rs. 100 respectively, and it was ordered that they should pay all the legal expenses incurred by the Hamdam and also the amount of Rs. 50 to Mr. Nasir Ullah Beg. This paragraph also contained the following —

"The facts of the case are that the newspaper Haqiqat which bears senseless enmity towards Hamdam and its Director and which has taken the biggest part in adverse propaganda against the Director of Hamdam published an article by Mohammad Kamil in which the Hamdam was dubbed as 'King of liars'."

Another paragraph appeared in the Hamdam of October 31, 1940, with the heading 'God's curse on the opponents of Hamdam'. Another paragraph appeared in the Hamdam of November 1, 1940 under the heading 'As one sows so shall he reap'. This complaint had been made in respect of the two publications in the Hamdam, dated August 1, 1940, and the three other publications in it, dated October 30, 1940, October 31, 1940 and November 1, 1940.

We have to see whether the publications had a tendency to prejudice the public or the Court for or against any party before the cause was finally heard. If they had such a tendency, the opposite party is guilty of contempt of Court.

We take first the paragraph appearing in the Hamdam, dated August 1, 1940, in which a challenge was thrown out to those who called Hamdam a liar. We think that it was not contempt to throw out a challenge to the Haqiqat to prove that the news in the Hamdam was false. It is said that the Hamdam committed contempt by publishing that in case the news was not proved to be false, the opponents would go to jail, because the result of the complaint was thereby anticipated. We think that this did not amount to contempt of Court. Neither the Magistrate in whose Court the defamation complaint was pending nor the public could be prejudiced thereby about the merits of the case. Everybody knew full well that it was within the province of the Magistrate only to decide what punishment he should give. We think that there is nothing in this paragraph which can make the Editor of the Hamdam liable for contempt of Court.

Next we come to the letter of Maulvi Akram Ahmad published in the Hamdam of August 1, 1940. This letter goes to show that the publication in the Hamdam of July 23, 1940, was true. That was no doubt, a point in the defamation suit, but we are not satisfied that the letter could tend to prejudice the Court or the public. We also think that the intention of the opposite party was not to prejudice anybody, but it was only to reply to the letter of Shaikh Mohammad Kamil in which it had been said that the account given in the Hamdam of July 23, 1940 was untrue. This letter was published on August 1, 1940 that is only two days after the complaint was made by Hamdam and before any date had been fixed in the case. It was held under similar circumstances in Ketra Moni Dasi v. Shamal Dhong Dutt (19 Indian Cases, page 539), (1) that the accused was not guilty of contempt of Court. The applicants themselves did not think that the letter would prejudice the trial, because they did not take any step till the present application was made on November 26, 1940 though an application was made on behalf of the opposite party on September 13, 1940, for contempt of Court in respect of a publication in the Haqiqat of August 3, 1940. The present applicants did not say even in reply to the application of the opposite party that he had himself committed contempt of Court. That might have been a factor in determining the punishment. We are of opinion that the opposite party did not commit contempt of Court by reason of publishing this letter.

It is said that in the publication, dated October 30, 1940, the Hamdam published that the Court awarded full legal expenses incurred by the Hamdam and the amount of Rs. 50 more to the Counsel, but it was wrong, and the Court had awarded Rs. 50 in all. We are not prepared to say that it was an intentional mis-stating of the result of the application. It could not prejudice the trial of the defamation case. It was stated in this paragraph that "the Haqiqat which bears senseless enmity towards Hamdam and its Director and which has taken the biggest part in adverse propaganda against the Director of the Hamdam, published an article by Shaikh Mohammad Kamil in which the Hamdam was dubbed as 'King of liars'."

One could understand this to mean that the Haqiqat published an article of Shaikh Mohammad Kamil on account of the enmity towards Hamdam and not because it was true. This could prejudice the public and the Court, and so it was a contempt of Court but not of any serious nature. The other words objected to are 'God's lathi on the opponents of Hamdam... God took such a vengeance that by reason of the abusiveness of the Haqiqat a prosecution for contempt of Court was launched in the Chief Court and ended in a fine of Rs. 300 besides costs of this suit.'

These words imply that those who oppose Hamdam are punished by God. This might possibly deter witnesses from giving evidence on behalf of Haqiqat against Hamdam, and therefore, we think that the opposite party is guilty of contempt of Court but not of serious type. Such writings are not taken very seriously by anybody.

The heading of the paragraph in the Hamdam, dated October 31, 1940, is 'God's curse on the opponents of Hamdam'. It was stated in it that Mian Anis Ahmad, Editor of the Haqiqat, had grown so reckless by indulging in constant abuses against the Director of the Hamdam that he published the news of the case instituted by the Editor under the caption 'Case by the King of Liars,' that the Real Avenger avenged this in this manner that in spite of the fact that the Editor and the Printer of the Haqiqat tendered humble apologies to the Court, the Chief Court held the offence to be so heinous that it inflicted very hard sentences against the Editor and the Printer of the Haqiqat. Similarly the letter published in the Hamdam, dated November 1, 1940, is to the effect that every one who attacks Hamdam becomes victim to divine punishment. A reference to the sentence pronounced by the Chief Court on the Haqiqat is also made.

These publications of October 31, 1940, and November 1, 1940, were meant to impress on the public that those who oppose Hamdam are punished by God. They were with reference to the controversy between the Hamdam and the Haqiqat. The effect of these publications also could be to deter the witnesses from giving evidence on behalf of Haqiqat, therefore they amounted to contempt of Court though not of a serious nature. We think that the opposite party is guilty of contempt of Court in respect of the publications, dated October 30, 1940, October 31, 1940 and November 1, 1940 only, but he has withdrawn his complaint for defamation, and the contempt was not at all serious. He has tendered an unqualified apology in writing to the Court, and under the circumstances of the case we think we ought to accept it.

We hold that the opposite party is guilty of contempt of Court, but we accept the apology tendered by him. No order as to costs.

Criminal Revision No. 1599 of 1940

SAT PAL TARA CHAND—CONVICT —PETITIONER

versus

LAHORE MUNICIPALITY—RESPONDENT

Punjab Pure Food Act (VIII of 1929), s. 13 (1)
(a)—Conviction under—When can be had.

For a conviction under s. 13 (1) (a) Punjab Pure Food Act, it is essential to prove inter alia that the ghee was sold. Conviction cannot be based on the fact that the ghee was exposed for sale.

Cr. R. case reported by the Acting Sessions Judge, Lahore.

Facts.—The accused stated that he got the ghee from the arhitis and the sample was taken from his shop. His plea therefore was not of guilty. No evidence whatsoever was recorded by the Magistrate.

Report.—The proceedings are forwarded for revision on the following grounds: The conviction is not based on any evidence whatsoever. The Inspector, who took the sample, did not come into the witness-box. The certificate of the analyst does not have the impression of the two seals with which the sample was alleged to be sealed. The printed form of the certificate simply stated that the impression on the invoice was hereto attached, though not actually attached. It therefore cannot be said without evidence if the certificate related to the sample taken by the Inspector. In the absence of the impressions of the seal, it cannot be said if the samples were taken by the Inspector in accordance with s. 10, Punjab Pure Food Act, VIII of 1929. It is accordingly, recommended that the conviction and sentence be set aside and the fine, if paid, refunded.

Mr. Des Raj Sawhney, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Hamid Ullah Siddiqi, for the Respondent.

Order.—This order will dispose of two references by the learned Acting Sessions Judge of Lahore recommending that convictions under s. 13, Punjab Pure Food Act, VIII of 1929, be set aside and fines be refunded. The proceedings before the Magistrate were sketchy in the extreme. I take first the record of proceedings in serial No. 27, which is as follows:

Offence complained of: Offence proved: Plea of the accused and his examination, if any: Finding: Sentence:	13.—Pure Food Act; selling adulterated ghee with 10 per cent. foreign fat. 13.—Pure Food Act. States that they get the ghee from the arhtis and this sample was taken from his shop. Is guilty of selling adulterated ghee and deserves no leniency. Has another challan pending against him. Fined Rupees fifty."
---	--

The proceedings in the next case No. 28 are similar but the offence complained of is "selling ghee with 25 per cent. foreign fat and the finding is:

"It is only rarely that these ghee sellers are caught. They have reaped large profit at the expense of the poor suffering public and deserve no leniency. Fined Rs. 200."

The Acting Sessions Judge, after notice to the Crown but not to the Municipal Committee recommended that the convictions and fines be set aside. When the cases came up before me I found that notice was issued to the Crown which was not interested and not represented, but not to the Committee. I issued notice to the Committee and have heard their case. The Food Inspector at whose instance these prosecutions were launched, has given evidence before me. On December 24, 1939, he went to the shop and found a boy of 13 or 14 named Satya Pal, son of the owner, selling ghee. He inspected various tins of ghee, thought that two of them were bad or adulterated and took samples from those two tins. He complied with the law by taking and sealing three different samples of the ghee from each tin: one for the shop-keeper, one for the public analyst, and one for the Inspector, and calling in an independent witness to testify to the proceedings. The case was then challaned before Diwan Somer Nath, Magistrate of the first class, exercising summary powers. The Inspector did not appear. According to routine these cases are conducted by a "Court clerk." The proceedings bristle with irregularities. The record does not state what the conviction is more than s. 13, Pure Food Act. Mr. Hamid Ullah representing the Committee before me says that the conviction was under s. 13 (1) (a), which says:

"No person shall sell any adulterated food unless he has complied with such rules as may be prescribed in this behalf."

For a conviction under this sub-section, it is necessary to prove inter alia that the ghee was sold and from the Food Inspector's statement before me no sale is proved. It merely appears that the ghee was exposed for sale. I entirely fail to understand why there were two prosecutions and two convictions. The reasoning which permits these two convictions would have permitted 20 convictions if the same amount of ghee had been in 20 small canisters instead of two large ones. The petitioner before me is a schoolboy now 13 or 14 years of age and at the time a year younger. It is said that the owners leave agents or servants in possession of their shops and disappear at sight of the Inspector. But clearly it would have been more satisfactory to prosecute the boy's father the owner of the shop and the real offender. It is proved that ghee adulterated in one tin with ten per cent. of foreign fat, in another tin with 25 per cent. of foreign fat was exposed for sale so conviction does not offend against natural justice; but why should there be two convictions? Why was one fine so much heavier? Did the Magistrate realise that both samples were taken at the same time? Why was the Inspector not examined? The procedure of the Committee in prosecuting such cases and of the Magistrate in trying them are most unsatisfactory. The trial was a travesty. I set aside these convictions and the fines which have been paid are to be refunded.

D. Convictions set aside.

It is only when the Appellate Court requires, in other words finds it needful, that additional evidence can be admitted. The words "for any other substantial cause" must be read as ejusdem generis with the previous portion of cl. (c). namely "the Appellate Court requires." 132 Ind. Cas. 721 (1), relied on. [p. 163, col. 2.]

Where the non-production of the documents sought to be produced under O. XLI, r. 27 (1) (b) is due to the negligence of the appellant or his Counsel, it is neither desirable nor proper to allow the appellant to fill up the lacuna in the evidence produced in the Court below and to patch up the weak points of the case. [ibid.]

The decision in the previous suit does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit, when the Court which decided the previous suit was not competent to try the subsequent suit.

Wrong admissions made in ignorance of legal rights have no binding effect.

Section 116 of the Evi. Act confines the operation of the doctrine of estoppel against a tenant during the continuance of the tenancy. This section has no application where the term of the tenancy has already expired. [p. 164, col. 2.]

Judgment.—This is a second civil appeal by the defendant arising out of a suit for a declaration which has been decreed by both the Courts below.

The plaintiffs set up the following pedigree in support of their claim.

The name of Daya Ram did not find a place in the pedigree given in the plaint but the fact that Daya Ram was the father of Ram Din was proved by the evidence and is no longer disputed.

The plaintiffs' case as set out in the plaint was that Mst. Mithana was the absolute owner of a house situate in Muhalla Bazar Kali-ji, Lucknow. Mst. Mithana died sometime in 1919 leaving the plaintiffs and the defendant No. 2 as her heirs, the latter being the daughter's sons of the brother of her husband. The defendant No. 1 having filed a suit for ejectment and arrears of rent against defendant No. 2 on April 4, 1935, on the ground that the house in suit belongs to her there was a cloud on the plaintiffs title which rendered it necessary for them to bring the present suit for a declaration to the effect that they, along with defendant No. 2, are the absolute owners in possession of the property in suit and that the defendant No. 1 had no right whatsoever, in the same. Manna Lal, the brother of the plaintiffs, was impleaded as defendant No. 2 in the suit.

The defendant No. 1 set up a counter pedigree which may be set out below :

The defence of the defendant No. 1 Mst. Munna was that the house was owned by her sister, Mst. Rani, and upon her death she and Mst. Bhagana became the owners of the assets left by Mst. Rani, and as a result of certain arrangement the house in suit came into the possession of defendant No. 1 while another house owned by Mst. Rani fell to the share of Mst. Bhagana. The plaintiffs' title to the house was denied. It was pleaded that even if Mst. Mithana was held to be the owner in the house in suit and the plaintiffs be held to be Mithana's heirs, Mst. Rani had become the owner by adverse possession. It was also pleaded in the written statement that the defendant No. 2 as the elder brother and karta and manager of the Hindu joint family consisting of himself and the two plaintiffs was the first tenant of the house in suit on behalf of Mst. Rani, in whose favour he had executed a sarkhat, and that after her death he was the tenant of the defendant No. 1, and a suit for ejectment and arrears of rent filed by the defendant No. 1 against defendant No. 2 had been decreed.

In oral pleadings before the Court the defendant's Counsel denied that Chhiddo was the brother of Ram Din. On August 20, 1936 Counsel for the defendant stated that if the plaintiffs proved that Ram Din and Chhiddo were brothers the plaintiffs will be the nearest heirs of Mst. Mithana.

The defendant No. 2 admitted the claim.

The trial Court held that the house in suit had been purchased by Mst. Mithana and that she was the absolute owner thereof. It further found upon a consideration of the entire evidence that the plaintiffs had proved that Ram Din and Chhiddo were brothers and in this view of the matter they were the heirs of Mst. Mithana. The adverse possession pleaded by defendant No. 1 was negatived and the plea of estoppel was also overruled. As a result of the findings arrived at by the trial Court the suit was decreed.

The lower Appellate Court in appeal confirmed the decision of the trial Court. Hence the second appeal.

Learned Counsel on behalf of the appellant has frankly conceded that upon the materials on the record it is not open to his client to assail the finding of fact of the lower Appellate Court on the question of title. He has, however, filed an application before us (Civil Misc. Application No. 337 of 1939) under O. XLI, r. 27 of the Civil P. C. praying for admission of five documents mentioned in the application on the ground that documents Nos. 2 to 5 which relate to a certain litigation of 1885 were not after the exercise of due diligence within the knowledge of the applicant at the time when the decree was passed by the trial Court. These documents were sought to be filed before the lower Appellate Court on a similar application made to that Court more than a month after the admission of the appeal. Another application was filed on the same day for the amendment of the written statement by removing the name of Mullu from the pedigree and substituting the name of Daya Ram for the apparent object of bringing it into conformity with the fresh evidence. The lower Appellate Court rejected both the prayers on the ground that the appellant was represented by two senior Counsel in the trial Court, the case went on for more than a year and as many as 54 documents were filed in the case on behalf of the appellant. Two of the documents, Exs. A-49 and A-50, were the old documents and related to the year 1885. The lower Appellate Court was not satisfied that with the exercise of due diligence the evidence which the appellant wished to produce could not have been discovered during the trial and consequently rejected the application. One of the grounds of appeal relates to the rejection of the appellant's prayer for the admission of the aforesaid documents. As regards the document No. 1, which is a copy of an abadi khasra the trial Court, it is stated, declined permission to file the same presumably on the ground of delay.

We have heard learned Counsel in support of the prayer for the admission of the additional evidence and see no reason to dissent from the conclusion arrived at by the lower Appellate Court. Reference has been made on both sides to a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Parsotim Thakur v. Lal Mohar (L. R. 58 I. A., 254)(1) where it was held that under r. 27 (1) (c) of O. XLI of the Civil P. C. it is only when the appellate Court requires, in other words finds it needful that additional evidence can be admitted. The words "for any other substantial cause" must be read as ejusdem generis with the previous portion of cl. (c) namely, "the appellate Court requires". It seems to us quite clear that the finding of fact arrived at by the lower Appellate Court is supported by sufficient evidence of a satisfactory character and it is not necessary for this Court to require the production of any document within the meaning of r. 27 (1) (c) of O. XLI of the Civil P. C. We are further of opinion that the appellant has not complied with the conditions prescribed by sub-cl. (b) of r. 27 (1) added by this Court. This clause runs thus:—

"(b) the evidence sought to be adduced by a party to the appeal, which after exercise of due diligence, was not within his knowledge or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree or order under appeal was passed or made."

The lower Appellate Court has given adequate reasons for holding that the appellant had not satisfied the Court that the documents sought to be produced in appeal were not within the knowledge of the appellant or after the exercise of due diligence could not be produced by her in the trial Court. Whether the non-production of these documents is due to the negligence of the appellant or her Counsel, it is neither desirable nor proper to allow the appellant to fill up the lacuna in the evidence produced in the Court below and to patch up the weak points of the case. We accordingly reject the application.

The next point which was argued on behalf of the appellant relates to the question of estoppel. This plea is founded on the basis of two leases, Exs. A-36 and A-37, executed by defendant No. 2 in favour of Mst. Rani and a statement (Ex. A-32) made by defendant No. 2 in the ejectment case.

The Courts below have considered these pieces of evidence in conjunction with the other evidence in the case and have come to the conclusion that the admissions contained in these documents were not true and were mistaken. In view of the positive evidence, which has been accepted by both the Courts below on the question of the plaintiffs' pedigree, it is clear that the aforesaid admissions were wrong in point of fact and were evidently made in ignorance of legal rights. These admissions were rightly rejected by the Courts below as having no binding effect on the plaintiffs' interests. It has, however, been contended on the strength of Exs. A-36 and A-37 that under s. 116 of the Indian Evi. Act the execution of these leases by defendant No. 2 as manager and karta of the joint family consisting of himself and his brothers, the plaintiffs, estopped all of them from denying landlord's title. Strong reliance has been placed upon a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Kumar Krishna Prosad Lal Singh Deo v. Baraboni Coal Concern, Ltd., (A. I. R. 1937 P. C. 251) (2) where it has been held that the words "at the beginning of tenancy" in s. 116 of the Indian Evi. Act do not give a ground for a contention that when a person already in possession of land becomes tenant to another, there is no estoppel against his denying his lessor's title. "Tenant who has occupied but not entered" is a difficult notion to thrust in s. 116 of the Act. It is urged that the fact that the defendant No. 2 and his brothers, the plaintiffs, were already in possession of the house before the execution of these leases, did not take the case out of the purview of s. 116 of the Indian Evi. Act as interpreted by their Lordships in the above-mentioned case. We are, however, of opinion that the present case does not fall within the mischief of the rule enacted under s. 116 of the Indian Evi. Act. Exhibit A-36 in a sarkhat executed on March 5, 1932, by defendant No. 2 in favour of Mst. Rani for a period of six months. The lease, therefore, must be deemed to have expired on September 5, 1932. Exhibit A-37 is a sarkhat executed by defendant No. 2 on February 5, 1933, in favour of Mst. Rani for a period of one year. This period must also be deemed to have expired on February 5, 1934. The present suit was filed on September 3, 1935, long after the expiry of the terms of these leases. Section 116 of the Indian Evi. Act confines the operation of the doctrine of estoppel against a tenant during the continuance of the tenancy. As the term fixed by Exs. A-36 and A-37 expired before the filing of the present suit and as there is no evidence on the record as regards the continuance of the tenancy, we must hold that s. 116 of the Indian Evi. Act has no application to the present case.

As regards the question of adverse possession, we hold in agreement with the view taken by the Courts below that no such adverse possession is established. According to the plaintiffs, Mst. Mithana died about 17 years ago, while, according to the defendant No. 1, she died about 21 or 22 years ago (vide oral pleadings.) It is not disputed that the plaintiffs have all along been in possession during the said period and, beyond the fact that two sarkhats (Exs. A-36 and A-37) were executed by the defendant No. 1 in favour of Mst. Rani in the year 1932 and 1933, there is no evidence on the record that Mst. Rani ever came into possession of the property. As a matter of fact the plaintiffs are still in possession of the same property and they have filed the suit for a bare declaration which, according to the plaint allegations, was necessitated by reason of the ejectment suit against defendant No. 2. We, therefore, overrule the plea of adverse possession.

The plea of res judicata has been faintly pressed on behalf of the appellant. This plea is based upon the suit for ejectment filed by the defendant No. 1 against defendant No. 2 on April 4, 1935. The suit was decreed. This plea was not raised in the trial Court. We are, however, of opinion that there is no substance in this plea. The previous decision for ejectment was one by a Munsif while the present suit was decided by the Additional Civil Judge. It is clear therefore that the former Court was not competent to try the subsequent suit and consequently the present suit cannot be held to be barred by the principle of res judicata.

Lastly it has been argued that the plaintiffs, being the stridhan heirs of Mst. Mithana, must be held to have succeeded as tenants-in-common and the Courts below should not have decreed the suit for more than 2/3rds share in the house in dispute. This plea was not raised in the trial Court and the lower Appellate Court refused to entertain this plea on the ground that it was one involving a question of fact and could not be allowed to be raised in appeal. It is admitted that the plaintiffs were claiming as the stridhan heirs of Mst. Mithana, who was alleged in the plaint to be the absolute owner of the property in dispute. This claim was denied by the defendant No. 1. In these circumstances we are of opinion that the property descended upon the plaintiffs and defendant No. 2 in distinct shares; in other words they succeeded as tenants-in-common and not as joint tenants. Reliance was placed on behalf of the plaintiffs respondents on Raja Chelikani Venkayamma Garu v. Raja Chelikani Venkataramanayamma, (L. R. 29 I. A., 156) (3). In that case two brothers living as members of a joint family inherited some property from their maternal grandfather. On the death of one of them leaving a widow a dispute arose as to whether his share in the property passed to his widow by succession or to his brother by survivorship. It was held that the property inherited by the two brothers was joint property in their hands and the undivided interest of the deceased passed on his death by survivorship to his brother and not by succession to his widow.

In a later case in Muhammad Husain Khan v. Babu Kishva Nandan Sahai, (A. I. R. 1937 P. C. 233) (4) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that the word "ancestor" in its ordinary meaning includes an ascendant in the maternal, as well as the paternal, line; but the 'ancestral' estate, in which, under the Hindu Law, a son acquires jointly with his father an interest by birth, must be confined, as shown by the original text of the Mitakshara, to the property descending to the father from his male ancestor in the male line. Hence the estate which is inherited by father from his maternal grandfather cannot be held to be ancestral property in which his son has an interest jointly with him. It was argued before their Lordships on the authority of the decision in L. R. 29 I. A., 156 (3) that the property inherited by a daughter's son from his maternal grandfather is ancestral property. Their Lordships repelled the contention observing that the question formulated in the previous case was whether the property of the maternal grandfather descended, on the death of his daughter, to her two sons jointly with benefit of survivorship, or in common without benefit of survivorship and their Lordships decided that the estate was governed by the rule of survivorship, and the claim of the widow was, therefore, negatived. Their Lordships proceeded to explain that the question whether the property which a daughter's son inherits from his maternal grandfather is ancestral property in the technical sense that his son acquires there in by birth an interest jointly with him, was neither raised by the parties nor determined by the Board, and the phrase "ancestral property" was used in its ordinary meaning, namely, property which devolves upon a person from his ancestor, and not in the restricted sense of the Hindu Law which imports the idea of the acquisition of interest on birth by a son jointly with his father. That being the view enunciated by their Lordships of the Privy Council, it seems to us to follow clearly from the facts of the present case that the plaintiffs succeeded to the stridhan property left by Mst. Mithana along with defendant No. 2 as tenants-in-common and not as joint tenants. In this view of the matter the plaintiffs are not entitled to a decree for more than 2/3rds share in the house in dispute. There is an additional reason why the plaintiffs are not entitled to a larger decree. Defendant No. 1 has already obtained a decree for ejectment and arrears of rent against defendant No. 2 which has become final and binding between the parties thereto. That being so, our decision will lead to absurd legal results if we maintain the decree in respect of the entire property in favour of the plaintiffs.

The result, therefore, is that we allow the appeal in part, and in lieu of the decree passed by the lower Courts, decree the suit for 2/3rds share in the property in dispute, with proportionate costs in all the Courts.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT

Civil Revision Application No. 9 of 1940

December 6, 1940

ALLSOP AND BRAUND, JJ.

DULHIN JANAK NANDINI KUNWARI

—PLAINTIFF—APPLICANT

versus

KEDAR NARAIN SINGH—DEFENDANT—

OPPOSITE PARTY

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIX, rr. 2 (3) and 1, s. 24—O. XXXIX, r. 2 (3), applicability of, to injunction issued under r. 1—Injunction issued under r. 1—Proceedings for its enforcement, if transferable under s. 24—Proceedings to enforce injunction, whether proceedings for contempt—Transfer of suit—Transfer of all proceedings arising out of suit, is implied.

The provisions in sub-r. (3) of r. 2 of O. XXXIX, Civil P. C., must have been intended to apply to injunctions issued under that rule. Sub-rule (3) of r. 2 does not apply to injunctions issued under r. 1. Consequently the proceedings for enforcement of an injunction under r. 1 are transferable under the provisions of s. 24, Civil P. C., and the proper Court to enforce the injunction is the Court which at the time was seized of the suit in the course of which the injunction was issued.

[Case-law reviewed.]

It is doubtless convenient to speak of the proceedings to enforce the injunction as proceedings for contempt, but the terminology is not strictly accurate. There is doubtless an element of punishment in the provisions for the enforcement of an injunction, but the main object surely is to see that the order of the Court is carried into effect.

The transfer of a suit implies the transfer of all proceedings which arise out of the suit. Therefore, a Court which has passed an interim order which requires execution ceases to have jurisdiction in the matter of enforcing the order when the suit is transferred to another Court and consequently the power of enforcing the order lies in the Court to which the suit is transferred.

C. R. App. against the order of the Additional Civil Judge, Ballia, dated August 24, 1939.

Dr. K. N. Katju, Dr. K. N. Malaviya and Mr. M. N. Paul, for the Applicant.

Messrs. S. N. Verma, D. Sanyal, Shanker Sahai Verma and S. K. Verma, for the Opposite Party.

Allsop, J.—This is an application requesting this Court to set aside in revision an order passed by the learned Additional Civil Judge of Ballia on August 24, 1939. The applicant, Dulhin Janak Nandini Kunwari was the plaintiff in a suit in which she sought a declaration of her title to the Ausanganj Estate which was under the management of the Court of Wards at Ghazipur. In the course of this suit she made an application for the appointment of a Receiver upon the ground that the Court of Wards was about to deliver over the estate to the defendant, B. Kedar Narain Singh.

The Court fixed a date on which it proposed to dispose of the application and passed an order on March 25, 1939, restraining the defendant from taking possession of the estate in the meantime. It was alleged by Dulhin Janak Nandini Kunwari that B. Kedar Narain Singh disobeyed this order by making an application to the Court of Wards under s. 10, Court of Wards Act, to release the estate in his favour and she applied to the Court on April 15, 1939 to punish him for contempt. No final order had been passed on Dulhin Janak Nandini Kunwari's application when on August 4, 1939, this Court at the request of B. Kedar Narain Singh transferred the suit, from the Court of the Additional Civil Judge of Ballia to the Court of the Civil Judge of Benares. On August 24, 1939, Dulhin Janak Nandini Kunwari made another application to the Additional Civil Judge at Ballia in which she asserted that he still had jurisdiction, in spite of the order of transfer, to deal with the contempt of his injunction and prayed that he should pass orders on her previous application. The learned Additional Civil Judge passed an order in which he held that he had no jurisdiction and it is this order which we are now asked to set aside.

The learned Additional Civil Judge mentioned incidentally that the order of transfer passed by this Court contained observations which suggested that he no longer had jurisdiction. The order was passed by me and the reference is to a remark that the Court to which the suit was transferred would doubtless deal with the matter of contempt. I made that remark in reference to an argument that I should not transfer the suit because, if I did transfer it, B. Kedar Narain Singh would escape the consequences of his alleged disobedience of the injunction. I meant only to repel that argument on the ground that the transfer of the suit would not put an end to the proceedings for contempt. The question whether the transfer of the suit entailed the transfer of the contempt proceedings was not raised and I did not intend to decide it. The question is still open, although the learned Civil Judge acted quite properly in deferring to an apparent expression of opinion by this Court. It is argued on behalf of the applicant that it is only the Court which issued the injunction which can enforce it. Before dealing with this argument I should like to mention one point. It is doubtless convenient to speak of the proceedings to enforce the injunction as proceedings for contempt, but the terminology is not strictly accurate because the Court of the Additional Civil Judge was not a Court of record and had no power to punish anyone for contempt. He had power only to enforce his order in the manner prescribed by the rules made under the provisions of the Civil P. C.

The applicant's argument is based on sub-r. (3) of r. 2 of O. XXXIX. In my judgment the sub-rule is not applicable because the injunction must have been issued under r. 1 and not under r. 2 of the order. I have no doubt that the provisions in sub-r. (3) of r. 2 must have been intended to apply to injunctions issued under that rule. If they had been intended to apply to injunctions issued under r. 1, they would have been contained in a separate rule and not in a sub-rule. There is undoubtedly some authority for the applicant's contention that the provisions of sub-r. (3) of r. 2 apply to injunctions issued under r. 1, but the question has apparently never come before a Court in quite the same way as it has come before us. The first case to which we were referred is the case in Ram Prasad Singh v. Benares Bank Ltd. (1). The question at issue was whether the High Court could punish disobedience to its injunction. The learned Judges said that they had no doubt that the provisions of O. XXXIX, r. 2 (3) would apply to an injunction which was not issued under r. 2, but they also said that the Court in any case could punish under its wide powers as a Court of record and, therefore, the expression of opinion was not a definite ruling.

The next case is Adaikkala Thevan v. Imperial Bank, Madurai (2). The learned Judges there followed the ruling of this Court which I have just mentioned but gave no other reasons for their conclusion that the sub-rule did apply. In Muhammad Naziruddin v. Raja Ram (3), a Single Judge of the Patna High Court followed the two rulings which I have already mentioned rather than a ruling of a Single Judge of this Court in Balbhadar v. Balla (4), in which a contrary opinion was expressed. The learned Judge preferred to follow the authority of two benches rather than that of a Single Judge. Then in Krishnapur Mutt v. Vicar of Suratkal Church, 44 Ind. Cas. 56 (5), it was held that a Court could, under the provisions of O. XXXIX, r. 2, sub-r. (3), punish single acts of disobedience to an injunction, the ground being that there must be some method of enforcing an injunction. In Jang Bahadur Singh v. Chhabila Koiri (6), the opinion was again expressed that any injunction could be enforced under the provisions of O. XXXIX, r. 2 sub-r. (3). The argument was that r. 1 and r. 2 reproduced ss. 492 and 493 of the previous Civil P. C., and under that Code injunctions issued under s. 492 could be enforced under the provisions of s. 493. It is to be noted, however, that in s. 493 it was expressly stated that punishment could be inflicted for breaches of injunctions under a s. 493 and under s. 492, whereas in the present sub-r. (3) of r. 2 there is no reference at all to r. 1. Finally in Salam Chand Kanayram v. Joogul Kishore Ramdeo (7), there was a dictum that all interim injunctions could be enforced under O. XXXIX, r. 2, sub-r. (3).

It will be noticed that in these cases the question raised was either of no importance because the powers to be exercised were those of a Court of record, or the Courts in deciding the question merely purported to rely on authority, or the Courts were influenced by the impression which they had that there was no other means of enforcing an injunction. In Jang Bahadur Singh v. Chhabila Koiri (6), it was definitely pointed out that the interpretation which the Court was putting on sub-r. (3) of r. 2 was not the natural one. In Bellary Press Co. Ltd. v. Venkata Rao, 8 Ind. Cas. 7 (8), it was held that proceedings under O. XXXIX, r. 2, sub-r. (3) could not be transferred from one Court to another because it was only the Court which issued the injunction which could punish a breach of it under that sub-rule, but it was suggested that the Court to which the suit in the course of which the injunction had been issued had been transferred might be able to enforce the injunction under the provisions of s. 36 and O. XXI, r. 92, Civil P. C.

It has been argued before us that there is no reason to strain the meaning of

O. XXXIX, r. 2, sub-r. (3), if it is possible to enforce an injunction issued under r. 1 under the provisions of s. 36 and O. XXI, r. 32. Section 36 lays down that the provisions of the Code relating to the execution of decrees shall, so far as they are applicable, be deemed to apply to the execution of orders. Under O. XXI, r. 32, injunctions contained in decrees can be enforced in certain ways and it seems to me that it is obvious that injunctions contained in orders can be enforced in the same way. I think therefore that there is considerable force in the argument placed before us that the enforcement of injunctions issued under O. XXXIX, r. 1 should be under the provisions of s. 36 and O. XXI, r. 32, Civil P. C. If that is so, the provisions of sub-r. (3) of r. 2 of O. XXXIX, would not apply and there would be no reason for holding that proceedings for the enforcement of the injunction should not be transferable to the Court which at the time was seized of the suit in the course of which the injunction was issued.

In my judgment it is in every way preferable that the enforcement of an injunction issued in the course of a suit should be in the hands of the Court which at the time is seized of the suit. After the transfer of the suit any new injunction could only be issued by the Court which was dealing with the suit and it is inadvisable that there should be two Courts which might deal with matters which are in effect identical. There is doubtless an element of punishment in the provisions for the enforcement of an injunction, but the main object surely is to see that the order of the Court is carried into effect. A Court may issue an injunction under O. XXXIX, r. 1 and then, after the suit is transferred, the Court to which it is transferred may have before it other applications of a like nature and a question may arise whether the injunction already issued should be withdrawn. The Court dealing with the suit would be the proper Court to decide whether the injunction should or should not be withdrawn. Both as a matter of principle and as a matter of the proper interpretation of the provisions of O. XXXIX, r. 2, sub-r. (3), I think that that sub-rule should not apply to injunctions issued under r. 1. I hold therefore that the proceedings for the enforcement of an injunction under r. 1 are transferable under the provisions of s. 24, Civil P. C.

The question then arises whether the proceedings arising out of a suit are transferred when the suit is transferred. In my judgment the transfer of a suit implies the transfer of all proceedings which arise out of the suit. Under the provisions of s. 37, the execution of a decree where the Court which passed the decree has ceased to have jurisdiction is vested in the Court which would have power to entertain the suit at the time when the application for the execution of the decree is presented. On the analogy of this rule it seems to me that a Court which has passed an interim order which requires execution ceases to have jurisdiction in the matter of enforcing the order when it ceases to have jurisdiction to deal with the suit and consequently that the power enforcing the order lies in the Court which would deal with the interim proceeding if it began at that time. I hold therefore that the proper Court to enforce the execution of the interim injunction with which we are concerned is the Court in which the suit is now pending and I would therefore dismiss this application in revision with costs.

Braund, J.—I agree.

By the Court.—This application is dismissed with costs.

Second Civil Appeal No. 388 of 1937

BENNETT AND GHULAM HASAN, JJ.
FIRM HET RAM PADAM CHAND —DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

FIRM SUBHAG CHAND RIKHAB DAS AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS AND OTHERS
—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS

Partnership Act (IX of 1932), ss. 59, 68—Registration of firm—Presumption arising from—Certificate of registration—Evidentiary value of—Proof of signature of member of firm on application for registration, if necessary—U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act (XXVII of 1934), s. 7—Applicability—Suit to recover unsecured debt—One of debtors non-agriculturist—S. 7 does not apply—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 19—Signature—Giving name of firm only, in statement of accounts—Whether amounts to signature.

The registration of a firm under s. 59, Partnership Act, raises a presumption that the parties shown as members of the firm and registered as such are actually members of it. The presumption is, however, rebuttable, and it is for the party denying the membership to rebut it. A certificate of registration is sufficient proof, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that a person is the partner of the firm and it is not necessary to prove that the application for registration bore his signature. [p. 170, cols. 1 & 2.]

The provisions of s. 7, U. P. Agri. Relief Act have no application in a suit for recovering an unsecured loan. Where one of the debtors is a non-agriculturist, the onus lies upon the party claiming the benefit of this section; to prove that all the debtors are agriculturists. [p. 171, col. 1.]

It is customary in business circles in India to give the name of the firm only in statements of accounts, and this amounts to signature for the purpose of s. 19, Lim. Act. [p. 171, col. 2.]

S. C. A. against the order of the District Judge, Lucknow, dated July 7, 1937.

Mr. M. K. Seth, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. D. Chandra, for Respondents Nos. Nos. 1 to 3.

Judgment.—This is a second civil appeal from the judgment, and decree dated July 7, 1937, of the learned District Judge of Lucknow, reversing in first appeal the judgment and decree dated November 3, 1936, of the learned Civil Judge of Mohanlalganj Lucknow.

The suit out of which the appeal arises was brought by the sons of Rikhab Das proprietors of the firm Subhag Chand Rikhab Das, against the firm Het Ram Padam Chand represented by Mst. Phool Kuar, widow of Het Ram, Keshari Chand son of Padam Chand, and Mst. Inder Kuar widow of Padam Chand, to recover a sum of Rs. 3,532-10 principal and interest on the basis of a bahikhata account.

The plaintiffs' case was that on February 5, 1931, one of the partners of this firm, namely, Padam Chand, borrowed Rs. 2,500 with interest at the rate of ten annas per cent. per mensem, agreeing to pay back the amount due to the plaintiffs at Lucknow. The plaintiffs are proprietors of the firm Subhag Chand Rikhab Das of Lucknow. The defendant firm were commission agents and grain merchants of Agra.

It was said in the plaint that an accounting had taken place on October 28, 1932, when a sum of Rs. 2,841-8 was found due from the defendants. This suit was alleged to be within limitation by reason of an acknowledgment made by Padam Chand on this date.

Rikhab Das proprietor of the plaintiff firm, died on March 13, 1934, Het Ram died in April, 1934, and Padam Chand in December, 1934. The suit was instituted on October 1, 1935.

Mst. Phool Kuar repudiated liability. She contended first of all that as she and her husband were agriculturists the suit should have been filed in the Agra Courts under s. 7 of the Agri. Relief Act. Secondly she denied that Padam Chand was a partner of her husband Het Ram. She alleged that her husband had been on very friendly terms with Padam Chand's grandmother, and that being on this account well disposed towards Padam Chand himself he had allowed his shop to bear Padam Chand's name, although Padam Chand had no proprietary interest in it.

It was further alleged by Mst. Phool Kuar that Padam Chand got possession of the papers of the business and murdered Het Ram. Padam Chand and his father Piarey Lal were prosecuted for the murder.

Padam Chand died during the pendency of the case while his father Piarey Lal was convicted.

Mst. Phool Kuar also denied that her husband had any necessity to take any loan from Rikhab Das and alleged that any acknowledgment between Padam Chand and Rikhab Das was fictitious and collusive. Rikhab Das, it should be mentioned, was the father-in-law of Padam Chand.

The suit was not contested, by the other defendants.

The trial Court thought that the allegations of Mst. Phool Kuar were well-founded. It held that no loan was taken from the plaintiffs by the firm as Padam Chand was not a partner; that it was not established that the firm was in existence at the time of the alleged acknowledgment by Padam Chand and therefore the suit was not within limitation; and that Het Ram and his widow were proved by certain khewats to be agriculturists. At the same time it held that the suit was rightly brought in the Lucknow Court if Padam Chand was held to be a partner of the firm as the contract for borrowing the money was entered into at Lucknow.

In first appeal the District Judge of Lucknow did not agree with the Civil Judge about the non-existence of any partnership. He was of opinion that the certified copy of the registration of the firm was strong evidence of its existence. He also found that there was other evidence to show that the business was carried on both by Het Ram and by Padam Chand. He accepted the acknowledgment made by Padam Chand as an acknowledgment made by him on behalf of the firm. He did not think that the suit was barred by s. 7 of the Agri. Relief Act because there had been no allegation that Padam Chand was an agriculturist, and if Padam Chand, not being an agriculturist, had joined with Het Ram in the loan, neither Het Ram nor his widow would be entitled to the benefits of the Act.

The learned District Judge accordingly allowed the appeal against the decree of the Civil Judge who had found that only the widow and the son of Padam Chand were liable. He passed a decree against the first defendant Mst. Phool Kuar also.

The learned Counsel for the appellants has first of all referred to the allegation that Padam Chand had murdered Het Ram and that there had been illicit connection between Het Ram and the grandmother of Padam Chand. There being no express finding on either point, we do not think that they affect the case. As the District Judge has observed, if on account of this alleged illicit connection Het Ram was well disposed towards Padam Chand, it is just as likely that he would have actually made him his partner as that he would have allowed him to hold himself out as his partner. Learned Counsel also referred to a finding in a previous case that no partnership existed between Het Ram and Padam Chand, but it is conceded that this finding is not conclusive for the purpose of the present case.

It was strongly argued that the certificate of registration is of no evidentiary value because it is not proved that the application for registration bore Het Ram's signature. But we see no reason to reject the view taken by the District Judge on this point that the registration of a firm raises a presumption that the parties shown as members of the firm and registered as such are actually members of it. The presumption is no doubt rebuttable, but the appellants made no attempt to rebut it. If in fact Padam Chand was not Het Ram's partner, there might have been some indication of this in Het Ram's private accounts, but those accounts were not produced.

Section 58 of the Indian Partnership Act provides that for the registration of a firm an application must be made to the Registrar in a certain form giving certain particulars, and the statement must be signed by all the partners, or their agents specially authorised in this behalf. Each person signing the statement must verify it in the manner prescribed.

Section 59 provides that when the Registrar is satisfied that the provisions of s. 58 have been duly complied with, he shall record an entry of the statement in a register called the Register of Firms, and shall file the statement.

Section 68 provides that a certified copy of an entry relating to a firm in the Register of Firms may be produced in proof of the fact of the registration of such firm and of the contents of any statement intimation or notice recorded or noted therein.

We have given full consideration to the argument advanced by the learned Counsel for the appellants that nevertheless it was necessary for the respondents to prove that the application for registration bore Het Ram's signature, but we are unable to accept it. In our opinion, no further proof was necessary in the absence of any evidence to the contrary.

It was also argued for the appellants that the respondents should have indicated in the pleadings that Het Ram's widow was not entitled to the benefit of s. 7 of the Agri. Relief Act because Padam Chand was not an agriculturist. They would, then, it was submitted, have adduced evidence to prove that he was. All that the respondents did was to say that defendant No. 1 (Mst. Phool Kuar) was not an agriculturist, and that even if she was, the suit was not affected thereby. They did not indicate how it was not affected if she was an agriculturist. The answer to this argument is that the appellants could have obtained clarification of this plea from the respondents, if they considered it necessary, and that in any case it was for them to establish that both the defendants were agriculturists, if the plaintiffs did not admit that s. 7 was applicable.

We have considered the provisions of s. 7 of the Agri. Relief Act. It is provided therein that every suit for recovering an unsecured loan in which the defendant, or where there are several defendants, any of the defendants, is an agriculturist, shall be instituted and tried in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the agriculturist defendant or any of the agriculturist defendants where there are more than one such defendants, actually and voluntarily resides. It might be thought, in view of this provision, that it would be sufficient to attract the operation of this section for one of several defendants to be an agriculturist. But it is provided in the third proviso of the definition of "agriculturist" in cl. (2) of s. 2 of the Act that if a non-agriculturist joins with an agriculturist in any transaction of loan (save for the purpose of adding his name as security) the agriculturist shall not be considered as such for the purpose of that transaction. Consequently it cannot be held that in the present case any of the defendants is an agriculturist for the purpose of s. 7 assuming that Padam Chand was not an agriculturist. There is no inconsistency be tween the proviso referred to and the provisions of s. 7, because it is possible for one of the defendants in a suit for recovering an unsecured loan to be an agriculturist and for other defendants to be non-agriculturists if the latter had not joined with the former as principals in the loan transaction.

We are clearly of opinion that the onus lay on the appellants to prove that both Het Ram and Padam Chand were agriculturists, and that as they failed to do this, the appellants are not now entitled to a finding that the suit should have been brought in the Agra and not in the Lucknow Court.

We come now to a legal point which does not appear to have been put forward in the lower Courts, or indeed in this Court in the grounds of appeal. We have mentioned that according to the plaint limitation was saved by an acknowledgment made by Padam Chand on October 28, 1932. This acknowledgment was made in a letter Ex. 2. This was denied by the appellants, but there was evidence to prove that this acknowledgment together with another acknowledgment, Ex. 1, and certain letters, Exs. 14 and 15, had been written by Padam Chand and it was held on this evidence that the acknowledgment in Ex. 2 had been proved.

It is not disputed in this Court that Ex. 2 was written by Padam Chand, but it is argued that the acknowledgment is ineffective for the purpose of s. 19 of the Lim. Act because it is not signed by Padam Chand.

The material portions of Ex. 2 as translated read as follows:—

"Compliments of Het Ram Padam Chand of Agra to Shahji Sahab Sobhag Chand Ji Rikhab Das of Lucknow. We have copied out your account and are sending it to you. Please check it and enter it in debit and credit account.

Payable to you Miti Katik Badi 6, 1988 Sambat.....2,640-9.

Interest at the rate of 10 annas. upto Katik Badi 14, 1989 Sambat.....200-15.

Payable to you upto Katik Badi 14, 1989 Sambat.....2,841-8."

The introductory words are repeated at the foot of the acknowledgment.

Learned Counsel for the appellants referred to certain authorities as showing that an acknowledgment is ineffective if not signed.

In Ramasami v. Muttusami (I. L. R. 15 Madras 380) (1) where an acknowledgment had been made in a will it was held that the acknowledgment was ineffective for the purpose of s. 19 of the Lim. Act, because the will, although in the testator's handwriting, was not signed.

In Jaggi Lal v. Sri Ram (I. L. R. 34 All. 464) (2) certain acknowledgments in an account book were relied upon and it was said that they did not operate as an acknowledgment within the meaning of s. 19 of the Lim. Act because the plaintiffs had failed to show that the accounts bore the signature of the defendants or their authorised agent. It does not appear whether it was proved in this case that the accounts were in the handwriting of the defendants or their authorised agent.

(1) 15 M 380; 2 M L J 42.

(2) 34 A 464; 16 Ind. Cas. 146; 10 A L J 1.

In another Madras case, P. L. A. Palaniappa Chettiar v. V. L. A. R. Veerappa Chettiar (I. L. R. 41 Madras 446) (3), it was also held that the entries in the debtor's accounts could not be treated as an acknowledgment under s. 19 as they were not signed by the debtors.

Against this it is contended that it is customary in business circles in India to give the name of the firm only in such statements of accounts, and that this has been held by most of the High Courts to amount to signature for the purpose of s. 19.

In Uma Shankar v. Gobind Narayan (22 A. L. J. R. 807) (4) a Bench of the Allahabad High Court held that the name of a firm in the heading of a business letter is a good signature in law. Reference was made in this case to a previous decision of the Allahabad High Court, Mathura Das v. Babu Lal (I. L. R. 1 All. 683) (5) and to a decision of the Calcutta High Court Mohesh Lal v. Busint Kumaree (I. L. R. 6 Cal. 340) (6).

The Bombay High Court in Ganga Dhar Rao Venkatesh v. Shidrampa Balapa Desai (I. L. R. 18 Bombay 586) (7) expressed a similar view where certain letters admitting a debt were written by the authority of the debtor, it being proved that this was the usual mode of signing and authenticating letters among the class to which the defendants belonged.

In another Madras case, Muthiah Chettiar v. Kuttayan Chetty, (43 I. C. 20) (8), it was said that it is the custom and practice among Nattukottai Chetties not to sign their names at the foot of their letters but to begin them by saying that the letters are from such and such firm and that the name so written at the top is a sufficient 'signature' within the meaning of s. 19 of the Lim. Act.

In Sadasook Agarwalla v. Baikanta Nath (3) 41 M 446; 44 Ind. Cas. 466; 34 M L J 41; A I R 1918 Mad. 238.

Baunia, (I. L. R. 31 Cal., 1043) (9) money. was lent on a hatchitta which bore at the head of it the name and signature of the debtor. Under an entry of a certain date on the debit side written by the debtor himself and stating that a certain amount was due as interest on the principal sum, occurred the words likhitan khoob or "writer self" also written by the debtor himself. It was held that this amounted to the signing of an acknowledgment within the meaning of s. 19 of the Lim. Act.

Again in Jekisan Bapuji v. Bhowar Bhoga Jetha, (I. L. R. 5 Bom. 89) (10), it was held that an account was sufficiently signed where it was written by a debtor himself with his name at the top of the entry.

Lastly the Rangoon High Court held in P. R. M. P. Vellayappa Chettyar v. P. M. P. Somasundaram Chettyar, (A. I. R. 1935 Rangoon, 160) (11), that where an acknowledgment is written by a duly authorised agent it is sufficient for the purpose of s. 19 if he affixes thereto the name of his principal in any position, even by impressing it with a rubber stamp.

It will, therefore appear that there is good authority for the view, which has been pressed upon us by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs that the acknowledgment Ex. 2 written by Padam Chand, a partner in the firm Het Ram Padam Chand, constituted a valid acknowledgment for the purposes of s. 19, though it was not signed by him and we accept it as such.

There was some suggestion that even though there might have previously been a partnership between Het Ram and Padam Chand, that partnership had ceased to exist before the acknowledgment in question. The acknowledgment was made, however, some time before the registration of the firm of Het Ram Padam Chand on September 30, 1933 and in our opinion for the reasons which we have given it is proved that the partnership was in existence on that date.

Finally the learned Counsel for the appellants pointed out that the respondents asked in the plaint that a decree might be passed against the defendant firm, while no such decree has been passed either by the trial Court or by the lower Appellate Court. The trial Court passed a personal decree against Padam Chand's widow and son, while the lower Appellate Court added Mst.

Phool Kuar as a judgment-debtor in the same terms.

Learned Counsel for the respondents concedes that they are entitled to proceed against the three defendants to the extent only of the assets of the firm and that the decree should, therefore, be against them only to this extent and not against them personally.

We direct accordingly that the decree awarded against the three defendants be amended so as to operate against them in respect of the assets of the firm and not against them personally. In other respects the appeal is dismissed. We allow the respondents their costs in this appeal.

S. Order accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 100—Finding of fact based on untenable view of law is not binding in second appeal—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885 as amended by Act IV of 1928)—Ss. 146-A, 170, 171, 174—All persons on rent roll not made parties—Decree obtained, if rent decree—Purchaser of non-transferable holding, whether has interest in holding—Whether can make deposit under s. 170—Whether entitled to statutory lien on property saved by his deposit.

The finding of fact based on a view of law which is manifestly untenable is not binding on second appeal.

Where the landlord has not joined as defendants in his suit all the persons whose names were borne in his rent-roll as tenants, the fundamental condition for invoking the principle of representation under s. 146-A, Ben. Ten. Act (as amended in 1928), is lacking, and the decree obtained would not be a rent decree. 19 Ind. Cas. 989 (1), distinguished. 90 Ind. Cas. 211 (2), referred to.

A purchaser of a non-transferable occupancy holding either in whole or in part, acquires an interest in the holding which is operative against the raiyat and against the rest of the world except only the non-assenting landlord. On the sale of the holding in execution of a rent decree, the interest of such a person would be extinguished. The purchaser comes within the category of persons whose interests are affected by the sale within the meaning of s. 170 or s. 171 as well as of s. 174, and is competent to make a deposit under s. 170 and can claim a statutory lien over the property which he saves by the payment, so that he can recover from the property itself, if not from the tenant personally for whose benefit he professes to act. 27 Ind. A. from appellate decree of the Additional District Judge, 24-Parganas, dated July 30, 1938.

Mr. Abinash Chandra Ghose, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Bhupendra Nath Das Gupta and Nalin Chandra Banerjee, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiffs in this suit in effect claim a statutory lien on an occupancy holding by virtue of a payment made under s. 171, Ben. Ten. Act, to prevent a sale of that holding under Chap. XIV of that Act. The suit was dismissed by the trial Court, but on appeal the learned Additional District Judge of 24-Parganas has given the plaintiffs a decree virtually declaring their lien. The facts which it is necessary to state for the disposal of the appeal may be briefly set out: The holding is said to have been a non-transferable occupancy holding, and admittedly it was held at one time by one Ramanath Mandal. Ramanath died, leaving three sons and heirs, Kshetra, Haran and Paran. Paran died unmarried leaving his surviving brothers as his only heirs and legal representatives. After Ramanath's death therefore the holding came in course of time to be represented by Kshetra and Haran. It is said that in the year 1902 while Paran was still living, Kshetra, purporting to act for himself and as guardian of his two minor brothers, sold away half of the holding to one Nabin. The landlord, however, refused to recognize this transfer. The present plaintiffs are heirs of Nabin, and they have been treated in these proceedings as unrecognized transferees of a portion of the holding.

In 1930 the landlord instituted a suit for arrears of rent of this holding for the years 1333 to 1336 B. S., and in due course obtained an ex parte decree. The decree was afterwards sought to be put into execution under Chap. XIV, Ben. Ten. Act, whereupon the present plaintiffs, claiming to be persons whose interests were likely to be affected by the sale, deposited the decretal amount with costs in Court under s. 170. By virtue of such deposit they claim to have acquired a statutory lien over the holding, and also to be entitled to possession of it. It is said that they did obtain actual possession as such mortgagees, and in that capacity sued the tenants on the lands, defendants Nos. 4 to 6 for rent. The original tenants, the heirs of Ramanath being present defendants Nos. 1 to 3 also brought a suit for rent against the same tenants and obtained a decree. This led the plaintiffs to institute the present suit, whereby they asked for a declaration that the decree obtained by defendants No. 1 to 3 against defendants No. 4 to 6 was fraudulent and collusive, and that in any case, it did not affect their interest as the holders of the statutory lien over the tenancy. The plaintiffs also asked for an injunction to restrain defendants Nos. 1 to 3 from executing their decree, and further prayed for a refund of a certain sum of money which they are said to have already recovered from the tenants under the decree. The lower Appellate Court, while granting the plaintiffs' prayer for declaration, has refused the injunction and the refund.

This decree is resisted by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 on the ground that s. 171, Ben. Ten. Act, has no application to this case. This position is sought to be supported on a two-fold basis. It is first contended that there was no rent decree at all which could be executed under Chap. XIV of the Act, and to avert which deposit could be made under s. 171. Secondly, it is urged that in any event, the plaintiffs being in the position of co-sharer tenants, though not recognized by the landlord, were not entitled to make a deposit under s. 170, or to claim the benefit of s. 171 by virtue of such deposit. Either of these grounds, if made out against the plaintiffs, would be enough to dispose of their claim.

Having heard the learned Advocates on both sides, I have come to the conclusion that the decree which the landlord obtained for rent of the holding was not a rent decree at all, and that it would not therefore attract the operation of any of the sections of Chap. XIV. The decree is Ex. A in the case, and on the face of it, it purports to be directed against "Ramchandra and Nabin Chandra Naskar, sarbarahakar Sree Kshetra Mandal". The learned Advocate for the respondents contends that it was a decree against Kshetra Mandal alone, and that the names of Ramchandra and Nabin Chandra Naskar were a mere description of the holding in respect of which Kshetra Mandal was said to be sarbarahakar. The learned Additional District Judge says that there is no evidence to show who these persons Ramchandra and Nabin Chandra Naskar are, or whether they are the names of living or dead persons, nor is there anything to show whether Ramchandra is a mistake for the name of the original tenant Ramanath, as the learned Munsif seems to think, or whether Nabin Chandra Naskar is the person whose heirs the present plaintiffs claim to be. There is, again, no evidence to show when or how this tenancy, which admittedly belonged at one time to Ramanath, came to be held by Ramchandra and Nabin Chandra Naskar, as the learned Advocate for the appellants would have it. The materials on the record are in fact wholly insufficient to enable the Court to come to any definite conclusion as to whether the decree was at all obtained against Kshetra Mandal as a tenant, much less as the sole tenant.

Leaving aside speculation, and going upon the facts which have been found or are admitted, it seems, however, to be established beyond doubt that after the death of Ramanath, the original tenant, this Jama devolved on his sons, and that after the death of one of these sons, it came to be held by the two surviving sons, Kshetra and Haran. There can be no question that Haran did not lose his interest in this holding in the year 1930 when the landlord brought his rent suit. Haran was in fact joined as a defendant in a rent suit for a subsequent period. It follows therefore that at the date of the decree, Ex. A, Haran, at all events, was a person who was interested as a tenant in the holding, the other person so interested being his brother Kshetra. Now, on the face of it, the decree, if we are to accept the interpretation which is put upon it by the learned Advocate for the respondent, is not against Kshetra as a tenant but against him only as a sarbarahakar. Even if this description is supposed to be wide enough to implead him in his capacity as a tenant, the fact still remains that Haran is not made a party to the suit. It is urged that although Haran was a person interested, he might not still have been joined as a defendant inasmuch as Kshetra alone was capable of representing, and did actually represent, the entire holding. This is nothing more than a mere assumption, and does not cease to be such because of the dakhilas in which Kshetra is described as sarbarahakar. This much is clear, that at the date the landlord brought the suit for rent in 1930, it could not be said that the landlord was unaware of the fact that there were other heirs of the original tenant still alive who were therefore entitled to be made defendants in the suit, if the decree to be passed was to have the effect of a rent decree under Chap. XIV, Ben. Ten. Act.

Much reliance was placed on behalf of the respondents on a so-called finding of the learned Judge in the Court below to the effect that the tenancy was fully represented in the suit against Kshetra. It is however not possible to accept this as a proper or legal finding of fact which is binding on me in second appeal. For one thing, it purports to be based on a view expressed by the learned Judge which is manifestly untenable. This is what he says:

"It does not appear that anyone else (besides Kshetra) was recognized as tenant when the rent suit in question was instituted. Nor does it appear that the landlord was bound to recognize anyone else as a tenant at that stage."

This wholly ignores the existence of Haran as a co-heir with Kshetra, and, in my opinion, it is quite enough to vitiate the finding on which the learned Advocate relies. Reference was made by him to a decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Chamatkarini Dasi v. Triguna Nath Sardar (1) in support of the view that it is open to a landlord to implead only one of a number of tenants in a rent suit without losing his rights under Chap. XIV, when that tenant is put forward by the rest as their representative. It is enough for me to point out that the proposition laid down in this case rests on a foundation which no longer exists by virtue of later amendments of the Act, and particularly the enactment of s. 146-A. Apart from this, it is worthy of note that this is contrary to the spirit, if not the letter, of the decision of the Full Bench in Jagan Mohan v. Brojendra Kumar (2). In the present case, it is not shown that the landlord had actually joined as defendants in his suit all the persons whose names were borne in his rent-roll as tenants. The fundamental condition for invoking the principle of representation under s. 146-A was thus lacking. And in that view, the learned Judge, in my opinion, was wholly wrong in proceeding on the basis that the entire body of co-sharer tenants had been represented by Kshetra. The first ground urged by the appellants must, therefore, succeed, and as I have said, this is sufficient to dispose of the suit.

As the other point has, however, been argued by the learned Advocate for the appellants, I might just as well indicate my opinion, although it is not necessary for the purposes of my decision to express any final conclusion. I do not accept his view that the plaintiff, assuming that the sale of the holding was a sale under

(1) 17 C W N 833; 19 Ind. Cas. 989.

(2) 53 O 197; 90 Ind. Cas. 211; A I R 1925 Cal. 1056; 42 C L J 232; 29 C W N 1000 (F B).

Chap. XIV of the Act were not competent to make a deposit under s. 170 or claim the rights of statutory mortgagees under s. 171. I see no reason why, treating them as unrecognized transferees of a non-transferable holding, the transfer having taken place at a time when such holdings had not been made transferable by statute, they should not be held to come within the words "persons whose interests are affected by the sale." The Full Bench case in Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan (3) and the Special Bench case in Chandra Binode v. Ala Bux (4) leave no doubt that a purchaser of a non-transferable occupancy holding, either in whole or in part, does acquire an interest in the holding which is operative against the raiyyat and against the rest of the world except only the non-assenting landlord. It is also clear that on the sale of the holding in execution of a rent decree, the interest of such a person would be extinguished. That being so, it is difficult to see why the plaintiffs cannot be said to come within the category of persons whose interests are affected by the sale within the meaning of s. 170 or s. 171 as well as of s. 174, in which the same words are used. I may refer in this connexion to the decision of Mitter, J., in case reported in Dayaluddin Sirkar v. Azimuddin Mondal (5) where the same view has been held regarding the use of this expression in s. 174. Mr. Ghose on behalf of the appellants argued that the remedy of persons in the position of the plaintiffs really lay in a suit for contribution. Whether or not they can claim contribution is a somewhat debatable point which it is not necessary for me to discuss here but it is neither inequitable nor inconvenient to give such persons a statutory lien over the property which they save by their payment, so that they can recover from the property itself, if not from the tenant personally for whose benefit they profess to act. You may not thrust a benefit on an unwilling party, but you may fairly hold the property itself liable to the extent to which you have contributed to save it. However, I must resist the temptation of being enticed into a discussion of this interesting topic, which might possibly be reserved for a more suitable occasion.

The result is that this appeal succeeds on the first ground I have indicated, and the Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 151, 54, O. XX, r. 18—Partition suit—Decree for possession of plaintiff's share—Application of plaintiff under s. 151 for proclamation in villages that plaintiff obtained certain share in them, allowed—Legality of procedure.

In a suit for partition of an estate a preliminary decree for possession of one-fifth share of the estate was passed in favour of the plaintiff. The Court allowed an application of the plaintiff under s. 151, Civil P. C., that it might be proclaimed in villages in which he had been given a share that he had obtained a decree for a fifth share in those villages.

Held, that the decree was not drawn up in proper form according to O. XX, r. 18 and the Court had no jurisdiction to pass such an order under s. 151 as the remedy was provided by the Code under s. 54 and O. XX, r. 18.

C. R. App. of the order of the Civil Judge, Sitapur, dated February 3, 1939.

Mr. S. N. Srivastava, for the Applicant.

Mr. Beni Madho Mehrotra, for Opposite Party No. 1.

Order.—This application under ss. 115 and 151 of the Civil P. C. arises from an order passed by the learned Civil Judge of Sitapur on February 3, 1939, on an application by one Kedar Nath who had obtained a preliminary decree for partition.

Kedar Nath was the son of one Debi Dayal. Debi Dayal had five brothers, one of whom died without issue. Kedar Nath sued after the death of his father Debi Dayal for partition of his share of the joint family property, this share amounting to one-fifth. A preliminary decree for a one-fifth share was passed by the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur on November 30, 1935, and this decree was upheld by a Bench of this Court in appeal on February 22, 1938.

No further action was taken by Kedar Nath on the preliminary decree apart from an application made by him under s. 151 of the Civil P. C. This was an application that proclamation might be made at his expense in the two villages in which he had been given a share. He asked that it might be proclaimed in these villages that he had obtained a decree for a fifth share in those villages. This application was allowed by the learned Civil Judge.

It is contended in the present application in revision that the order of the Civil Judge was not warranted by any provision of law and that s. 151 of the Civil P. C. should not have been invoked. The decree passed was of a declaratory nature and therefore, it is submitted, the issue of a proclamation which is in the nature of an execution proceeding, is irregular and without jurisdiction.

It has been contended on the other side that Kedar Nath was entitled, if he so wished, not to proceed further with his preliminary decree. It was not obligatory on him, it is urged, to obtain a final decree partitioning the property. It had been declared that he was entitled to a one-fifth share and it was open to him, therefore, to require the tenants to pay him this share. And if this course was open to him it was also open to him to ask the Court to make a proclamation to this effect in the villages concerned. Learned Counsel also contended that the provisions of s. 151 were applicable to such a case because there is no specific provision in the Civil P. C. which provides for this contingency, and s. 151 empowers the Court to pass such orders as may be required where a remedy is necessary for the ends of justice.

Learned Counsel conceded that he could not support this contention by any authority. He explained that his client did not wish to proceed further with the actual partition of the property as he could not find the requisite funds, but he could not explain why his client could not obtain funds by disposing of a portion of the share in respect of which he had obtained a preliminary decree.

In my opinion the order of the Court below cannot be supported. No ground for action under s. 151 arises where a remedy is provided by the Code itself, in this case a final partition decree. Under s. 54 where the decree is for the partition of an undivided estate assessed to the payment of revenue to the Govt., or for the separate possession of a share of such an estate the partition of the estate or the separation of the share shall be made by the Collector or any gazetted subordinate of the Collector deputed by him in this behalf. Further under r. 18 of O. XX it is provided that where the Court passes a decree for the partition of property or for the separate possession of a share therein then,—

(1) if and in so far as the decree relates to an estate assessed to the payment of revenue to the Govt., the decree shall declare the rights of the several parties interested in the property, but shall direct such partition or separation to be made by the Collector, or any gazetted subordinate of the Collector deputed by him in this behalf,

(2) if and in so far as such decree relates to any other immovable property or to movable property, the Court may if the partition or separation cannot be conveniently made without further enquiry, pass a preliminary decree declaring the rights of the several parties interested in the property and giving such further directions as may be required.

The property in the present case comes partly under cl. (1) and partly under cl. (2), but learned Counsel for the opposite party admits that the property in respect of which a proclamation is desired is revenue paying property to which the provisions of cl. (1) are applicable.

The decree awarded by the Subordinate Judge is headed "preliminary decree in partition suit", but it has not been drawn up according to the provisions of r. 18 or O. XX. According to the decree the plaintiff's suit is decreed for possession of his fifth share in certain properties. His learned Counsel conceded that the decree should not have been prepared in this form and that it should have made provision for further action to be taken by the revenue authorities in so far as the revenue paying land is concerned, and have given further directions in respect of the other property.

Learned Counsel for the opposite party conceded that the procedure adopted by his client was of a novel character for which he could find no precedent. I am clearly of opinion that s. 151 should not have been applied in such case and that the opposite party was not entitled to ask the Court to direct the making of a proclamation on his obtaining a preliminary decree in the partition suit. A preliminary partition decree is of a declaratory nature and it is implicit in it that further proceedings are required to complete the partition. In my view it is not open to a party to stop at this stage and ask the Court to assist him in some other manner to obtain the share to which it has been held he is entitled. There is no provision of law which would warrant such procedure and the proper procedure is provided in the Civil P. C. I hold, therefore, that the Court below had no jurisdiction to pass this order.

I accordingly allow this application with costs, set aside the order passed by the Civil Judge and dismiss the opposite party's application.

RESPONDENTS

Pleadings — Amendment — Proposed amendment should be submitted before leave is granted—Original claim based on renewal given to plaintiff of earlier pro-note in favour of deceased—Amendment suing on earlier pro-note as deceased's executor—Amendment, if alters suit—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 52, O. VI, r. 17—Action by executor or administrator as such failing—Liability for costs—His Personal liability—Suit against him on liability of testator—S. 52, if protects him—Legal representatives—Claim against estate of deceased—Personal representative, if entitled to require strict proof of any claim against estate not within his personal knowledge—Cause of action—Party having complete cause of action alleging it imperfectly—Remedy—Suit premature—Remedy—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 21—Mortgage by Muhammadan brother and sister—Payment by one, if saves limitation against other—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 62—Suit by mortgagee on subsequent mortgage executed in lieu of prior one—Prior mortgage, if can be set up—Pro-note in lieu of mortgage, whether extinguishes mortgage—Pro-note, value of.

It is usual and generally most desirable that a party desiring to amend his pleadings should submit his proposed amendments in explicit form before the leave sought is granted, that is, he should formulate and state in writing the exact amendments for which he asks. Hyams v. Stuart King (3), relied on. [p. 178, col. 2.]

The fundamental character of the suit is not altered where the plaintiff first bases his claim on a renewal given to him of a pro-note, executed in favour of the deceased and subsequently amends his pleadings and sues on the original pro-note as executor of the deceased. 63 Ind. Cas. 914 (2), distinguished. [p. 179, col. 1.]

In ordinary cases, that is unless the defendant has been guilty of some misconduct inducing the action, an executor or administrator who sues as such and fails is personally liable for the costs of the action.

It is true that if he is sued upon a liability of his testator he has the protection of s. 52, Civil P. C., but if he seeks to assert a claim, the fact that he possesses it by virtue of being sole executor and beneficiary of a deceased person puts the defendant at no disadvantage from which he would have been free if the claim had been brought otherwise than in a representative capacity. Charles Boynton v. George H. Boynton (4), relied on. [p. 178, col. 2.]

A personal representative is fully justified in requiring strict proof of any claim against the estate not within his personal knowledge, and entitled—may be bound if others than he are interested in the estate—to avail himself of any technical defence, which he may be advised, is open to him. [p. 181, col. 2.]

If a party at the moment he commences a suit has but an inchoate cause of action, nothing he thereafter does can entitle him to any relief in that suit. His only course is to discontinue it and, if possible, start afresh. A party who, having a complete cause of action, alleges it imperfectly may be helped by amendment; but a premature suit is incurable. 177 Ind. Cas. 63 (1), Clayton v. Le Roy (19), Gulzar Singh v. Kalyan Chand (20) and 52 Ind. Cas. 231 (21), relied on. [ibid.]

Although a mortgagee in a suit on a subsequent mortgage executed in lieu of prior mortgage cannot set up the prior mortgage, yet a fresh promissory note only provides evidence of the original loan and does not extinguish the mortgage. 171 Ind. Cas. 356 (5), relied on.

A payment by one of co-mortgagors (a Muhammadan brother and sister) cannot save limitation against the other. Nor can the brother be deemed to be his sister's agent for making payments to creditor in absence of proof of authority. 166 Ind. Cas. 106 (14) and 181 Ind. Cas. 490 (16), relied on.

Mr. C. K. Ray, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Clark and Harmasji, for Respondent No. 1.

Roberts, C. J.—The two points urged before us in this appeal are, first that the suit ought not to have gone to trial upon the pleadings as amended, but that leave for the amendments should have been refused; and secondly, that upon the pleadings as amended the suit is barred by limitation. It appears that the plaintiff-respondent originally filed a suit for a preliminary mortgage decree based upon a promissory note for Rs. 8,000 given by Ismail Eusooif Jeewa Karwa and his sister Khatiza Bibi (whose heirs and legal representatives were the defendants) to Messrs. Balthazar & Son Ltd., on September 6, 1932. By way of security for this note there was a mortgage by deposit of title deeds and these had been delivered to the plaintiff and the promissory note endorsed to her for valuable consideration. There was an early amendment of the plaint averring that Messrs. Balthazar & Son Ltd., were the agents of the plaintiff; this was no doubt to avoid the objection that the mortgage debt could not be transferred by mere indorsement of the promissory note. It was pleaded that for better security Messrs. Balthazar & Son Ltd., had executed a duly registered assignment of the debt. However, this assignment was made on November 18, 1936, after the debt of filing the suit, and could not complete an incomplete cause of action, nor entitle the plaintiff to any further relief in the existing suit: see Smith v. Mrs. Heptonstall (1). The cause of action in the plaint and amended plaint is stated to have arisen on September 6, 1932. The case proceeded to trial before Braund, J., who held that one of the stamps on the promissory note had not been cancelled and that as the mortgage debt was due upon the note and upon it alone the plaintiff could not succeed. He refused leave to amend the plaint by the averment of some obligation anterior to the note. The opportunity was given to the plaintiff's Advocate of withdrawing the suit with leave to bring a fresh suit under O. XXIII, but this was declined. By reason of s. 35, Stamp Act, this promissory note is inadmissible in evidence for any purpose whatever. Upon appeal a Bench of this Court held that the plaintiff

"should have been allowed to amend the plaint on the following lines: The first paragraph would have to be amended so as to omit reference to the promissory note, and to set out the existing liability, if any, which the two deceased persons owed to the plaintiff. Paragraph 3 would have to have omitted from it all references to the transfer alleged to have been made subsequent to the date on which the suit was filed and the amount due might require to be altered."

The plaintiff then filed an amended plaint on April, 23, 1938, in which she described herself for the first time as the sole executrix of the will of George Henry Smith deceased, late of Rangoon. She set up the plea that George Henry Smith lent Ismail Eusoof Jeewa Karwa and his sister Khatiza Bibi Rs. 8,000 on December 4, 1922, and that they gave a promissory note to Messrs. Balthazar & Son on that date, before Messrs. Balthazar & Son had become a limited liability company, and that there was a mortgage by deposit of title deeds with Messrs. Balthazar & Son on the same date. It was pleaded that the cause of action arose on December 4, 1922 and limitation was saved by reason of payment of interest as such. Objection was taken to these amendments as falling outside the scope of the leave given to amend. Shaw, J. allowed the amended plaint and in the course of his order referred to the Appellate Court's decision and said:

"The Court however not having the proposed amendment before it could not visualize all the consequential amendments that would have to be made. To insist therefore that the plaint should only be amended exactly as stated and no more might lead to an absurd position. Leave having been given to fall back on the original debt of liability, it must, I think, follow that everything that goes with it must also be allowed to be pleaded so that the defendants may know clearly what case they have to meet."

When the case went to trial the learned Judge on the original side pointed out that so far as he was concerned the interlocutory order of Shaw, J. was final, but we are asked to say here that it ought not to have been made. The question before us is whether the plaintiff has gone beyond the leave to amend which was granted by the Bench. Mr. Ray says that the plaint as amended sets up an entirely new cause of action and that the subject-matter of the suit has been changed. The plaintiff is suing for the first time as executrix; and she is setting up a mortgage of 1922 by deposit of title deeds with a partnership firm; instead of a mortgage ten years later by deposit of title deeds with a limited liability company. Upon the authority in Ma Shwe Mya v. Maung Mo Hnaung (2), it is urged that such an amendment was never contemplated by the Appellate Bench and ought not to be entertained. Now it is usual and generally most desirable that a party desiring to amend his pleadings should submit his proposed amendments in explicit form before the leave sought is granted; that is, in the words of Farwell, L. J., in Hyams v. Stuart King (3), at p. 724 "to formulate and state in writing the exact amendments for which he asks". If he does so the trouble and expense of deciding later whether the amendment as made should be allowed to stand will be avoided. In this case the effect of the order of the Appellate Court, which of course is not open to criticism by us, has unfortunately been to pave the way to further controversy as to its scope.

It has been strongly contended by Mr. Ray that a suit by the plaintiff as executrix alters the whole character of the action. This seems to depend on the further contention that if she failed she would not be personally liable for the costs. But this latter contention is fallacious. In ordinary cases, that is unless the defendant has been guilty of some misconduct including the action, an executor or administrator who sues as such and fails is personally liable for the costs of the action: Charles Boynton v. George H. Boynton (4). It is true that if he is sued upon a liability of his testator he has the protection of s. 52, Civil P. C., but if he seeks to assert a claim, the fact that he possesses it by virtue of being sole executor and beneficiary of a deceased person puts the defendant at no disadvantage from which he would have been free if the claim had been brought otherwise than in a representative capacity. In the judgment of the Bench, which gave leave to amend there was quoted with approval a rule laid down by the commentator of Mulla's Civil Procedure Code that:

"Where a plaintiff bases his claim on a specific legal relation alleged to exist between him and the defendant, he may not be allowed to amend the plaint so as to have it on a different legal relation".

The fundamental character of the suit is not altered here merely because the claim rests upon a promissory note given in 1922 to the testator and not upon the note in renewal thereof given to the plaintiff, who is his executrix in 1932. Mr. Joakim in his evidence said that the note was renewed in 1932 but that there was no fresh deposit of title deeds, and the learned Judge accepted this evidence. Doubtless, if there had been two mortgages, the plaintiff could not have leave to set up the earlier one in her amended plaint, but as has been held in Hirendra Nath Datta v. Noyes (5), a fresh promissory note only provides evidence of the original loan and does not extinguish the prior mortgage. It has been urged upon us that in cross-examination Mr. Joakim assented to the suggestion that the recitals in the assignment of November 1936, represented the true state of affairs, and that in fact these recitals set out a fresh deposit of title deeds creating a new mortgage, but in view of his explicit denial in his examination-in-chief the explanation appears to me to lie in the fact that this part of the cross-examination was directed to the references to the promissory note; no further question was put to him on this point and I am satisfied from his evidence that there was only one mortgage.

The distinction between the present case and that in Ma Shwe Mya v. Maung Mo Hnaung (2), is that the latter case proceeded to trial upon unamended pleadings. The respondent sued for specific performance of an oral agreement made in 1912 with the appellant whereby she promised to transfer three specified sites of oil wells allotted to her by Govt. and obtained by her in that year. This agreement was alleged in relation to an earlier contract in 1903, and when it was found that the agreement pleaded could not be established by the evidence the respondent ought to amend by alleging breach of the contract in 1903, but their Lordships held that the real controversy in question between the parties was the existence and character of an agreement made in 1912 for the delivery of certain sites of oil wells specified and identified by the numbers stated in the plaint which could only have been delivered in respect of that subsequent bargain and the Court could not permit a new case to be made. But here an amendment does no injustice to the defendant-appellants and does not set up a new and distinct cause of action, nor does it change the subject-matter of the suit. In my judgment therefore there is no ground for saying that it has in effect gone beyond the real question in controversy between the parties or has exceeded the extent of the amendment proposed to be allowed by the Appellate Court's decision.

Upon the question of limitation it has been pointed out in U Ba Gyi v. U Than Kyauk (6), that it is impossible for a creditor to make a fresh starting point for limitation. If payment by a debtor is to satisfy the statute and it is not distinctly stated by him that the payment is one of interest as such there must be evidence from which payment as interest may be distinctly inferred: Kariyappa v. Rachappa (7). Now here the learned trial Judge held that a specific payment of Rs. 60 by way of interest as such had been shown to have been made on December 30, 1927. He had before him a number of book entries made by the creditors which showed that on later dates the sum of Rs. 60 was paid whenever that amount of interest fell due. Mr. Joakim had said the payments of interest were regular. In my judgment an inference could clearly be drawn that in all the circumstances payment of interest as such had been made on this date. But a more difficult question arises when we consider whether the payment of interest as such was made in such circumstances as to bind each of the joint contractors within the meaning of s. 21 (2), Lim. Act. A payment made by one of the joint executants of a promissory note does not in itself operate to bind the other or others; in order to do so there must be evidence from which it can be inferred that he was in effect acting as his or their agent. These co-mortgagors were brother and sister and it has been said that Khatiza Bibi was a purdanashin lady. Interest was reduced from 9 per cent. to 8 per cent. at the request of her brother Karwa, as appears from Mr. Joakim's evidence: this appears to have been some time after the payment to which I have referred. The inference has been drawn from the regularity of the payments of interest as such and from the circumstances of the case that they were made on behalf of both the joint contractors.

It would appear that the provisions of s. 21 (2), Lim. Act, were not dealt with in argument before the learned trial Judge. Mr. Clark contends that in the circumstances and from the relationship of brother and sister which subsisted between them a payment of interest may justify the inference that the person paying was impliedly authorized by the sister to act on her behalf. He cited Janaki Ammal v. Srinivasan (8) and Achola Sundari Devi v. Doman Sundari Devi 90 Ind. Cas. 774 (9), but in neither of these cases was the effect of s. 21 (2) considered. In National Bank of Upper India, Ltd. v. Bansidhar (10), their Lordships found no difficulty in implying authority to pay interest: indeed there was an agreement between the person who paid the interest and the respondent that the former would discharge the debt of the respondent to the bank in respect of both principal and interest. The decision is thus inapplicable to the facts before us here. In Thayammal v. Muthukumaraswami Chettiar (11), it was observed that in the case of several joint contractors the operation of s. 20 seems to be cut down or limited by s. 21 (2) of the Act, and that whatever the law was as to executors it was impossible to say of two joint contractors (which term had been held to include two mortgagors): see Muthu Chettiar v. Muhammad Hussain (12)—that one contractor was bound by the payments of the other. In Jogesthendra v. Monindra

Narain (13), it was decided that when interest on a debt is paid by one of the executants of a simple money bond before the expiry of a period of limitation, a fresh period of limitation shall not be computed from the time of the payment against the other executants of the bond who did not make the payment. Again in Mohamed Taqui Khan v. Raja Ram (14), at p. 283 a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court said:

"So far as s. 20 stood alone there was certainly room for the view that the payment of a joint debt by one of joint debtors may amount to a payment of the debt within the meaning of that section so as to save limitation as against all the debtors, but the Indian law is in this respect different from the old English Law. We have a specific provision in s. 21, Lim. Act, which applies to both acknowledgments under s. 19 and to payment of interest and principal under s. 20. That section provides that 'nothing in the said sections renders one of several joint contractors, partners, executors, or mortgagees chargeable by reason only of a written acknowledgment signed or of a payment made by, or by the agent of, any other or others of them'. A Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Narayana Ayyar v. Venkataramana Ayyar (15), held that co-mortgagors come within the scope of the words 'joint contractors' and that this section is applicable to co-mortgagors as well."

And see also Ram Kumar v. Hira Lal (16). The decision by a Bench of this Court in First Appeal No. 53 of 1938 U So Maung v. J. Thom (17), had not been delivered at the time of the judgment made by the learned trial Judge in the present case. That Bench followed the trend of authority to which I have referred and held that no agency on behalf of his wife could be implied from the mere fact that a Burmese Buddhist husband paid interest upon the debt due under a promissory note secured by a joint mortgage by deposit of title deeds. Section 21 (3) (b) deals with liabilities which have been incurred by, or on behalf of, a Hindu undivided family as such. But where the liability has been incurred by co-mortgagors, they are joint contractors. In Lakshmi Naidu v. Gunamma (18), it was held that where the managing member of a joint Hindu family was a co-mortgagor with his brother, and made a payment to the mortgagee at a time when the mortgagee was pressing both brothers for payment, there was evidence of an implied agency.

In the present case I could not infer a payment of interest as such on the sister's behalf from the mere fact that interest was paid regularly by some one. But the regular payments of Rs. 60 per month are evidence from which it may be inferred that they were at least made on behalf of the brother who showed his concern at the rate of interest which was being paid. As regards the sister the conclusion might well be different, but as the only appellants are the heirs and legal representatives of Ismail Eusoof Karwa it is clear that the payment of interest on December 30, 1927, saved limitation as against him, and consequently this appeal must be dismissed. There is however a small point in respect of which the decree should be made clear. The amount claimed was Rs. 8,368, being Rs. 8,000 principal and Rs. 368 interest to the date of filing the suit. This was decreed together with further interest from the date of the institution of the suit until realization at the contract rate of 6 per cent. per annum; this further interest must be calculated on the principal sum of Rs. 8,000 and not upon the amount claimed of Rs. 8,368. The appellants must pay the costs of the appeal, Advocate's fees in this Court forty gold mohurs; and we certify for two Counsel.

Blagden, J.—This case might well be described as a tragedy of errors and about it only satisfactory feature is the conspicuous ability with which it has been presented to us by learned Counsel on both sides. The plaintiff commenced this suit on July 6, 1936, when she filed a plaint alleging—execution of a promissory note for Rs. 8,000 with interest at 9 per cent. per annum and creation of a mortgage by deposit of title deeds to secure that sum in favour of Balthazar & Son Ltd., by one Khatiza Bibi and one Ismail Eusoof Jeewa Karwa (hereinafter together called "the mortgagors") on September 6, 1932, endorsement over to herself of the promissory note and delivery over of the title deeds. She further averred the death on August 10, 1934 and thereafter of both the mortgagors, certain reductions in the original rate of interest: and non-payment of Rs. 8,000 principal and Rs. 368 interest; and claimed Rs. 8,368 with interest at 6 per cent. to judgment, sale of the mortgaged property in default of payment, and a Receiver, against two groups of defendants the one consisting of Ebrahim Moosaji Mamoojee husband heir and legal personal representative of Khatiza Bibi, and the other of seven persons the heirs and legal representatives of Ismail Eusoof Jeewa Karwa. This story was duly verified as true by the plaintiff on July 7, 1936.

The first named defendant who (we must remember) represented the female mortgagor did not defend the suit and (or but) subsequently died, and by an order of August 8, 1938 his legal personal representatives were brought on the record. They also did not defend the suit. The remaining defendants who represented the male mortgagor did defend the suit. Hereinafter when I refer to "the defendants" I shall, unless the contrary appears mean these the effective, defendants. They filed written statements which did not deny that they were the legal representatives of the male mortgagor, and in other respects each took the form of a general traverse. They also took certain points of law with which I shall try to deal later. As some capital has been sought to be made of the lack of merits which this defence discloses, I will observe at once that a personal representative is in my view fully justified in requiring strict proof of any claim against the estate not within his personal knowledge, and entitle—may be bound if others than he are interested in the estate—to avail himself of any technical defence which he may be advised is open to him.

Some time in the autumn of 1936 the plaintiff was apparently advised erroneously in view of the subsequent decision in Hirendra Nath Datta v. Noyes (5) that her cause of action as set out in her plaint was imperfect and in an endeavour to put matters right, a deed was executed on November 18, 1936 whereby Balthazar Son Ltd., assigned to the plaintiff the debt and security sued on. This deed was duly registered and on November 19, 1936 the plaint was amended by inserting an allegation of the deed: the amended plaint was again verified by the plaintiff. This step was not only unnecessary but also, of course, completely idle, because it is clear (I should imagine in the law of any country civilized enough to entertain law suits) that if a party at the moment he commences a suit has but an inchoate cause of action nothing he thereafter does can entitle him to any relief in that suit. His only course is to discontinue it and, if possible, start afresh. A party who, having a complete cause of action, alleges it imperfectly may be helped by amendment; but a premature suit is incurable; see in England Clayton v.

Lo Roy (19) in India, Gulzar Singh v. Kalyan Chand (20) and Gobind Ramanuj Das v. Debendrabala Dasi (21) and in this country Smith v. Mrs. Heptonstall (1). It is fair to observe that at the date of the deed and of the first amendment the last cited case was not yet decided. However vain thing though it was, this deed had this importance, namely that amongst its short and simple recitals was a recital of a mortgage of September 6, 1932. The suit came on for hearing before Braund, J., and it transpired that a stamp on the promissory note relied on by the plaintiff as proof of debt was not properly deleted. Braund, J. refused leave to amend by asserting the original obligation alleged by the plaintiff to be subsisting before September 6, 1932 but he offered the plaintiff leave to withdraw her suit and bring another. This was declined, and the learned Judge accordingly dismissed the suit on June 1, 1937.

The plaintiff appealed, and the case on appeal is reported in Mrs. Niemeyer v. E. M. Mamooji (22). The Court reversed Braund, J.'s decision and granted the plaintiff leave to amend. Mr. Ray for the defendants has pressed upon us the decision in Ma Shwe Mya v. Maung Mo Hnaung (2), Maung Ba Thein v. Ma. Than Myit (23) and Ma Thaing v. Maung Chit On (24). But material as these cases would be if we were considering whether to allow an amendment or not, in the events which have happened both we and the defendants are bound by the decision in the present suit reported as Mrs. Niemeyer v. E. M. Mamooji (22) right or wrong. It would therefore be both presumptuous and superfluous for us to discuss the merits of that decision. What has, however, turned out to be a most unfortunate thing happened. The Court did not insist that learned Counsel for the plaintiff should formulate in writing the amendment he desired to make before considering whether it would allow the amendment or not, nor did it declare generally that the plaintiff should be allowed to amend her plaint and remit the case to the Judge of first instance to consider what precise amendments he would in his discretion allow; instead it allowed an amendment, "on the lines set out at the foot of p. 540 and the top of p. 541" of the report. Now it is easy to be wise after the event and I am not going to criticize anybody concerned for what then and afterwards happened. But, like my Lord, I do think the subsequent history of the case well illustrates the desirability of adhering to the general rule of practice laid down by the English Court of Appeal in Hyams v. Stuart King (3) at pp. 717, 724†.

Much of the time this case has necessarily occupied before us was spent in considering the question whether the amendment which the plaintiff did make came within the four walls of the permission she had received or not. What she did in reliance on that permission was to make about as drastic a series of amendments as it is possible to imagine. She completely jettisoned the mortgage of September 6, 1932; and abandoned all suggestions that there was any privity of contract between herself personally and the defendants or the mortgagor they represent. In place of these averments she, by her second amended plaint, filed on April 23, 1938, asserted a loan by one George Henry Smith through the agency of Balhazar & Son, Ltd., to the original mortgagors of Rs. 8,000 on or about December 4, 1922; a promissory note for that amount with interest at 9 per cent. per annum and a mortgage by deposit of title deeds of the property referred to in her original plaint, also on December 4, 1922; She further asserted a will made by George Henry Smith appointing her sole executrix, the death on April 8, 1926 of George Henry Smith, and grant of probate to her, the plaintiff. The rest of the pleadings followed the lines of the original plaint, except that the plaintiff (as, on her new case, was necessary) now averred due payment of interest as such up to September 30, 1935 and that such payment saved limitation. The relief prayed remained unaltered.

That the defendants carried in objections to these amendments is not surprising. By those objections it was contended that the amendments were not only out of time—nothing now turns on this—but also (and this is a substantial question for our decision) out of order. Shaw, J. heard and disallowed those objections, and in due course the suits came before Dunkley, J. for hearing on the amended pleadings. The defendants sought before him to go behind the decision of Shaw, J. Whether Dunkley, J. was entitled to take this course I will not discuss, for clearly he was not bound to and he did not. Equally clearly, however, he reserved to the defendants full liberty to question before us, if unsuccessful before him, the propriety of that learned Judge's decision as well as that of his own. In the result he found in favour of the plaintiff and from that decision the defendants now appeal. It thus comes about that this appeal though in form from Dunkley, J., is in substance in part an appeal from that learned Judge and in part from Shaw, J. Mr. Ray for the present appellants takes three points which I propose to deal with in the following order. He says (1) that the plaintiff's second amendment is not within the terms of the leave granted her and therefore, irregular i.e., that the order of Shaw, J., was wrong; (2) that the alleged mortgage of 1932 destroyed by novation the mortgage of 1922 on which the plaintiff, now, relies and (3) that payment of interest as such by or on behalf of his clients or the deceased has not been proved and that the claim is therefore statute-barred. The suit must be dismissed if he is right on any one of these points.

I have traced the rather complicated history of the suit in some detail for the purpose of making intelligible the conclusions at which I have arrived on the first and second of these points, which I can now, I hope, state comparatively briefly. Had the second amendment been formulated in writing when leave to amend was asked, and had its effect been to deprive the defendants of any advantage which they would have enjoyed had the case thereby set up, been set up in the original plaint, it would have been a strong ground for refusing leave to amend; had its effect been to set up a cause of action which since the filing of the original plaint had become statute-barred leave would, we may be sure, have been refused. If therefore Mr. Ray could have shown as that the amendment had in fact either effect we could, I think, safely say that the amendment as made was not one which the Bench in 1938 intended to allow. Actually however it is one of the few satisfactory features of the case that it had neither effect. Both the original mortgagors who might have given evidence in their own favour, if alive, died not after the second amendment but before the suit was commenced at all; while the amendment, so far from being a device to evade the statute of limitations, made, as Mr. Clark said, a present to the defendants of, at least a highly arguable case under that enactment.

The real spear-head of Mr. Ray's attack on this particular front was wisely concentrated on the change of character in which the plaintiff sued. The Court, he said, gave the plaintiff leave "to set out the existing liability, if any, which the two deceased persons owed to the plaintiff" that is to say, to Mrs. Mary Niemeyer, in 1932; whereas what has been done is to set out the existing liability which the two deceased persons owed to the executrix of Captain Smith. It is true that the latter happened to occupy the same body as the former, but, he says, that is a mere accident, and the two are in law separate and distinct entities. For certain purposes the office of legal representative must be regarded as a distinct thing from its holder. Whether this is so for the present purposes we have to decide. The decision of Braund, J., in Mahant Singh v. U Aye (25), as well as the dicta in Mackintosh Burn Limited v. Shivakali Kumar (26) at pp. 805-6 and Zubaida Sultan v. Dawood Ismail (27) at p. 101 are against this contention, and it might suffice to say that I respectfully and entirely agree with Braund, J.'s, decision and am content to adopt his reasoning. But I ought to add that the case of a trustee in bankruptcy who institutes proceedings appears to me analogous to that of the representative of a deceased person who sues, and it is well settled that if the former is unsuccessful his adversary is entitled to look for his costs to his individual assailant and not to an insolvent estate the right of the former to an indemnity from such assets as there may be in the latter is plain, provided certain conditions are satisfied, but is no concern of the successful defendant. So in the present case if Mrs. Niemeyer personally was worth Rs. X it matters not to the defendants what the estate of Captain Smith, or what Mary Niemeyer's interest in that estate, may be worth. As neither can be less than nothing Rs. X to which the defendants, if successful, were entitled on the original pleadings remains undiminished.

Mr. Ray sought to distinguish Mahant Singh v. U Aye (25) on the ground that the (25) 14 R 336; 166 Ind. Cas. 247; A I R 1936 Rang. 514; 9 R Rang. 243.

public trustee is a statutory person and executors are not, but I do not find this distinction convincing for though it is true that the individual who holds the office of executor is not chosen by statute his duties, subject to the will, are as much statutory duties as those of the public trustee. Both sides place reliance on s. 52 (1), Civil P. C., but in my opinion it tells strongly in favour of the plaintiff. This section provides what is to happen :

"Where a decree is passed against a party as the legal representative of a deceased person and the decree is for the payment of money out of the property of the deceased"

If a decree against an executor as such were necessarily a decree for the payment of money out of the property of the deceased the words I have just quoted from "and the decree" down to and including "the deceased" would be quite unnecessary. The section therefore contemplates a decree against a party as the legal representative of a deceased person which is not limited in the way described but is enforceable without more ado against him personally, and such a decree is in my opinion the proper decree where the executor is plaintiff, while in the absence of misconduct on his part the other form of decree is applicable where e. g., the executor as such is defendant in an action by a creditor of the deceased. The first point in the appeal therefore, in my judgment, fails. As to the second point (novation) it is not disputed that if there was a complete mortgage in 1932 that is an end of the plaintiff's case as now pleaded, and whether there was is a pure question of fact. We must consider whether there was any evidence on which Dunkley, J., could have found, as he did, that there was no such mortgage. If there was none we must, and if there was any we may, reverse his decision, though in the latter event it would need a very strong case to persuade us so to do.

I do not myself think that the possibility of there having been a mortgage in 1932 can lightly be cast on one side. True, there would have been no point in such a transaction but the plaintiff might well have been as ill-advised in September 1932 as she was in November 1936. The plaintiff herself has stated in writing no less than five times that there was a mortgage in September 1932 while her witness Mr. Joakim flatly contradicted himself at the trial, saying in chief that there was no such mortgage and in cross-examination that the recitals in the deed of November 1936, were correct from which answer, if true, it follows that there was. Comment before us has been made on the fact that the learned Counsel who cross-examined him did not follow up this answer with a specific and direct question as to the alleged 1932 mortgage. In the light of after events I am inclined to think it would have been better if this had been done, but I do not for a moment blame the learned Counsel concerned for exercising his discretion in the way he did and, having got what he (I think very reasonably) understood to be the answer he desired, not seeking to paint the lily with further questions. After all, he was not dealing with an elderly maiden lady or an illiterate person but with an experienced and intelligent man of business, nor were the recitals to the deed of November 1936, by any means prolix or complicated.

Anyhow, that was the evidence about this matter. The existence of the 1932 mortgage had been six times asserted and only once denied, but of course you do not weigh evidence by counting assertions and denials. To my mind it is difficult to believe that if there had been a mortgage in 1932 the plaintiff's present advisers would not have been so instructed and that if they had been so instructed they would, when framing the second amendment, have gone back into the mists of antiquity for the purpose of founding their case on the 1922 mortgage. They could have pleaded and, as it turns out, proved their client's case by reliance on the promissory note of 1922 and the mortgage of 1932. If I had had to decide the point I should, I think, have shared what must have been Dunkley, J.'s view, namely that Mr. Joakim's answer in cross-examination was a mistake due to his not appreciating where the answer led him ; but it is sufficient to say that I am quite clear that we ought not to reverse the learned Judge's decision on this question of fact.

The third question—that of limitation—is at first view the most difficult in the case but the difficulties largely solve themselves if we bear in mind that we have before us the representatives of only one of the original mortgagors and are therefore not concerned with the rights of the representatives of the other who have let the suit go by default. I do not propose to indulge in any elaborate review of the authorities on this part of the case because as I find myself in complete agreement with what my Lord has said about them and in particular with his observations on Janaki Ammal Srinivasa (8) and Achole Sundari Debi v. Doman Sundrri Debi, 90

Ind. Cas. 774 (9). The law applicable is, I think undisputed to this extent, namely, (1) that the combined effect of ss. 20, as now amended, and 21, Lim. Act, imposed on the plaintiff, who does not here allege any such written acknowledgment as the proviso to the former section contemplates, the burden of proving at least one payment of interest expressly as such by Ismail Eusoof Jeewa Karwa or some person duly authorized by him, between April 23, 1926, (being 12 years before the second amended plaint was filed) and January 1, 1928, (when a written acknowledgment as well as a payment of interest became necessary to save limitation) and (2) that it is not enough for her merely to prove that payment was made either by or on behalf of Eusoof Jeewa Karwa or of his co-mortgagor without showing which or that a payment in gross by Eusoof Jeewa Karwa was lawfully appropriated to interest by or on behalf of the mortgagee.

Mr. Clark sets about the discharge of this burden by proving, by the evidence of Mr. Joakim supported by the books of his company, that a payment of an amount precisely equal to the interest then due was made by somebody on December 30, 1927, a few days after that payment fell due. He then proves by similar evidence a whole series of similar payments since that date, each of them round about a date when interest would be payable, down to 1935. It seems to me quite clear, and I do not think any of the authorities conflict with this view, that the learned Judge was on this uncontradicted evidence justified in inferring that the payment on December 30, 1927, was a payment of interest as such by somebody. Who then was that somebody? It is true that some kind person might from 1927 to 1935 have been benevolently but voluntarily paying the mortgagors' interest for them without their knowledge, and it is true that Messrs. Balthazars might have been paying it themselves by means of book entries for the purpose of defeating the statute. The former contingency appears to me unlikely, and the latter fantastically so. Not only would they, as reputable people, not have dreamt of doing anything so dishonest, but also they would not have done anything so silly as by faking their books to make themselves accountable to their principals for money they had never in fact received. Section 114, Evi. Act, in effect provides that the Court may use a little commonsense. It would, I think, be a conspicuous failure to use any either to draw no inference from the fact of these payments at all or, in the absence of any evidence to suggest it, to infer that all these payments were, and in particular that the payment of December 30, 1927, was, made by some person other than one or more of those who would unnaturally be expected to make payments of interest, namely, the mortgagors.

Is there then anything to justify the inference that the male mortgagor was that one, if it was only one? Mr. Clark asks us to say that such an inference can be drawn from the fact that the mortgagors were brother and sister. To that proposition I cannot agree. A Buddhist husband is not as such his wife's agent, (First Appeal No. 53 of 1938 U. So Maung v. J. Thom (17) and I can see no reason, why a Muhammadan brother should as such be his sister's, even if, as here was in evidence the sister is a pardanashin lady. If he is an agent to pay interest, what, one may ask, are the limits of a brother's ostensible authority qua brother? If one imagines the chaos that might result wherever there was a large family, of whatever race if all the brothers each pledged all their sisters' credit and each sold all their sisters' property each to different persons one realizes without difficulty that this suggestion cannot be well founded, and Mr. Ray has cited ample authority against it. But Mr. Clark has a better card in his hand than that. In none of the cases to which Mr. Ray drew our attention on this point did it appear, as here it does, that one of several co-mortgagors applied for and obtained a reduction of the rate of interest, after which interest was paid at the reduced rate. This, it seems to me, points clearly to the conclusion that if the payments before his application were not made, at the time they were made, by the applicant they were ratified by him: since the subsequent punctual payments of money at the reduced rate and of no more money raise the inference that there were then no arrears of interest and almost must have been made by the applicant, or with his knowledge and approval, since without information received from him nobody on behalf of the mortgagors could well have known of the reduction. That disposes of the appeal, and I agree with the order which my Lord the Chief Justice proposes and also with his observation as to what its effect as regards interest will be.

PATNA HIGH COURT

Criminal Appeal No. 246 of 1940

January 3, 1941

ROWLAND, AND SHEARER, JJ.

MOHAMMAD ARIF alias SUPAN—

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Evidence Act (I of 1872); s. 32 (1)—Dying declaration—Assailant not recognized—Possibility of naming suspected person as assailant should not be ignored by Court—Dying declaration, when can be acted upon, for convicting accused without corroboration—Duty of Court in this respect—Prosecution attempting to improve and develop evidence at successive stages—Special caution is necessary in dealing with dying declaration—Serious room for doubt as to whether dying declaration includes matter suggested to deceased by outsiders—Value to be attached to it.

Although it is improbable that a man who has been stabbed and has been able to recognize his assailant would omit to name the actual assailant and instead give the name of some other person in his dying declaration, yet in cases where the assailant has not been recognized the Court must not ignore the possible temptation that there may be, if one has grounds for suspecting any person, to name that person as having been actually and positively identified. The danger of this kind of wrong identification has to be borne in mind in dealing with what are called dying declarations. There is no absolute rule that a dying declaration should not be acted on for the purpose of convicting an accused person even if uncorroborated, provided, that the Court is fully satisfied that it is true. But before so acting on it the Court will apply to it every test of its genuineness and good faith which it is possible in the circumstances of the case to apply. [p. 186, col. 2.]

Where the prosecution evidence shows that there are signs of attempt to improve and develop it at successive stages special caution is needed also in dealing with a dying declaration. [p. 186, col. 1.]

When there is serious room for doubt as to whether the contents of the dying statement include matter suggested to the deceased by the outsiders, this is a circumstance which cannot be ignored in estimating the value to be attached to it. [p. 188, col. 2.]

Cr. A. from a judgment of the Sessions Judge of Gaya, dated November 7, 1940.

Messrs. Khurshed Husnain and Ashique Hossain Akbari, for the Appellant.

The Assistant Govt. Advocate assisted by Mr. Avadesh Nandan Sahay, for the Crown.

Rowland, J.—The appellant Mohammad Arif alias Supan Mian aged about twenty years has been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Gaya on a charge of murder of Sheonandan Singh and sentenced under s. 302 of the I. P. C. to transportation for life. The crime is said to have been committed on Monday July 10, 1939, at about 5 P. M. by stabbing Sheonandan in the abdomen with a broad-bladed knife at Nawada on the bridge which cross the river. Sheonandan pressing his hands to the wound walked without assistance to the end of the bridge where he was picked up by a rickshaw-wala Shital Lal and taken to the hospital. There he made a statement charging Supan the son of Hafiz Abdul Qadir with the crime. He received surgical treatment but died the same night.

The trial was held with the aid of four assessors of whom two who were Muhammadan thought the accused was not guilty and the other two who were Hindus thought that he was guilty. The Sessions Judge in a careful and considered judgment has examined the evidence of the prosecution witnesses who have deposed as to the events of that day and has found that most of them are unreliable and expresses doubt whether the alleged eye-witnesses were present at all. He, however, has based the conviction of the accused in the main on the identification of Sheonandan himself along with the fact that on search of the house of the father of accused that night a knife was recovered which was on chemical examination found to be stained with blood, and partly also on the fact that whereas the accused had pleaded alibi saying that he was in Calcutta there is evidence which the Sessions Judge accepts to prove his presence in Nawada on the day in question. As to the dying declaration the Sessions Judge has observed that he would not wish to attach any exaggerated or sentimental value to it though he finds it difficult to envisage circumstance or motive so cogent as would induce a man mortally wounded to accuse a person other than his actual assailant. I would go so far in agreement with the learned Judge as to accept that it is improbable that a man who has been stabbed and has been able to recognize his assailant would omit to name the actual assailant and instead give the name of some other person. But in cases where the assailant has not been recognized I think that we must not ignore the possible temptation that there may be, if one has grounds for suspecting any person, to name that person as having been actually and positively identified. The danger of this kind of wrong identification has I think to be borne in mind in dealing with what are called dying declarations. There is no absolute rule that a dying declaration should not be acted on for the purpose of convicting an accused person even if uncorroborated provided that the Court is fully satisfied that it is true. But before so acting on it the Court will apply to it every test of its genuineness and good faith which it is possible in the circumstances of the case to apply.

Before coming to a discussion of the dying statement itself I may first refer to some of the oral evidence. The Sessions Judge has doubted whether the alleged eye-witnesses were at all present. It is certainly clear that if they were present they have not correctly described their own movements. They do not corroborate the presence of each other. But if for the purpose of examination we take their evidence at its face value there is much in it to lead to the view that the assailant of Sheonandan may have been an unidentified person. Jugal whose statement was the first to be recorded by the Sub-Inspector out of all the alleged eye-witnesses told the Police that he had noticed a boy aged eighteen or twenty wearing a kurta and green lungi and it appears from the statement he made to a Magistrate on July 13, 1939, that immediately after the incident he told passers by that some Muhammadan boy had stabbed Sheonandan. He has said in the course of his evidence that he did not know the name of accused till he heard it later, though almost in the same breath he admits having known Supan for three or four years. On the face of his evidence, therefore, it would seem that though he had known Supan for some time the person that he saw stabbing and running away was a person unknown to him. The next eye-witness Jamuna claims to have seen a boy running away and he says that Sheonandan pointed out the boy and said that that boy "has stabbed me". What this witness said to the Police was that he saw a boy running dressed in a kurta and green lungi whom he could not recognize. He did not give to the Police the name or the parentage of the accused and even at the trial he had to admit that he had seen him from behind only so that his opportunity for identification at the best would be poor. The next witness Basdeo who at the trial identifies and names Supan as the assailant of Sheonandan had said to the Police that Sheonandan's assailant was a man aged nineteen of short stature and fair complexion whom he would be able to identify if shown to him. That statement is inconsistent with the assailant having been a person who was known to Basdeo from before in which case one would have expected Basdeo to give the name or at least the parentage. But Basdeo in his evidence has admitted that he knew Supan from before. The last of the so-called eye-witnesses is Raghunath. Pandey and he refers to a Muhammadan boy eighteen or nineteen years of age wearing a green lungi and a striped shirt. He says also that Sheonandan told him that Ashraf and Sabatul had held his hands and that a Muhammadan boy had stabbed him. If there is any truth at all in Raghunath's evidence this last statement would be very significant as indicating that of three persons referred to by Sheonandan the latter was able at the time to name two but did not name the third and that would very strongly support the inference that the third person was unidentified. This witness in the earlier proceedings and in the trial of Sabatul and Ashraf which took place in the absence of the present accused did not give Supan's name but referred to him as a Moslem boy whom he claimed to be able to identify if he should see him. It was much to be desired that a test identification should have been held after the strictest possible precautions and indeed the father of this accused after the arrest in Calcutta of the latter petitioned the Sub-Divisional Officer that arrangements might be made for the accused to be sent to Central Jail, Gaya, after making special arrangements to see that prosecution witnesses should not have an opportunity of seeing him at Nawadah Railway Station. But nothing was done about this. The witness as a matter of course when confronted with Supan as the sole accused in the dock had no difficulty in identifying him.

Then there is the evidence of the witnesses who claim to have seen this accused in Nawada on the day of occurrence whose evidence is relevant from two points of view; firstly, as a negative to the plea of alibi set up; and, secondly, as lending force to the prosecution contention that between the date of the crime and the time of his arrest in Calcutta the accused was absconding. There would be naturally not so much force in this contention if it were accepted that the accused had been in Calcutta all the time. The witnesses who saw accused before the occurrence are Dhanu Pasi and Gobind Thakur. Dhanu is a toddy seller and his evidence is that at about 2 or 2-30 p.m. four or five young men came to his shop and demanded toddy. One of them was wearing a striped kurta and check lungi and he identifies the present accused as being that person. But in his statement to the Police he said that there had been five persons of whom he named three and the inference follows that the other two were persons unknown to him. But in cross-examination he admits that he had known Supan for four or five years and knew his name from before. Gobind Thakur is a witness who claims to have seen the accused sitting on the bank of the river at about 4-30; that is to say, shortly before the occurrence. There is a discrepancy in successive statements of this witness as to whether he saw the accused at 4-30 or 6 P.M. and the Sessions Judge was not disposed to attach any value to his evidence. Assuming that he did see someone who might be considered a suspicious character in the bed of the river the identification of that person may or may not have been correct.

Then there is the evidence of accused's presence in Nawada after the occurrence and for this the prosecution relies on Kishun Pasi and on Babu Lachmiprasad, the Assistant Station Master of Nawada. The Assistant Station Master proves that a boy whom he described to the Police had bought a ticket for Asansol by the passenger train leaving Nawada at 7-21 P.M. He has not, however, identified the accused and so far as this witness is concerned the criminal if was the person who bought the ticket may have been some person other than the present accused. The other witness Kishun Pasi has told a rather curious story that at about sunset Supne came and asked him for toddy and insisted on being supplied threatening Kishun with a knife and said he would kill him as he had killed Sheonandan Babu. He describes the accused as wearing a kurta and green lungi and has said at the trial that he recognized him both by face and by voice. But when he was examined on July 13, 1939, before a Magistrate under s. 164 of the Criminal P. C. he said that he recognized Supna by voice only and that owing to darkness his face was not visible. This is no recognition on which any reliance can be placed.

A general comment may be made on all this evidence that there are signs of attempt to improve and develop it at successive stages. When one finds that tendency in the evidence generally special caution is needed also in dealing with a dying declaration. It has been admitted by the compounder of the hospital that a large number of Hindus assembled on hearing of the incident and crowded into the room in which Sheonandan was and talked to him; and it has been argued for the defence that the inference ought to be drawn that Sheonandan not having recognized his assailant was influenced by suspicions put into his mind by others in such conversation. In this connection it is pointed out that on the way to the hospital Sheonandan did not disclose the name of his assailant either to the rickshaw-wala Shital or to an acquaintance Suganchand Jain whom he met on the way. The prosecution argued on the other hand that as Sheonandan had suffered a severe injury he must be supposed to have been anxious in the first instance for his own treatment with a view to saving his life and that therefore he was not going to stop on the way side to indulge in conversation about the details of what had happened to him. The evidence is that Suganchand asked Sheonandan what had happened and he said a Muhammadan had stabbed him, that Suganchand asked him 'kis ne mara' (who stabbed) and he said his condition was not good and asked Suganchand to come to hospital which the latter did. The ricksha-wala Shital Lal says that he himself did not ask anything from Sheonandan nor did Sheonandan tell him anything. The compounder says that immediately on arrival he asked Sheonandan what had happened and was told that a Muhammadan boy stabbed him with a chhura. The expression may imply that the Muhammadan boy who had stabbed him was unidentified though such an inference does not inevitably follow. Then according to the compounder after some conversation with outsiders Sheonandan asked that his statement might be recorded. There is serious room for doubt as to whether the contents of the dying statement include matter suggested to the deceased by the outsiders and this is a circumstance which cannot be ignored in estimating the value to be attached to it. Further more the dying declaration itself in several particulars is unconvincing especially as to the parts attributed to Ashraf and Sabatul. In fact two successive statements were made by Sheonandan in the one of which he said that those two persons caught him one by each hand and in the other he said that Ashraf caught his left hand and Sabatul caught his right hand and waist. I cannot feel that in this case the dying declaration is one on which full and implicit reliance can safely be placed.

As regards the motive the Sessions Judge has observed that the motive of the outrage remains obscure. The prosecution have attributed it to communal feeling between Hindus and Muhammadans and reference has been made to two previous incidents one arose out of the burial of a Muhammadan woman and the other out of some alleged defilement of idols of Siva and Parbati. Sheonandan no doubt was a person of some influence among the Hindus but the evidence is that in both these instances he exerted his influence in favour of a compromise between the two communities and in both cases a compromise was effected.

To what extent then are the dying declarations corroborated? The evidence as to the presence of Supan in Nawadah that day seems to me to be little better than the direct evidence of the eye-witnesses and impossible to trust in the matter of Supan's presence. Then there is the finding of the knife and it may be noticed that although there was stains of blood on it it could not be proved that the blood was human and it has not been proved that the accused was at or about the time of occurrence residing in the house in which the knife was found. In the circumstances I do not feel able to support the conclusion at which the learned Sessions Judge has arrived or to regard the dying declaration as being sufficiently convincing in itself or sufficiently corroborated to form the basis of the conviction of this appellant. I would allow the appeal and set aside the conviction, acquit the accused and direct his release.

Hindu Law—Alienation—Alienation not binding on family as whole—Mother is no more bound than sons—Mortgage—After-born son, if can challenge—Cause of action—His rights—Nature of alienation in joint family—Member, if can own part of family property as his separate property—Partition—Mother's share, when arises.

The mother is no more bound by an alienation which does not bind the family as a whole than are the sons. [p. 189, col. 2.]

An after-born son has no cause of action to sue for a declaration that a mortgage is not binding on him nor can he create a cause of action for himself by waiting until he is dispossessed and then suing for possession; nor can he set up rights while he could not urge in a suit of his own by way of defence when the mortgagee sues. The cause of action to challenge the mortgage arises at the date of its execution and hence a son born and conceived after that date cannot challenge the mortgage though he still has a right to redeem. 191 Ind. Cas. 241 (1), explained and applied. [p. 190, col. 2.]

The real alienor according to orthodox Hindu ideas is the family and not the individual who puts his signature to the deed. [p. 191, col. 1.]

An individual member of a joint Hindu family can own separate property. The family can by agreement break off a piece of its property (whether tangible or a share) and hand it over to one of its members for him to have and to hold as his separate estate. They can do this just as effectually and completely as they could to a complete outsider, and yet remain joint. In any one of these ways it is possible for an individual member to acquire for himself as his own separate property a part of the family estate. [p. 191, cols. 1 & 2.]

Under Hindu Law the mother's share does not accrue until the family partition.

Judgment.—After the decision of the Full Bench only two points remain. The first relates to the fields S. No. 17, 5/2, 6/2, 63/2 and 88. Both sides are agreed that the shares which the 6th and 7th defendants, Janrao and Dnyandeo, have in these fields should be released from the mortgage. But they are not agreed about the extent of their shares.

According to the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs the family consists of Govinda (defendant No. 4), and his two sons, Janrao and Dnyandeo, (defendants Nos 6 and 7), and the mother of the sons, the 5th defendant Saraswatibai. The learned Counsel contends that each would have a share on partition and therefore the extent on the 6th and 7th defendants' interests is only 1/2 and so that is all that can be released.

The contention of the other side is that if the mother is taken into account then her share would also have to be excluded and that would leave the plaintiffs with only 1/4th. But, they say, no question about her share has been raised hitherto and so all they claim is 2/3rd. We think this is sound. If the mother's rights are to be taken into account, then the plaintiffs can only get 1/4 because the mother is no more bound by an alienation which does not bind the family as a whole than are the sons. But, as Counsel for the defendants admits, no question about her share has been raised, and in any event her share does not accrue until the family partitions (which it has not done hitherto), therefore all that the defendants can claim is 2/3rds. We accordingly direct that a 2/3rd share in the fields mentioned be released from the mortgage and be excluded from the decree.

The next question is more difficult and pivots around the decision of the Full Bench. Lalji's son Bapurao (now the 1st defendant) was born on December 9, 1926. The cause of action on the mortgage which this suit seeks to enforce did not accrue till March 21, 1927. Therefore Bapurao was born after the mortgage (which is dated March 21, 1922), was executed and before the cause of action on it accrued. Bapurao's learned Counsel relies on the following passages in the Full Bench decision (Kashinath v. Bapurao (1)):

"The cause of action arises at the moment the alienee enters into possession where the suit is for possession. It may be there are other causes of action arising at different dates.

Whichever cause of action is in question it belongs to those in existence when the cause of action arises.

* * *
If a co-parcener is not in existence when such a cause of action arises he cannot sue.

When the co-parceners are defendants different considerations arise."

It is argued by him that Bapurao was in existence when the cause of action in this suit arose and consequently had he been a plaintiff he could have sued for a declaration that the mortgage did not bind him; and if he could have done that, then he can set up the same right by way of defence. It is also argued in the alternative that even if he could not have sued the Full Bench decides that different considerations apply in the case of defendants and therefore, as he is in possession, he can challenge the mortgage.

This is not a proper interpretation of our decision. The question referred was whether an after-born co-parcener can challenge an alienation made before the date of his conception. It was assumed all the way through the arguments, and that assumption underlies much of our opinions, that if he could challenge the alienation by way of suit he would also be able to do so by way of defence. The test was whether he could sue and as that answered the other question attention was concentrated on the first point.

As regards the other point, namely that "when the co-parceners are defendants different considerations arise", it was not developed because the case was not argued from that angle. It was never doubted or contested that the after-born son has a right of redemption indeed that is why he was joined as a defendant to this suit but as advantage has been taken of this sentence in the Full Bench decision by the learned Counsel who appeared before us but who had not appeared either at the earlier stage of the case or before the Full Bench, it will be necessary to explain what was meant.

A mortgage splits the bundle of rights which constitute ownership into two parts. One part passes out of the mortgagor and goes to the mortgagee. This is the transfer of the interest spoken of in s. 58 (a) of the T. P. Act. The other part remains in the mortgagor and constitutes the right to redeem. As we say it has never been doubted that the right to redeem resides in the family even after the mortgage and that therefore the after-born son obtains an interest in that right by birth the moment he is conceived. The dispute in this case, and before the Full Bench, did not touch that right at all. The arguments there were confined, so far as mortgages are concerned, (and this is a mortgage case), to the other part of the bundle of rights which pass to the mortgagee. Those rights pass under the mortgage. Therefore unless the mortgage can be challenged the mortgagee is entitled to have those rights enforced. The Full Bench decides that if the challenging co-parcener is born (or to be more accurate, conceived) after the cause of action arises, then he cannot challenge the alienation.

But the cause of action spoken of there is the cause of action which accrues to the after-born son to challenge the alienation and not to the cause of action which accrues to the alienee to enforce his transfer. The cause of action to challenge a mortgage accrues at the date of the mortgage. A suit for a declaration can be filed the moment the mortgage is executed. In other cases the cause of action would accrue at other times, for example, in the case of dispossession by a trespasser, it would accrue at the date of the dispossession when the right to sue for possession first accrued; so also in the case of an unregistered sale or mortgage which requires registration. We did not mean that in the case of a mortgage, though the after-born son has no cause of action to bring a declaratory suit he can create a cause of action for himself by waiting until he is dispossessed and then suing for possession; nor did we mean that though he could not have sued for a declaration he can set up rights which he could not urge in a suit of his own by way of defence when the mortgagee sues. In the view we take the after-born son has no cause of action at all if the transfer is good, at the time, or if it must be deemed to have been good by reason of the co-parceners in being at the date of the alienation not choosing to challenge it within the time allowed by law.

In the Full Bench case we were both agreed as to the conclusion and Bose, J. fully concurred with the view taken by the Chief Justice but he also felt that the matter could be traced back even further than the Chief Justice had gone and that the root of the rule is to be found in the doctrine of national partition. According to his view there is no escape from the logic of the ancient and rigid Hindu Law position which is still followed in Allahabad unless the doctrine of notional partition is introduced.

As he pointed out, according to orthodox Hindu notions all family property is owned by the fluctuating entity known as the joint family. No individual co-parcener owns any part of that property as an individual. Until partition he has no separate rights and no separate share. He has no separate existence for those purposes. His identity is merged in the family as completely as an ounce of water or sand is merged in the gallon or pound of which it forms a part, and until partition his separate identity cannot be distinguished for these purposes any more than can that of the ounce of water or sand. If there is an alienation it must be the family as a complete whole which alienates. If not, there is no alienation. There is nobody to alienate. There is nothing which this nobody can own to alienate. It is true that the family either acts as a whole, each member joining in the alienation, or that it acts through the manager or whoever else is invested with authority to act on its behalf. But the real alienor according to orthodox Hindu ideas is the family and not the individual who puts his signature to the deed.

But the moment there is a partition, however partial it may be, the moment a piece of property, whether a plot of land or an ascertained share, is broken off from the whole and given to an individual member as his separate estate of course he can do what he likes with it. An individual member of a joint Hindu family can own separate property and a joint Hindu family can separate and yet not divide its estate by metes and bounds. In between these extremes lies another possibility. The family can by agreement break off a piece of its property (whether tangible or a share) and hand it over to one of its members for him to have and to hold as his separate estate. They can do this just as effectually and completely as they could to a complete outsider, and yet remain joint. In any one of these ways it is possible for an individual member to acquire for himself as his own separate property a part of the family estate.

If they partition they can assign to any given member any part of the property they please. It does not matter whether it is equal to his share or not. It does not matter that it comprises the entire family estate. That is their affair. If they are satisfied nobody else can question their action except that the after-born son may in certain limited circumstance claim to reopen such a partition. Those circumstances are set out at p. 613* of the Full Bench decision by Bose, J. in his opinion. So also, if the family chooses to gift its entire estate to a stranger. If the family agrees, there is, an end of the matter. The property transferred goes and is lost to the family from that moment and there is nothing to which the after-born son can succeed. The position is the same if the transfer is made to a co-parcener. In his case it may be made in anticipation of partition as the whole or part of the share which he is to receive when and if the family divides, or it may be a pure gift, or it may be for any other consideration. But it is clear that such transfer came to be made provided the whole family agrees.

Of course the members of the family then in being (or the after-born son in the circumstances mentioned) could get such an agreement set aside if suitable grounds existed, or they could show that they had never agreed, but if the agreement and transfer were really made, they would be binding and valid until avoided. All this is, we think, commonplace. The next step is not as easy.

The inconvenience of the orthodox position was early recognised though its logic is inescapable and attempts were made to break away from it. This caused a split in which one side adhered and still adheres, as in Allahabad, to the extreme orthodox and logical position, while the other took a more liberal attitude which has resulted in the view we take of alienations in this Province. But the difficulty all through has been to trace this down to some logical and legal principle. Bose, J. has endeavoured to do this in his opinion in the Full Bench case and according to his view the more liberal among the early commentators developed what we might term the principle of notional partition, that is to say, they regarded a transfer first as a partition, partial or otherwise, which was immediately followed by the alienation. Looked at from this point of view the family is deemed to separate off the alienated property from the rest of the family property and hand it over to the alienating member. As we have shown this can be done in several ways and it does not matter for these purposes which is selected because they all come to the same thing in the end, namely, that the property passes completely out of the family and is lost to it from the moment of the alienation. Nor does the fact that any co-parcener then in being has the privilege of avoiding this notional partition make it any the less binding till avoided. If they choose not to avoid it or to challenge it, it stands, and if they die before doing so, their right to avoid lapses and no one else not claiming through or under them can exercise it on their behalf.

• But whether this ratio decidendi, which is that of Bose, J. is right or not (and we can see difficulties, as for instance where there are minors at the date of the alienation) we are both of opinion that the Full Bench decides that the son who is born or conceived after the cause of action to challenge the alienation arises cannot do so. The cause of action to challenge the mortgage here arose on March 21, 1922. Bapurao was born and conceived after this and so he cannot challenge the mortgage though he still has a right to redeem.

As, in our view, the Full Bench was decided the point, it will be idle to examine the cases cited at the last hearing because we cannot now reopen the question.

The result is that the appeal succeeds except as regards the 2/3rd share in the fields we have specified above belonging to the 6th and 7th defendants. The decree of the lower Court will therefore be set aside and a foreclosure decree will now be passed in the plaintiffs' favour in respect of all the mortgaged property except the 2/3rd share mentioned above. The costs of the suit and of the appeal will be paid by the defendants. A further six months will be allowed for redemption.

DEPARTMENT, DELHI—RESPONDENT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I, r. 3—“Necessary” and “proper” party, distinction between—Tea Control Act (VIII of 1938), s. 7 (2)—Appeal under s. 7 (2)—Central Government or Tea Licensing Committee, if necessary party—Joint controller, if can engage Counsel in absence of authority from Committee.

The distinction between a “necessary” and a “proper” party to an action, appeal or other proceedings, is well recognized. A “necessary” party is one, whose presence on the record is enjoined by law, or in whose absence no effective decision can at all be given. Without such party the action, appeal or proceeding is not properly constituted and is liable to be dismissed on this ground alone. A “proper” party, on the other hand, is one whose presence is not essential for the constitution of the suit, appeal or proceeding, but whom it may nevertheless be desirable, or even necessary, to have before the Court in order to properly, or completely and adequately, adjudicate on the matter involved. It is the duty of the person, bringing the action, appeal or proceeding to implead all “necessary” parties to it and his omission to do so is a fatal defect, which if not remedied, with the permission of the Court within the period prescribed by law, results in its dismissal. No such duty, however, is cast on him in the case of a “proper” party nor does the absence of such a person from record entail any such serious consequences. [p. 194, col. 2.]

In appeals under s. 7 (2), Tea Control Act, it is not necessary for the appellant to make the Central Govt., or Indian Tea Licensing Committee a party to the appeal. The Court may, however, issue notice to the Committee to appear and support its decision, or the Committee may apply to be permitted to be heard, and if necessary to lead evidence to show that its order was correct. Similarly, in some cases the Central Govt., also might like to be heard if any question of principle is involved, and the Court may permit it to do so. Suprakash Das v. Indian Tea Licensing Committee (1), explained, Tynemouth Corporation v. Attorney-General (2), 109 Ind. Cas. 618 (3) and 103 Ind. Cas. 533 (4), distinguished. [p. 195, col. 1.]

The joint controller cannot engage or instruct a Counsel on behalf of the Tea Licensing Committee in the absence of any rule, or resolution of the Committee, authorising the joint controller to do so. [p. 195, col. 2.]

F. As. against an order of Dalip Singh, J., dated April 5, 1939.

Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Sleem, Advocate-General, for the Respondent (Central Govt.).

Mr. Ishwar Das Khanna, for the Indian Tea Licensing Committee.

Tek Chand, J.—Four Appeals, F. A. O. Nos. 26, 37, 38 and 43 of 1939, have been preferred to this Court under s. 7 (2), Tea Control Act, 1938, by the "owners" of four tea-estates in Kangra District against certain orders of the India Tea Licensing Committee passed under s. 14 of the Act. The appellants in the four appeals respectively are, Thakar Hari Ram of the Hailaynagar Tea Estate (F. A. O. No. 26); Mastak Chand of the Kaulpur Tea Estate (No. 37); Manak Chand of the Talasham Tea Estate (No. 38) and Onkar Singh of the Onkar Singh Tea Estate (No. 43). In two of the appeals, namely F. A. O. Nos. 26 and 43 the sole respondent impleaded is the Central Govt. while in the other two appeals, (F. A. O. Nos. 37 and 38), the Central Govt. and the Indian Tea Licensing Committee "through the joint controller" have both been made respondents.

These appeals came up for hearing in the first instance before a Single Bench. There the first question raised was as to the frame of the appeals under s. 7 (2) of the Act. The learned Advocate-General who appeared on behalf of the Central Govt., stated that the Govt. was not a necessary party, that it had no interest in the subject-matter of any of the appeals and that it did not wish to be heard. Mr. Ishar Das Khanna appeared on behalf of the joint controller in the two cases in which the Indian Tea Licensing Committee had been impleaded and he applied for an adjournment to enable him to file certain documents which he urged, would assist the Court in coming to a correct decision on the points involved. He further urged that the Committee was an essential party to appeals under s. 7 (2) and that those appeals in which the Committee had not been impleaded within the prescribed period of limitation were not properly constituted, and should be dismissed. Counsel for the appellants in these appeals contended, on the other hand, that under the law it was not necessary for the appellants to implead any party as a respondent, and that they had impleaded the Central Govt. ex majori cautela, the cases being the earliest of their kind in this province, and that the Central Govt. be struck off the record. He further urged that the "Indian Tea Licensing Committee," though a body created by the statute, was not a legal persona that the joint controller had no lawful authority to represent it in legal proceedings and that if the Court permitted the Committee to present its case in these proceedings, it would only be done by Counsel, who had been instructed by all its members and not by the joint controller. As the cases were of first impression and the Act or the rules framed thereunder did not contain any specific provisions dealing with the points raised, the appeals were referred to a Division Bench.

Before us, the matter was argued at considerable length but eventually all Counsel were agreed that under the Act, as it stands, it was not legally necessary for the appellants to implead any party as a respondent in such appeals. The appeal to the High Court under the Act is a very peculiar proceeding. It is an appeal to a judicial tribunal against an administrative order passed by the "Indian Tea Licensing Committee," constituted under the Act to control the export of tea and the extension of its cultivation in India. The only provision in the Act dealing with the matter is contained in s. 7 (2) which gives an appeal to a tea-estate aggrieved by an order passed by the Committee under s. 14. But the tea-estate concerned is given the choice of the forum of appeal. It may prefer the appeal either to the Central Govt. or the High Court at its option. But once it has made its choice and lodged the appeal either in the High Court or the Central Govt., this will bar an appeal to the other. There is no other provision in the Act dealing with appeals. Certain other sections of the Act confer the power to make rules and the only rule, which contains a reference to appeals is No. 10 of the rules framed by the Central Govt. and promulgated in notification No. 201 (3)-T. R. (I. E. R.)/38 dated July 16, 1938, which lays down that "an estate appealing under s. 7 (2) of the Act to the High Court of the province within which the estate is situated shall at the same time intimate to the Central Govt. that an appeal to the High Court has been filed."

It was at one stage of the argument contended by Counsel for the appellants that this rule contemplated that the Central Govt. is to be impleaded as a party respondent in the appeal. But the rule does not say so, and, as rightly pointed out by the learned Advocate-General, the object of the rule appears to be merely to give information to the Central Govt. of the fact that an appeal had been filed in the High Court, so that the owner of the estate concerned may not, concurrently or subsequently, file an appeal to the Central Govt. against the same order. The rule framed by the Central Govt. thus throws no light on the point, nor has the High Court framed any rule regulating the procedure of appeals preferred to it under the Act. In the absence of any provision in the statute, or the rules framed thereunder, it cannot be said that the Central Govt. or the Indian Tea

Licensing Committee is a necessary party to the appeal. It may be that the Court, finding it difficult to effectively adjudicate on the points raised in the appeal, may require the Committee to place before it all the materials in its possession bearing on the matter and in most cases the Court will permit, or require, the Committee, as the only custodian of the materials on which the order under appeal was passed, to appear before it. But this is very far from saying that the appeal is not properly constituted because the Committee has not been impleaded as a party respondent and for this reason it should be dismissed.

Mr. Ishar Das Khanna has placed before us a copy of the judgment, recently delivered by a Single Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Suproakash Das v. Indian Tea Licensing Committee (1) (since reported in 43 C W N 820). In that case a tea estate, which had preferred an appeal to the High Court under s. 7 of the Act had originally impleaded the Indian Tea Licensing Committee as a respondent, but before the date of hearing an application was made by the appellant for deletion of the name of the Committee on the ground that it was not a necessary party. This application was dismissed, the learned Judge being of the opinion that "the Committee was a proper and necessary respondent" in an appeal under s. 7 (2). This conclusion is based on the reasoning that the Committee is an administrative body empowered by the statute to take certain decisions on such materials, as may be available to it in order to enable it to control the export of tea and the extension of the cultivation of tea, and that on appeal from orders passed by it, the High Court, in order to reach a correct decision will not proceed ex parte but "may think it necessary to allow the Committee to support its order by the materials before it or even to adduce further evidence, as it might think necessary."

With great respect we agree with the conclusion of the learned Judge as stated in the sentence just quoted, and in the decision dismissing the application for the deletion of the name of the Committee from the record, once it had been brought before the Court and the Court considered its presence necessary for the disposal of the appeal. We however think that this case does not support the contention originally put forward by Mr. Ishwar Das Khanna that the Committee is a "necessary" party to the appeal in the sense that the failure of the appellant to implead it within time is fatal to the maintainability of the appeal.

(1) 43 C W N 820; 1 L R (1939) 2 Cal. 277.

It is no doubt true that in an earlier part of the judgment in Suproakash Das v. Indian Tea Licensing Committee (1) the learned Judge has used the expression "necessary party" and "proper party" (if we may venture to say so with great deference) indiscriminately. But it is clear from the judgment that the intention was not to use the words "necessary" or "essential party" in the sense in which Mr. Khanna contends they were used. The distinction between a "necessary" and a "proper" party to an action, appeal or other proceedings, is, of course, well recognized. A "necessary" party is one, whose presence on the record is enjoined by law, or in whose absence no effective decision can at all be given. Without such party the action, appeal or proceeding is not properly constituted and is liable to be dismissed on this ground alone. A "proper" party, on the other hand, is one whose presence is not essential for the constitution of the suit, appeal or proceeding, but whom it may nevertheless be desirable, or even necessary, to have before the Court in order to properly, or completely and adequately, adjudicate on the matter involved. As observed in Pomeroy on Remedies (s. 330)

"necessary parties defendants are those without whom no decree at all can be rendered: proper parties defendants are those whose presence renders the decree more effectual: and all the proper parties are those by whose presence the decree becomes a complete determination of all the questions which can arise, and of all the rights which are connected with the subject-matter of the controversy."

It is the duty of the person, bringing the action, appeal or proceeding to implead all "necessary" parties to it and his omission to do so is a fatal defect, which if not remedied, with the permission of the Court within the period prescribed by law, results in its dismissal. No such duty however is cast on him in the case of a "proper" party nor does the absence of such a person from record entail any such serious consequences. There is nothing in the Indian Tea Control Act which might be taken to impose, expressly or by necessary implication, on the owner of a tea estate, appealing under s. 7 (2) the duty to implead the Committee as a party or which lays down that on his failure to do so the appeal cannot be heard. Nor do the cases cited in Suproakash Das v. Indian Tea Licensing Committee (1) support this conclusion. In Tynemouth Corporation v. Attorney-General (2) all that Lord Davey laid down was that in appeals from orders passed by the Licensing Justices under the

Licensing Act,

"the only proper respondents to the appeal are the Justices themselves, who are served and may appear in the interests of the public to support their own decision."

His Lordship did not say that the Justices were "necessary" or "essential" parties to the appeal, in whose absence the appeal is not properly constituted. Nor is this laid down in any of the other English cases cited in that judgment. They merely rule that the appellant as well as the Justices may be allowed to lead further evidence in appeal. Similarly, in the Calcutta cases referred to, all that was held was that in appeals to the Court of Small Causes under s. 141, Cal. Municipal Act, 1923, from certain orders passed by the executive officer of the Corporation, the appellant must be given "an opportunity of adducing evidence if he wants, to show that the decision of which he complains is wrong" Corporation of Calcutta v. Sm. Jalajabasi Devi (3). Neither in this case nor in Corporation of Calcutta v. Keamuddin (4) was the question as to whether the Corporation was a "necessary" or a "proper" party to such appeals was considered.

We hold, therefore, that in appeals under s. 7 (2), Tea Control Act, it is not necessary for the appellant to make the Central Govt. or Indian Tea Licensing Committee a party to the appeal. The Court may, however, issue notice to the Committee to appear and support its decision, or the Committee may apply to be permitted to be heard, and if necessary to lead evidence to show that its order was correct. Similarly, in some cases the Central Govt. also might like to be heard if any question of principle is involved, and the Court may permit it to do so. For the foregoing reasons, we would hold that none of these appeals can be said to be improperly constituted. As the Central Govt. does not wish to be heard in any of the four cases before us, we direct that its name be struck off in each case. There will be no order as to the costs of the Advocate-General, as the cases where of first impression and the provisions of the Act relating to this matter were not clear. Though we have held that the Indian Tea Licensing Committee is not a necessary party to these appeals, we think it proper to allow it to be heard in support of the orders complained of in each case. The Committee has already been impleaded as a party respondent in

Mr. Ishwar Das Khanna has been instructed by the Joint Controller to appear on behalf of the Committee in all these cases. But it appears to us that in the absence of any rule, or resolution of the Committee, authorising the Joint Controller to engage and instruct Counsel on its behalf. Mr. Khanna cannot act or plead on behalf the Committee. Mr. Khanna asks for time to obtain the necessary vakalatnama from the members of the Committee. We grant this prayer and adjourn the case to June 20, 1939.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 27, O. XIII, r. 10, s. 100—Additional evidence—When can be allowed to be produced—Record of another case sent for—Use of important documents in it, as evidence—Procedure to be followed—Fraud—Finding as to, is one of fact.

In order to entitle the appellant to produce additional evidence in the appeal the essential conditions required by r. 27 of O. XLI of the Civil P. C., must be satisfied. Where no attempt was made to produce the documents in lower Courts when they could have been produced and they are not required by the Court to enable it to pronounce judgment or for any other substantial cause, such additional documentary evidence cannot be admitted in appeal. [p. 197, col. 1.]

The power to send for the record of another case and to inspect the same does not carry with it the power to treat the whole of the record or a part thereof as evidence in the case. If upon inspection of the record the trial Court came across an important document as the summons which in its opinion either threw important light on the question at issue or was of material assistance in ascertaining the truth, it is open to the Court to adopt proper proceedings to have the document brought on the record and proved according to law before such document can be used as evidence in the case. Mere summoning of the record does not, however, render the entire record ipso facto evidence in the case. 18 Ind. Cas. 857 (2), 98 Ind. Cas. 881 (3), 111 Ind. Cas. 361 (4) and 131 Ind. Cas. 374 (5), referred to. [p. 198, col. 1.]

The finding of the lower Appellate Court on the question of fraud is a clear finding of fact which cannot be challenged in second appeal. [p. 198, col. 2.]

Judgment.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for a declaration filed by the plaintiff-respondent, which was dismissed by the trial Court but has been decreed by the lower Appellate Court in appeal.

The plaintiff-respondent brought a suit for a declaration that the decree dated April 20, 1926, passed by the Subordinate Judge of Bahraich against her in favour of the defendant-appellant is null and void on the ground of fraud and collusion. The plaintiff is the daughter of one Baijnath and has two brothers, Mohan Lal (Not a party to the suit) and Gokul Prasad, the defendant-appellant. Baijnath got the plaintiff, Mst. Mahadei Kuar, married some time in 1887 to one Kanhaiya Lal while she was only 11 years old. Kanhaiya Lal made a registered will on September 11, 1889, by virtue of which the plaintiff became the absolute owner of the property left by her husband. Kanhaiya Lal died on September 24, 1889. Kanhaiya Lal had another wife Mst. Bhagwan Dei when he married Mst. Mahadei. Bhagwan Dei died in 1916. Mst. Mahadei's allegation was that Gokul Prasad filed a suit for maintenance against her in 1934 and that in that suit he (Gokul Prasad) in replication alleged that he had obtained a declaratory decree in respect of the property owned and possessed by Mst. Mahadei on April 20, 1926, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bahraich. Gokul Prasad filed a copy of this decree and a copy of the written-statement purporting to have been filed by Raj Bahadur, general agent of Mst. Mahadei, on her behalf in that suit. Mst. Mahadei alleged that she came to know for the first time about the aforesaid decree and the written-statement on April 13, 1934, that Gokul Prasad had filed a suit in 1926, to the effect that he was the reversioner of the property by virtue of a certain oral agreement between Baijnath and Kanhaiya Lal to the latter's property and that this agreement had been admitted on behalf of Mst. Mahadei in that suit. The plaintiff's case was that she was an old pardanashin lady who was not literate and could only sign her name in Nagri and that Raj Bahadur, her general agent, used to do pairvi in her case on her behalf, that she used to sign papers at the instance of Raj Bahadur whom she fully trusted, and that Raj Bahadur having colluded with Gokul Prasad had made a false admission of his claim and had got a decree passed against her by practising fraud. He denied the alleged agreement by virtue of which Gokul Prasad claimed her husband's property as a reversioner. The plaintiff imputed fraud both to Gokul Prasad and to Raj Bahadur.

The defendant Gokul Prasad denied all the allegations and asserted that the plaintiff was fully aware of the suit of 1926 and the decree passed in that case and pleaded that the suit was not maintainable and was barred by the principle of res judicata. The plea of limitation was also raised in the case.

The trial Court held that the decree of 1926 was not obtained by fraud or collusion. It further held that the plaintiff knew of the decree from the very beginning and consequently the present suit filed by her on April 14, 1936, was barred by time. The suit was therefore dismissed.

The learned District Judge in appeal set aside the findings of the trial Court and decreed the suit. The defendant thereupon preferred a second appeal to this Court.

An application under O. XLI, r. 27 of the Civil P. C. was filed by the defendant-appellant praying for the admission of two judgments in appeal. One of these judgments was passed by a learned Single Judge of this Court in Second Civil Appeal No. 139 of 1935 on September 23, 1936, in a suit for maintenance brought by the defendant-appellant against the plaintiff-respondent. The other document is also a judgment passed by the Munsif of Qaiserganj, Bahraich, on March 18, 1937, in another maintenance suit. It appears to us to be necessary to dispose of this application before dealing with the appeal.

It is stated in this application that by virtue of the two judgments sought to be filed in the case the matter is concluded by ss. 10 and 11 of the Civil P. C., as the points involved in this case were materially and substantially in issue in the two cases decided by the two judgments. Having heard learned Counsel in support of the application, we are of opinion that no case has been made out for the production of additional evidence in the appeal. As regards the judgment of the Chief Court, which is sought to be filed in the case, it may be noted that the suit in that case had been decreed by the trial Court on May 18, 1934, and the decision of the trial Court was confirmed by the lower Appellate Court on March 7, 1935. The present suit was filed on April 14, 1936, and the written statement was filed on May 11, 1936. The judgment of the Chief Court was delivered on September 23, 1936. No attempt was however, made by the defendant to file the aforesaid judgment before the trial Court in the present case and no plea under s. 10 or s. 11 of the Civil P. C., was raised on the basis of this judgment. The present suit was dismissed on November 30, 1936, by the trial Court and was decreed in appeal on April 14, 1937. The other judgment, namely the judgment of the Munsif of Qaiserganj, Bahraich, which was passed on March 18, 1937, could have been filed before the lower Appellate Court in the present case but no attempt was made to produce it. In the memorandum of appeal filed in this Court the plea raised in the application have not been referred to. The application itself does not state reasons why these documents were not produced in the lower Courts after they were available. In order to entitle the appellant to produce additional evidence in the appeal the essential conditions required by r. 27 of O. XLI of the Civil P. C. must be satisfied. We are of opinion that the requirements of O. XLI, r. 27 (1) (b) and (c) have not been satisfied in the present case. According to sub-cl. (b) of r. 27 (1) which was added by the Chief Court, it is obligatory on the party seeking to produce additional evidence in appeal to show that the evidence sought to be produced after the exercise of due diligence was not within his knowledge or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree or order under appeal was passed or made, nor is the case governed by sub-cl. (c) of r. 27 of O. XLI of the Civil P. C., which requires that the Appellate Court can admit the document only if it requires the production of the document to enable it to pronounce judgment or for any other substantial cause. (See Parsotim v. Lal Mohar, L. R. 58 I. A. 254). (1). We, therefore, see no reason whatever to admit the additional documentary evidence in appeal and reject this application.

This disposes of the pleas under ss. 10 and 11 of the Civil P. C. raised on behalf of the defendant-appellant for the first time before this Court.

As regards the merits of this appeal, (1) 58 I. A. 254; 132 Ind. Cas. 721; A. I. R. 1931 P. C. 143; 33 Bom. L. R. 1015; (1931) A. L. J. 513; 35 C. W. N. 786; Ind. Rul. (1931) P. C. 209; 13 L. W. 76; 54 C. L. J. 1; 12 P. L. T. 683; (1931) M. W. N. 929; 10 Pat. 654; 61 M. L. J. 489 (P. C.).

it has been contended on behalf of the defendant-appellant that neither fraud nor collusion had been proved in the case. It is also contended that the lower Appellate Court was not justified in holding that the procedure of the trial Court in summoning the record of the suit of 1926 for inspection was not warranted.

So far as the latter contention is concerned, it appears that the defendant-appellant had filed a copy of the written statement of Mst. Mahadei (Ex. A-12) filed in the suit of 1926 on her behalf by her agent, Raj Bahadur, and in order to prove this and other documents he had summoned the record. The trial Court discovered in the record a summons issued to Swami Dayal, another agent of Mst. Mahadei, which according to the report made on it had been served. Swami Dayal, who was produced by Mst. Mahadei in the present case, was not questioned either on her behalf or on behalf of the defendant whether he had received any summons and whether it bore his signature and whether he had informed Mst. Mahadei of the suit. The learned District Judge recorded the opinion that the trial Court was not justified in using the summons of Swami Dayal as evidence in the case and consequently excluded it from consideration in coming to the finding upon the main question in the case. We are satisfied that the decision of the lower Appellate Court upon this point is correct. Order XIII, r. 10 (1) of the Civil P. C. lays down :—

"The Court may of its own motion, and may in its discretion upon the application of any of the parties to a suit, send for either from its own records or from any other Court, the record of any other suit or proceeding, and inspect the same."

This shows that it is open to the Court either of its own motion or on the application of any party to the suit to send for the record of a case and inspect the same. Sub-cl. (3) of r. 10 of O. XIII of the Civil P. C. runs as follows :

"Nothing contained in this rule shall be deemed to enable the Court to use in evidence any document which under the law of evidence would be inadmissible in the suit."

It is clear that the record had been sent for for the specific purpose of proving certain documents. The summons to Swami Dayal was not one of the documents which was intended to be proved as no copy of the summons had been produced in the case. Further, the summons was inadmissible in evidence without proof of the signature of Swami Dayal as required by s. 67 of the Indian Evi. Act. Section 35 of the Indian Evi. Act does not render the summons admissible inasmuch as the signature of Swami Dayal purporting to have been made by him on the back of the summons cannot be said to be an entry in any public or official book, register or record and made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty. That being so, it is quite clear that the trial Court was not justified in using the summons as evidence in the case and relying upon it in support of its findings. The power to send for the record of another case and to inspect the same does not in our opinion carry with it the power to treat the whole of the record or a part thereof as evidence in the case. If upon inspection of the record the trial Court came across an important document as the summons in the present case, which in its opinion either threw important light on the question at issue or was of material assistance in ascertaining the truth, it was open to that Court to adopt proper proceedings to have the document brought on the record and proved according to law before such document could be used as evidence in the case. Mere summoning of the record does not, however, render the entire record ipso facto evidence in the case. In Punja v. Bhadu (18 Ind. Cas., 857) (2) the lower Appellate Court sent for and inspected the record apparently behind the backs of the parties attached the whole record to the file of the case and used as substantive evidence for the purpose of adjudicating upon the appeal. It was held that the procedure was clearly irregular. It was further held that s. 165 of the Evi. Act, 1872, and O. XIII, r. 10, Civil P. C., 1908, are intended to arm the Court with a power of initiative in getting at the truth. But the act of sending for a document under s. 165, Evi. Act, or for a record under O. XIII, r. 10, does not ipso facto make such document or record evidence in the case. If the Court finds in the document or record so sent for relevant evidence, or a guide to relevant evidence to be found somewhere else, proceedings must be adopted, if such evidence may be properly admitted at that stage, to have it brought into the trial according to the provisions of law. A similar view has been taken by the Lahore High Court in Phullu v. Ghulam Nabi (A. I. R. 1927 Lahore 69 (2) (3)), Abdul Ghani v. Faqir Muhammad (A. I. R. 1929 Lahore 78) (4), Maya Dhari v. Chuni Lal-Panna Lal (A. I. R. 1931 Lahore 119) (5).

As regards the first contention, the learned

ed District Judge upon a consideration of the evidence and the circumstances in the case came to the conclusion that Mst. Mahadei had no knowledge of the institution of the suit in 1926, that she was neither informed by Swami Dayal, who was her general agent, of the service of any summons of the suit, nor by Raj Bahadur, another general agent. He also found that the written statement, purporting to have been filed on her behalf by Raj Bahadur, did not bear her signature and was not filed within her knowledge or under her instructions. He further found that Ex. A-12 the application filed by Raj Bahadur to abide by the oath of Gokil Prasad, was not proved to bear the signature of Mst. Mahadei, nor were the particulars of that application explained to her. The statement of Raj Bahadur, who was examined on behalf of the defendant was disbelieved and the statement of Mst. Mahadei plaintiff was believed by the learned District Judge. Raj Bahadur in his evidence admitted that Mst. Mahadei did not sign the application, Ex. A-12, in his presence but that he gave the application to one Jugul Kishore to take it to her and obtain her signature thereon. His finding in effect was that Mst. Mahadei was totally ignorant of the suit of 1926 and the decree which followed. As regards the ante-nuptial agreement between Kanhaiya Lal and Baijnath set up in the suit of 1926 to the effect that Gokul Prasad would succeed as a reversioner upon the death of Mst. Mahadei to the property left by Kanhaiya Lal, the learned Judge came to the conclusion upon a consideration of the entire circumstances of the case that such an agreement was not established. His final conclusion was that Mst. Mahadei had been deliberately kept in the dark about the suit of 1926 and the decree against her was obtained fraudulently. It cannot be denied that active concealment of the proceedings of 1926 resulting in a decree being passed against the plaintiff is clear fraud and vitiates the decree. The finding of the lower Appellate Court on the question of fraud is a clear finding of fact which cannot be challenged in second appeal.

There is no substance in this appeal, which is accordingly dismissed with costs.

s. Appeal dismissed.

Bihar Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885 as amended in 1934), s. 26-N, whether applies where transferee had been lawfully ejected in execution of proper rent decree before amending Act came into force.

Though s. 26-N, Bihar Ten. Act, was expressly made retrospective it could not affect rent decrees which had been obtained and which had been fully executed previous to the section coming into force. The section would apply to all cases which had not been the subject-matter of litigation or which were actually the subject-matter of litigation when the amending act came into force, namely, on June 10, 1935. The section can have no application whatsoever when the transferee had been lawfully ejected before the Amending Act of 1934 came into operation. 160 Ind. Cas. 105 (2) (1), relied on.

Hence where a decree when obtained was a proper rent decree and in execution of that decree the auction purchaser had obtained the possession of the lands purchased by him and ejected the transferees of the tenant in due course of law before the Amending Act of 1934 was even passed and long before the Act actually came into force, s. 26-N cannot affect the rights of the auction purchaser.

A. from a decision of the District Judge of Darbhanga, dated May 23, 1939.

Messrs. Hareshwar Pd. Sinha and R. K. Choudhary, for the Appellants.

Messrs. L. K. Jha, P. Misra and A. B. Jha, for the Respondents.

Harries, C. J.—This is a defendant's appeal from a decree of the learned District Judge of Darbhanga reversing a decision of the learned Munsif and decreeing the plaintiff's claim for a declaration and possession of certain property.

To appreciate the points involved in the case, it will be necessary to set out the facts in some detail. Musan and Mahesh were two brothers who held a holding of 7 bighas 17 khattas 1 dhur. In the Record of Rights, however, the holding was recorded in the name of these two brothers and Maksudan; but both the lower Courts have come to the conclusion that Maksudan was not a joint owner of the holding but was some kind of transferee of a very small portion of 6 kattas odd by sale or gift or some such like transaction. Mahesh died issueless, and the holding was inherited by Musan. On January 31, 1905 Musan sold 1 bigha 10 kattas of this holding to Jagmohan Misser. On May 31, 1927, the father of plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 10 took a usufruct-uary mortgage of this 1 bigha 10 kattas of land from Rajkant Misser, who were the heirs of Jagmohan Misser.

In the year 1929 or thereabouts Musan died leaving his son Abhinandan and a grandson, Sitaram, a son of deceased son Harikrishun. In the year 1930 after the death of Musan the Darbhanga Raj who were the proprietors of the land in question brought a rent suit against Abhinandan and Sitaram and obtained a decree. It appears that Abhinandan had a minor son Kamalakant who was not impleaded in this suit. Maksudan also was not impleaded neither were the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 10 who held a usufructuary mortgage of the 1 bigha 10 kattas which had been sold to Jagmohan Misser. The holding was sold in execution of this decree and was purchased by the defendant-appellant some time in 1933, and a sale certificate was granted to him, which is dated May 11, 1934. Delivery of possession was actually given to the defendant-appellant on July 26, 1934.

The plaintiffs who were the usufructuary mortgagees of 1 bigha 10 kattas instituted the present suit on July 2, 1937, for a declaration that they were entitled to the 1 bigha 10 kattas as usufructuary mortgagees and for possession of the same. They pleaded that the decree obtained by the Darbhanga Raj was not a rent decree but a simple money decree, because neither Kamalakant nor Maksudan who were interested in the tenancy were made parties nor were the mortgagees of mortgagors made parties. Accordingly they contended that the decree obtained in the absence of these interested and necessary parties was a simple money decree and that the sale in execution of that decree passed only the interest of the judgment-debtors and not the whole interest in the holding. The interest of the plaintiffs, therefore, did not pass by the execution sale and, therefore, they were entitled to possession as against the defendant-appellant who purchased in that sale.

The defendants pleaded that Maksudan had no interest in the holding itself and that he had been wrongly recorded in the Record of Rights. They also pleaded that Kamalakant had not been born at the date of the rent suit, and in any event if he was alive he was sufficiently represented by his father. As to the mortgagors and the mortgagees, the defendants pleaded that these transfers had not been recognised by the landlord, and, therefore, they were not necessary parties to the suit as the law stood at the time the rent suit was instituted.

The trial Court held that Maksudan had no interest in the holding, but if he had any interest it was only an interest in 6 kattas odd by some kind of transfer. As that transfer had never been recognised by the landlord he was not a necessary party to the rent suit when it was instituted. As to Kamalakant, the learned Munsif held that he was alive when the suit was instituted but that he was sufficiently represented by his father. As to the others, namely, the mortgagors and the mortgagees, they were not the necessary parties as the transfers had never been recognised by the landlord. Upon these findings the learned Munsif was satisfied that all the persons interested in the holding had been made parties and that the decree obtained was a rent decree in the true sense of the term. The holding, therefore, passed by the sale in execution of the decree, and the plaintiffs could not recover possession as against the defendant-appellant who had purchased the whole of the holding. He, therefore, dismissed the plaintiffs' claim.

On appeal, however, the lower Appellate Court reversed the finding of the learned Munsif holding that the decree was not a rent decree but only a simple money decree. The learned Judge appears to have agreed with the learned Munsif that Kamalakant was sufficiently represented and that Maksudan was only some kind of transferee in respect of 6 kattas odd in this property. The learned District Judge, however, was of opinion that Maksudan and the transferees of this 1 bigha 10 kattas were necessary parties to the suit. He relied upon s. 26-N, Bihar Ten. Act, which was expressly made retrospective. The learned District Judge was of opinion that with regard to those transfers the consent of the landlord would have to be presumed, and that being so, they were, when the suit was instituted, necessary parties and as they had not been impleaded the decree was only a money decree, and the plaintiffs' interest in the property was not affected by the sale in execution and the purchase by the defendant-appellant. He, therefore, gave the plaintiffs the declaration asked for and possession of the 1 bigha 10 kattas which was in dispute.

Counsel for the appellant has contended that the learned Judge was wrong in holding that Maksudan and the transferees of the 1 bigha 10 kattas odd were necessary parties at the time when this rent suit was instituted and decreed. He has contended that s. 26-N, Bihar Ten. Act as it then was though expressly made retrospective, cannot possibly affect the position because the rent decree was obtained and fully executed and possession obtained by the appellant before this section came into force. He has conceded that the act which was made retrospective would affect existing rights which had not already been made the subject of litigation and would affect rights which were the subject of litigation when the Act came into force. He, however, contends that the Act cannot affect decrees validly obtained before the Act came into force and the execution of such decrees which had been completed before the amendment was made in the law.

Section 26-N, was introduced into the Bihar Ten. Act by the Bihar Ten. (Amendment) Act, 1934. The assent of the Governor-General to this act is dated November 14, 1934, and by s. 1 (2) of the Act it was provided that it should come into force on such date as the Local Govt. might by Notification appoint. It actually came into force by Notification on June 10, 1935.

Section 26-N, which was then introduced into the statute, was in these terms:—

"Every person claiming an interest as landlord in any holding or portion thereof shall be deemed to have given his consent to every transfer of such holding or portion by sale, exchange, gift, or will made before the first day of January 1923, and in the case of the transfer of a portion of a holding, to have accepted the distribution of the rent of the holding as stated in the instrument of transfer, or if there is no such instrument as settled between the transferor and the transferee."

Section 26-O which was introduced into the Act by the same Amending Act provided that in the case of a transfer made on or after first day of January 1923, but before the date of the commencement of the Act, the transferee might pay to the landlord or deposit with the Collector a transfer fee as therein particularised and upon his complying with this condition the consent of every person claiming as interest as landlord in the holding or portion transferred should be deemed to have been given to the transfer. The Act contained no saving clause modifying the effect of ss. 26-N and 26-O.

In the case of K. C. Mukerjee, Official Receiver v. Ramratan Kuer (1), their Lordships of the Privy Council had to consider the effect of these sections. They held that ss. 26-N and 26-O, Bihar Ten. Act, are expressed and intended to have retrospective action and there being no saving clause, they were applicable to pending suits.

The finding of the learned District Judge is that s. 26-N being retrospective applies to the facts of this case and, therefore, the landlord must be deemed to have consented to the transfer to Maksudan and to Jagmohan Misser, as those transfers were made before January 1, 1923. Those persons, therefore, must now be regarded as persons who should have been impleaded as defendants in the rent suit, and as they were not impleaded the decree obtained was not a rent decree but only a simple money decree.

In my judgment though s. 26-N, Bihar Ten. Act, was expressly made retrospective it could not possibly affect rent decrees which had been obtained and which had been fully executed previous to the section coming into force. This view of the law is in my judgment, made clear by observations of Sir George Rankin who delivered the opinion of the Board in the case of K. C. Mukerjee, Official Receiver v. Ramratan Kuer (1). At p. 271* Sir George Rankin observes as follows:—

"Section 26 (N) is not a provision to the effect that no action shall lie in certain circumstances, nor had it any reference directly to litigation. Its provision is that every person claiming an interest as a landlord shall be deemed to have given his consent to every transfer made before January 1, 1923. This is retrospective, the question is not whether general language shall be taken only in a prospective sense. The object of this section can only be to quiet titles which are more than ten years old, and to ensure that if during those two years the transferee has not been ejected he shall have the right to remain on the land. Within this class the Legislature has not thought fit to discriminate against tenants whose right is under challenge in a suit, a course which it may well have regarded as invidious or unnecessary".

This observation makes it clear that their Lordships were of opinion that the section would apply to all cases which had not been the subject-matter of litigation or which were actually the subject-matter of litigation when the Amending Act came into force, namely, on June 10, 1935. He, however, makes it clear that the section can have no application whatsoever when the transferee had been lawfully rejected before the Amending Act, came into operation. In the present case the decree when obtained was a proper rent decree. It was put into execution, and the defendant-appellant as purchaser obtained possession of the land in dispute and ejected the plaintiffs by due course of law. They were lawfully ejected before the Act was even passed and long before the Act actually came into force. In my view s. 26-N cannot affect the rights of the defendant-appellant who had purchased this property in execution proceedings which were perfectly lawful at the time and he had obtained possession as a result of those proceedings. Had the proceedings been pending when the Amending Act came into force, different considerations might well have applied. That being so, the defendant-appellant had acquired a good title to the 1 bigha 10 kattas of land now claimed by plaintiffs and the latter's claim should, in my view, have been dismissed.

I would, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the learned District Judge and restore the decree of the learned Munsif dismissing the suit. The defendant-appellant must have the costs of this Court and of the proceedings in the Courts below.

Certain minor defendants have been impleaded as respondents in this case and Counsel who has appeared on their behalf has supported the case of the defendant-appellant. The plaintiff's claim must be dismissed in its entirety not only against the defendant-appellant but also against these minor defendants who are in the array of the respondents.

MA PWA SHIN—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

Burmese Buddhist Law—Succession—Husband and wife dying within short time of one another—Property inherited by one during marriage from collaterals—Mode of succession to.

Where property is inherited during marriage from collaterals by one party only, it should be treated not like property inherited from parents nor as jointly acquired property, but on the same footing as payin property or as inherited lettetpwa in cases of divorce by mutual consent, and should go to the extent of two-thirds to the relatives of the party who inherited it and to the extent of one-third to the relatives of the other party in case of death of both parties within a short time of one another.

•F. A. against the decree of the Assistant District Court, Tharrawaddy, dated January 19, 1940..

Mr. Chan Htoon, for the Appellant.

Mr. U E Maung, (1) for the Respondents.

Mosely, J.—The plaintiff-appellant Ma Pwa Shin sued for a share in and administration of the estate of Maung Tun E and his wife Ma Hmin, who died within a short time of one another. Ma Bwa Shin is the sister of Ma Hmin. The defendants-respondents, Ma Gale and Maung Hla Maung, are the sister and the half brother of Maung Tun E. The estate claimed consists of the hnazon or jointly acquired property of Maung Tun E and Ma Hmin and the share which Maung Tun E inherited just before his death in the estate of his first cousin once removed Daw Pwa Zon, with whom he and Ma Hmin lived. That share according to the pleadings (para. 6 of the plaint) was one-third of Daw Pwa Zon's estate. Daw Pwa Zon died on May 1, 1939, Ma Hmin on May 4, and Maung Tun E on May 19, of that year. The Assistant District Court allowed the claim in respect of one-half of the hnazon property of Maung Tun E and Ma Hmin, but not in respect of the property inherited by Maung Tun E from Daw Pwa Zon. The provisions as to inheritance by collaterals of both sides where husband and wife die within a short time of one another are contained in a well known and disjointed part of the Manukye Dhammathat, Book X, para. 56. This section deals also with the ordinary case where one party dies more than a short time before the other. It says that if either spouse left no direct descendants and if their parents had predeceased them the relations who should inherit are the six relations of the husband or wife, that is the six kinds of uncles, father's elder and younger brother etc. It is clear that there are really eight kinds not six, and the deceased's father's younger sister and the mother's younger brother were held to be entitled to inherit in U Pe Gyi v. U Pyo (1). The section omits any reference to the brothers and sisters of the deceased, who are preferred to uncles and aunts, (Manukye, Book X, para. 19: see U Po The Dun v. Maung Tin (2). The relations of the wife are to take the property that came to her by descent from her parents (miba ga pa thaw ossa yat), and the relations of the husband are to take what came to him by descent from his parents.

It would seem that this refers to cases where the husband and wife die within a short interval, as the section goes on to say that if one party dies (a considerable time) before the other the relations of the survivor only are to inherit. If the survivor sells any of the hereditary property (ossa yo) it is to be offered to the next of kin. This expression 'ossa yo' appears to mean not all property inherited from the parents but entailed property, such as land held on hereditary tenure, (Manukye, Vol. VIII paras. 1 and 2) heirlooms, insignia and the like Mi Lan v. Maung Shwe Daing (3), at pp. 124 and 136. If the couple die within a short interval

"the relations of both are to inherit according to consanguinity, and also the property that accrued to the couple during marriage (hnit pa dwin pwa thi ossa)."

This last expression is translated by Richardson as "property acquired by the deceased couple during marriage," but is not the equivalent of the word "hnazon" in its modern signification, that is property acquired by joint exertion as opposed to lettetpwa, another modern term, which includes property acquired by inheritance, Ma Ngwe Bwin v. Maung Lun Maung (4). In fact "hna pa dwin pwa thi ossa" seem to be the equivalent of the modern "lettetpwa." The corresponding text of other Dhammathats will be found in s. 308 of Vol. I of the Digest. For miba ga pa thaw ossa some Dhammathats give meimma pa ossa or lin pa ossa, property brought to the marriage by husband or wife, i. e. payin. For hnit pa dwin pwa thi ossa the Amwebon Dhammathat, which merely copies the portions of Manukye that deal with inheritance, gives hnit pa son dwin pwa ossa, which can only mean the same. In Manukye, Vol. XII, para. 3 as p. 345 a distinction is drawn between property brought to the marriage, payin, and property acquired during the coverture—Richardson translates "acquired mutually," hnit pa son dwin ossa. The section further defines property acquired during marriage, "hnit pa son lettet pwa thi", as of two kinds, property inherited from the parents during the coverture, (Richardson omits the words "during the coverture," thin ne va dwin), and property acquired by the joint efforts and work of the couple, (hnit u tha kyan si lok saung). The fact is that the Dhammathats do not specifically deal with property inherited from collaterals during coverture, but the distinction is throughout that between property inherited from the parents and property otherwise acquired by the couple.

Another section of Manukye, Vol. X, para. 32, deals with the partition of the property of a couple dwelling apart from their parents who both die (hnit pa son the) without leaving issue. The early part of the section relates evidently, though it is not so stated, to cases where the couple die within a short interval of one another, for the last part of it lays down a different rule in the opposite case. The parents of each spouse are to take what he or she brought to the marriage (payin), while the property that accrued to the couple during the marriage, (hnit pa son pyit pwa thi ossa), is to be divided equally amongst the parents of both spouses. This section in terms applies only to parents, but if the doctrine of common disaster is to apply at all the heirs who are to be preferred to parents, e. g., brothers and sisters; Maung Kun v. Ma Chi (5) must also come under its provisions. The section goes on to lay down that where one spouse brought no property to the marriage (payin) the parents of that spouse were to take one share of the payin and the parents of the spouse who brought payin to the marriage two shares, (the parties being in the relationship of nissita and nissiya). The corresponding texts of other Dhammathats are given in s. 347 of the Digest. In Vol. XII, para. 3 of Manukye the same principle of division is applied so the payin property of virgin couples at divorce where one spouse only brought payin to the marriage, and also to lettetpwa by succession, Kin Kin Gyi v. Mg. Kan Gyi (6), Mi Myin v. Nga Twe (7), Mi Saing v. Yan Gin (8) and Ma Ngwe Hnit v. Maung Po Hmu (9).

The trial Court was of the opinion that the method of division laid by Manukye in the case of hereditary property ought to be extended by analogy to the case of property inherited from collaterals during coverture. But these special and exceptional rules of the customary law of inheritance should not be extended beyond the cases actually covered by them, Ma Pwa Thin

v. U Nyo (10), at p. 414, except where it is necessary by implication to hold that heirs who exclude parents or uncles and aunts are entitled to the same rights as they. It would further seem that it is only property inherited from the parents which is to go solely to the relatives of the spouse who had it. It must be held then that where property is inherited during marriage from collaterals by one party only it should be treated not like property inherited from parents, nor as jointly acquired property, but on the same footing as payin property, or as inherited lettetpwa in cases of divorce by mutual consent, and should go to the extent of two-thirds to the relatives of the party who inherited it and to the extent of one-third to the relatives of the other party. The preliminary decree of the lower Court will therefore be altered to one declaring that the plaintiff-appellant is entitled to one-third of Maung Tun E's share in the property inherited by him from Ma Pwa Zon, that is to say to one-ninth of Ma Pwa Zon's estate, and the Commissioner will be directed to make the necessary inquiries and take accounts and report accordingly. The respondent must pay the costs of this appeal, Advocate's fee ad valorem on the estimated value of the share in respect of which the appellant has been successful, namely Rs. 562.

Bihar Agricultural Income-tax. Act (VII of 1938), ss. 2 (a), 6 (b), 25 (6)—Cess imposed by Bengal Cess Act (IX of 1880), on tenure-holders and raiyats and collected by proprietors of land, can be assessed as agricultural income of latter as defined in s. 2 (a)—Whether non-recurring premia or salamis paid to proprietors of land when granting lease, is agricultural income of proprietors within s. 2 (a) is question of fact—Test of determination—Held, such payments were not agricultural income and could not be taxed—Agricultural income-tax authorities must follow decisions of Patna High Court—They are not entitled to follow decisions of other High Courts or rely on their own experience, in case of conflict of authorities—Whether 'bankar', 'lahkar' and 'phalkar' incomes are incomes from agriculture or lands used for agricultural purposes, is question of fact—Duty of authorities to state facts when stating case to High Court—Held, that incomes derived by assesses in this case from such sources were not derived from land used for agricultural purposes or from agriculture and could not be assessed to tax under Act—Words and phrases—'Bankar', 'lahkar' and 'phalkar,' meaning explained.

The cess as imposed by the Ben. Cess Act (Act IX of 1880 B. C.) on tenure-holders and *raiya*ts and collected by the proprietors of the land can be assessed as agricultural income of the latter as defined in s. 2 (a) Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act. The cess received by the proprietors of land from the tenure-holders and *raiya*ts is income derived from land used for agricultural purposes. All such land is expressly made liable to cess by the Ben. Cess Act and it is payable by the tenure-holders and *raiya*ts by reason of their relation to the land, and further it is received by the proprietors by reason of their rights as proprietors of the land. The liability to pay such cess and the right to receive it only exists as long as the relationship of proprietor and tenure-holder or proprietor and *raiya*t exists. When the proprietor ceases to be a proprietor, he no longer has any right to the cess and similarly when the interests of the tenure-holder or *raiya*t cease, their liability to pay cess comes to an end. The liability to pay and the right to receive cess is so closely connected with the land that it can truly be said that it is income derived from the land. That being so, the cess forms part of their agricultural income and is liable to be taxed under the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act. [p. 205, col. 2; p. 208; cols. 1 & 2.]

It is impossible to lay down a hard and fast rule that a salami or premium can in no case be taxable. The question in each case would depend on the facts and circumstances of that particular case. Salami may in certain cases be regarded as payment of rent in advance, and in such cases the salami could rightly be regarded as income. Where, however, salami cannot be regarded as payment of rent in advance, it cannot be regarded as income and would, therefore, not be taxable. Where the premium or salami represents the whole or part of the price of the land, it could not be income. Income connotes a periodical monetary return coming in with some sort of regularity, or expected regularity, from definite sources. The premium, or salami, which is paid once for all, is not a recurring payment and does not satisfy the test of income. 187 Ind. Cas. 691 (3) and 192 Ind. Cas. 316 (5), relied on. [p. 209, col. 2.]

It is for the income-tax authorities to show that there do exist facts which would make the salami income. Prima facie, salami is not income. [ibid.]

Where it is impossible upon the facts as stated to say that the single non-recurring premium and salami paid to the assessee once only as consideration for the settlement of agricultural land at the time of granting of a lease constituted a part of the assessee's income, it cannot be held to be agricultural income within the meaning of s. 2 (a) of the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act and is not assessable under that Act. [p. 208, col. 2; p. 210, col. 1.]

The Agricultural Income-tax Authorities in Bihar must in view of s. 25 (6), Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act, regard cases decided by the Patna High Court under the Act as binding upon them and they will not be entitled in the case of a conflict of authorities to follow decisions of other Courts or to rely on their own experience. [p. 210, col. 1.]

"Bankar" is income derived from the sale of wood from jungles, whereas "lahkar" is income from letting lands and trees for cultivation of lac. "Phalkar" is income from the fruit of jungle trees and bushes. The question whether the income from these sources can be said to be derived from land used for agricultural purposes or from agriculture, is in the main, one of fact and the authorities should bear this in mind when stating a case to the High Court. If the land is not so used, then the income is not taxable under the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act. [p. 230, col. 2.]

Where the "bankar" income was derived by the assessee from virgin jungles or jungle land not actually cultivated and the trees appeared to have grown naturally in the jungles without the intervention of human agency :

Held, that the growth of these trees could not be said to result from the cultivation of the soil and the income referred to as "bankar" was not derived from agricultural land or from agriculture and, therefore, it could not be assessed under the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act. [p. 210, col. 2; p. 211, col. 1.]

Lac is not the result of any cultivation but is the creation of a particular insect when placed on particular trees. Where nothing appears to be done by the assessee beyond placing the insect on the trees, it cannot be held that "lahkar" income is derived from land used for agricultural purposes or from agriculture. [p. 211, cols. 1 & 2.]

"Phalkar" is income derived from wild jungle fruits, and it cannot be said that the fruit gathered is the result of any cultivation, but, on the contrary, it is the result of the absence of cultivation. Trees and bushes yielding these fruits grow not on cultivated soil but on land not under cultivation and frequently the more neglected and wild the land is the thicker grow these wild bushes and trees yielding such crop. Practically in all cases the crop is the result of want of cultivation and not the result of cultivation.

Held, that it was not established that the income described as "phalkar" in the case was income derived from land used for agriculture or from agriculture and was, therefore, not assessable to agricultural income-tax. [p. 211, col. 2.]

Misc. J. Cs. Nos. 47 and 48 of 1940. In re, statement of case under section 25 (2), Bihar Agricultural Income Tax Act (Act VII of 1938), by the Board of Agricultural Income-tax, Bihar, dated May 13, 1940, regarding assessment.

The Advocate-General and Mr. Phulan Prasad Varma, for the Petitioner in Nos. 47 and 48.

Sir Sultan Ahmad, Messrs. P. R. Das, B. C. De, P. K. Banarji, K. K. Banarji, H. R. Kazimi and A. H. Akbari, for the Assessee in No. 47.

Sir Sultan Ahmad, Messrs. P. R. Das, B. C. De, P. K. Banarji, K. K. Banarji and J. M. Ghosh, for the Assessee in No. 48.

Harries, C. J.—These are two references made by the Board of Agricultural Income-tax, Bihar, under s. 25 (2), Bihar Agricultural Income Tax Act (Act VII of 1938). The two references raise precisely the same questions, and it will be convenient to deal with them in one judgment.

The facts giving rise to Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 47 of 1940 can be shortly stated as follows :—

The assessee is the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur. He was called upon to make a return of his agricultural income for the previous year, and eventually he made a return showing an income of Rs. 9,956-12-6 derived from agricultural. The Income-tax Officer questioned the return and finally assessed the assessee on a net income of Rs. 1,42,743-8-7½. The assessee being dissatisfied with this assessment appealed to the Commissioner of Agricultural Income-tax, who by an order dated September 20, 1939, dismissed the appeal and confirmed the assessment. The assessee then petitioned the Board of Agricultural Income-tax, Bihar; but his petition was rejected by an order dated February 21, 1940.

The facts giving rise to Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 48 of 1940 are very similar :—

The assessee in this case is the Raja of Panchkote who was assessed by the Income-tax Officer to agricultural income-tax upon a sum of Rs. 99,392. The assessee appealed to the Commissioner of Income-tax, but his appeal was dismissed on September 21, 1939, and a petition to the Bihar Board of Agricultural Income-tax was rejected on February 21, 1940.

The points taken by both the assesseees were the same. It was contended, in the first place, that the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act was ultra vires and that neither assessee was liable to be assessed in respect of his agricultural income. Secondly, it was urged that the case collected by the assesseees from their tenure-holders and raiyyats did not form part of the agricultural income and, therefore, could not be included in the sum to be assessed to agricultural income-tax. Thirdly, it was contended that payments in the nature of premia or salami formed no part of the income of the assesseees and that such had been wrongly assessed to income-tax by the Income-tax Officer. Lastly, it was contended that income from phalkar, bankar and lahkar could not be assessed under the Act as part of the agricultural income of the assesseees.

The Commissioner of Agricultural Income-tax and the Bihar Board of Agricultural Income-tax decided that the Act was intra vires the Bihar Provincial Legislature and, therefore, the assessee could be assessed to agricultural income-tax. They further decided that the sums representing cess, premia or salami received by the assesseees and income from phalkar, bankar, and lahkar had been rightly assessed to tax. As the cases involved difficult questions of law, the Bihar Board of Agricultural Income-tax was asked to state cases for the opinion of this Court, and the Board stated cases under s. 25(2), Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act, and these cases formulate four questions :

(1) Whether agricultural income of the assessee can be assessed under the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act (Act VII of 1938)?

(2) Whether the cess as imposed by the Ben. Cess Act (Act IX of 1880 B.C.) on tenure-holders and raiyyats and collected by the assessee can be assessed as agricultural income of the latter as defined in this Act?

(3) Whether single non-recurring premia and salamis paid to the assessee once only as consideration for the settlement of agricultural land at the time of granting of a lease can be held to be income within the meaning of the Act?

(4) Whether the income from trees derived by the assessee is agricultural income as defined in the Act?

It will be convenient to consider each of these questions separately.

Question No. (1). Whether agricultural income of the assessee can be assessed under the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act (Act VII of 1938)?

The assessee wished to contend that the whole of the Bihar Agricultural Income-tax was ultra vires the powers of the Bihar Provincial Legislature or in the alternative that the Act was ultra vires in so far as it purported to tax agricultural incomes arising from permanently settled estates. The estates of both the assesseees were permanently settled and were assessed to land revenue. At the outset Counsel for the assesseees realised that it would be impossible to contend before this tribunal that the Act under which the tribunal was constituted was ultra vires. This tribunal has been expressly set-up by the Act to hear references under s. 25 of the Act, and an argument that the whole of the Act was ultra vires cannot be urged before a tribunal which owes its very existence and jurisdiction to the Act itself. Realising the difficulties, Counsel informed the Court that they did not press for an answer to this question as, in their view, the matter could be more appropriately and effectively raised in a suit challenging an assessment. That being so, no further argument was addressed to us upon this question, and I would, therefore, make no answer to it.

Question No. (2). Whether the cess as imposed by the Ben. Cess Act (Act IX of 1880 B. C. on tenure-holders and raiyyats and collected by the assessee can be assessed as agricultural income of the latter as defined in this Act?

In the cases of both assessees the Income-tax Officer had included in their gross income sums collected by the assessees as cess from their tenure-holders and raiyyats. In the case of the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur the amount of cess collected from tenure-holders and raiyyats amounted to Rs. 1,14,686-0-2½ and the amount payable by the said Maharaja under the Cess Act amounted to Rs. 1,62,757-2-10. In the case of Raja of Panchkote the amount of cess actually collected from the tenure-holders and tenants is not clearly stated, but there can be no question that it was a substantial amount. The amount of cess paid by the said Raja amounted to Rs. 78,705-13-7.

There can be no question that the cess payable by the assessees under the provisions of the Cess Act are proper deductions from their gross income as such deductions are expressly provided for in s. 6 (b), Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act. Among the deductions permissible under s. 6 (b) are sums "actually paid in the previous year in respect of such land as any local cess or rate collected under any Ben. Act or under any Bihar and Orissa Act or under any Bihar Act."

The contention of the assessees was that though cess paid by them could be deducted from their gross income the cess actually collected by them from their tenure-holders and raiyyats formed no part of their agricultural income and could not be included in the same representing their gross income. It was conceded that there was no justice or equity in this contention; but it was urged that on the plain words of the Act cess collected by the assessees formed no part of their income.

"Agricultural income" is defined in s. 2 (a) as, inter alia, any rent or income derived from land which is used for agricultural purposes, and is either assessed to land-revenue in Bihar or subject to a local cess or rate assessed and collected under any Ben. Act or under any Bihar and Orissa Act or under any Bihar Act;..... Counsel for the assessees argued that the Provincial Legislature had no power to define agricultural income as that term had already been defined in s. 311, Govt.

of India Act, 1935. It is to be remembered that the power of the Provincial Legislature to levy agricultural income-tax is given to them under s. 100 and Sch. VII, List II, Item No. 41, Govt. of India Act. By reason of these provisions a Provincial Legislature is empowered to impose taxes on agricultural income. The latter term is defined in s. 311 (2), Govt. of India Act, as meaning agricultural income as defined for the purposes of the enactments relating to Indian income-tax. Section 2 of the present enactment relating to Indian income-tax defined "agricultural income" as any rent or revenue derived from land which is used for agricultural purposes, and is either assessed to land-revenue in British India or subject to a local rate assessed and collected by officers of the Crown as such.

It will be observed that the definition of "agricultural income" given in the Indian Income Tax Act differs somewhat from that given in the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act. In the Indian Income Tax Act agricultural income consists of any rent or revenue derived from agricultural land, whereas in the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act it consists of any rent or income derived from agricultural land. In my judgment there is no real difference between the words "revenue" and "income" used in these two Acts. In the Indian Income Tax Act the word "revenue" is clearly used to cover payments in the nature of income other than rent derived from the land.

The definitions in the two Acts also differ as to the description of the agricultural land contemplated. In the Indian Income Tax Act the land must either be assessed to land-revenue in British India or subject to a local rate assessed and collected by officers of the Crown as such, whereas in the Bihar Act the land must be either assessed to land-revenue in the province or subject to a local cess or rate assessed and collected under any Ben. Act or under any Bihar and Orissa Act or under any Bihar Act.

For the reasons which I have already given, Counsel for the assessees could not and did not wish to contend that the whole Act was ultra vires by reason of the fact that the definition of "agricultural income" in the Bihar Act differed from that in the Govt. of India Act. Counsel, possibly, could have argued that the Act was ultra vires in so far as the definition in the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act, extended to cases not covered by the definition in the Govt. of India Act. Such an argument, however, could not avail the assesseees in the present case, because both the estates were assessed to land-revenue and, therefore, the cases of both were covered not only the definition in the Bihar Act but also by the definition in the Govt. of India Act. No point can be made in the present proceedings on the difference in the two definitions, and I merely mention the question in difference to the argument which was addressed to the Court.

The learned Commissioner of Income-tax was of opinion that the cess collected by the assesseees from their tenure-holders and raiyats formed part of their income though he did not regard the cess as part of the rent payable by the tenure-holders or raiyats as the Income-tax Officer appears to have thought. The Bihar Board of Agricultural Income-tax however, came to the conclusion that cess formed part of the rent and was, therefore, liable to assessment as part of the assessee's agricultural income. The contention of the Income-tax Authorities was that the definition of "rent" given in the Chota Nag. Ten. Act was wide enough to cover these payments of cess; but in my judgment the view of the learned Commissioner is the correct one. It may well be that for the purposes of the Chota Nag. Ten. Act cess could be regarded as part of the rent, but that would not make cess rent for the purposes of agricultural income-tax. It would, indeed, be strange if cess could be regarded as rent for the purposes of taxation in Chota Nagpur and could not be so regarded for the purposes of taxation in other parts of this province. In my judgment the cess received by the assesseees cannot be regarded as part of the rent for the purposes of the Agri. Income Tax Act and, therefore, taxable. It can only be assessed if it can be regarded as part of the agricultural income of the assessee.

Cess is imposed by s. 5 of the Ben. Cess Act which is in these terms :—

"From and after the commencement of this Act in any District or part of a District, all immovable property situate therein, except as otherwise in s. 2 provided, shall be liable to the payment of a local cess."

The mode of payment of local cess is provided for in s. 41 of the Cess Act, which is in these terms :—

"Except as otherwise in this Act provided—

(1) every holder of an estate shall yearly pay to the Collector the entire amount of the local cess calculated on the annual value of the lands comprised in such estate, at the rate which may have been determined for such cess for the year as in this Act provided, less a deduction to be calculated at one-half of the said rate for every rupee of the revenue entered in the valuation roll of such estate as payable in respect thereof :

(2) every holder of a tenure shall yearly pay to the holder of the estate or tenure within which the land held by him is included, the entire amount of the local cess calculated on the annual value of the land comprised in his tenure at the rate which may have been determined for such cess for the year as in this Act provided, less a deduction to be calculated at one-half of the said rate for every rupee of the rent payable by him for such tenure :

(3) every cultivating raiyat shall pay to the person to whom his rent is payable one-half of the said local cess calculated at the said rate upon the rent payable by him, or upon the annual value ascertain under the provisions of s. 24 or 25 of the land held by him....."

It will be seen that by reason of s. 41 the proprietor has to pay cess on all the land held by him and the tenure-holders or raiyats under the proprietor have to pay cess to the latter in respect of the lands held by them. The landlord's liability to pay cess is not conditional upon the collections of cess made by him from his tenure-holders or raiyats and the landlord is bound to pay the cess payable by him whether he is able or not to collect the cess due to him from persons holding from him. Section 41 of the Act makes it clear that the liability of the proprietor to pay cess in no way depends upon payments of cess made to him by his tenure-holders or raiyats.

It was faintly urged that the cess received by the assesseees from their tenure-holders and raiyats formed no part of their agricultural income by reason of the fact that the assesseees had themselves to pay cess and in substance and in fact what they received from the tenure-holders and tenants they actually paid with their own contribution to the local authorities. If the proprietors were merely collecting agents of this cess, then it could be urged that the amounts collected by them formed no part of their income. However, if such was the case, the assesseees could not claim a deduction of the cess payable by them in respect of lands actually held by tenure-holders and raiyats under s. 6 (b), Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act, because such cess would not be paid by the assesseees but paid by the tenure-holders and raiyats through the hands of the assesseees. The fact that the proprietors are entitled to deduct not only cess paid by them in respect of lands in their khas possession but also in respect of lands held by tenure-holders and tenants makes it clear that the liability is that of the proprietor and not of those holding under him. In my view proprietors are not mere agents for the collection of cess, but, on the other hand, they are the only persons liable to pay the cess due to the local authorities and further they are the only persons entitled to the cess payable by the tenure-holders and raiyyats.

In my judgment it is clear that the cess received by the assessee from tenure-holders and raiyyats does form part of their income. When they receive the payments they are absolutely entitled to them and can retain them even if they themselves were able to avoid payment of their cess to the local authorities. The payments from the tenure-holders and raiyyats are received regularly and are clearly within the definition of "Income" given by Sir George Lowndes in the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal v. Shaw Wallace & Co. (1). At p. 1350 Sir George Lowndes observed :—

"Income, their Lordships think, in this Act (meaning the Indian Income Tax Act) connotes a periodical monetary return 'coming in' with some sort of regularity," or expected regularity, from definite sources. The source is not necessarily one which is expected to be continuously productive, but it must be one whose object is the production of a definite return, excluding anything in the nature of a mere windfall. Thus income has been likened pictorially to the fruit of a tree, or the crop of a field."

As the assessee receives this cess regularly year by year and appropriate it to their own use it is clearly part of their income. The question, however, still remains whether it is income derived from land used for agricultural purposes, because it must, to be taxable, be derived from such land.

In my judgment the cess received by the assessee is income derived from land used for agricultural purposes. All such land is expressly made liable to cess by the Ben. Cess Act and it is payable by the tenure-holders and raiyyats by reason of their relation to the land, and further it is received by the assessee by reason of their rights as proprietors of the land. The liability to pay such cess and the right to receive it only exists as long as the relationship of proprietor and tenure-holder or proprietor and raiyyat exists. When the proprietor ceases to be a proprietor, he no longer has any right to the cess and similarly when the interests of the tenure-holder or raiyyat cease, their liability to pay cess comes to an end. The liability to pay and the right to receive cess is so closely connected with the land that it can truly be said that it is income derived from the land. The cess was received by the assessee by virtue of the fact that they were the proprietors of the land used for agricultural purposes. That being so, the cess forms part of their agricultural income and is liable to be taxed under the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act.

It was urged by Sir Sultan Ahmed on behalf of the assessee that cess could not form part of the agricultural income of the assessee, because the rights of the assessee to this cess were governed not by contract between them and their tenure-holders or raiyyats but by statute. In my view it can make no real difference whether the money is received by reason of an agreement or by reason of a right given by statute. Rent is payable by the tenant or the tenure-holder as the result of agreement. The Cess Act imposes a further liability on the tenure-holder and the tenant and gives the proprietor a right to something more than the rent which was fixed as the result of agreement. Both the payments are made by the tenure-holders or raiyyats by virtue of the fact that they hold interests in land from the proprietor and the latter's right to receive both the payments are equally by virtue of the fact that he is the proprietor of the land. In my view no distinction can be drawn by reason of the fact that cess is payable under statute, and in my judgment cess clearly forms part of the agricultural income of the assessee. I would, therefore, answer this question in the affirmative.

Question No. (3) Whether single non-recurring premia and salamis paid to the assessee once only as consideration for the settlement of agricultural land at the time of granting of a lease can be held to be income within the meaning of the Act?

The learned Commissioner was of opinion that such premia or salamis were not capital payments but were revenue receipts and therefore, taxable. In his judgment he observed :—

"The amount of salami to be paid is and must necessarily be taken into account by the would-be lessee in estimating what rent he can afford to pay for the tenancy and I consider therefore that salami of this nature must in fact be regarded as merely a capitalised value of a portion of the future rents. I hold therefore that salamis of this nature are rent, but even if I did not come to this conclusion, I do not see how I could avoid holding that such salamis are income derived from land which is used for agricultural purposes. Money received must be either capital or income, and I find it impossible to regard salamis of this nature as being in any sense capital. They do not represent compensation for any deterioration of the landlord's estate and are, in my opinion, income pure and simple."

The Bihar Board of Agricultural Income-tax also came to the conclusion that these salamis formed part of the assessee's agricultural income. The Board relied upon the decision in Birendra Kishore Manikya v. Secretary of State for India (2) and declined to follow a decision of this Court in Commissioner of Income-tax v. Maharaja-dhiraj Kumar Visheshwar Singh (3).

Dealing with the decision of this Court the Board states :—

"With due respect to the ruling of the Hon'ble High Court, I feel, I must upon this issue be guided by my own experience as a revenue officer and Court. This point has come before the Board in many shapes and forms and especially whilst deciding question of rent reduction in the recently initiated proceedings in the province under ss. 112 and 112-A of the Bihar Ten. Act and the analogous section of the Chota Nag. Ten. Act. I have, so I think, invariably seen that whenever a landlord has settled zirat, bakasht or nilami lands with tenants and has accepted a salami it has been always because of the imposition of a lower rate of rent than would have been the case if such salami had not been taken. I am of opinion that this has been the uniform practice in such cases coming before the Board throughout the province and on this consideration I cannot do anything else but hold that these salamis are merely advance rent and nothing else and so agricultural income tax is rightly imposed upon them."

The facts relating to these various payments of salami are nowhere set out in the case. All that is said is that these payments by way of salami were made on settlement of lands with tenants. Both the Commissioner and the Board appeared to have thought that as a matter of law such payments were not capital receipts but revenue receipts and, therefore, formed part of the proprietor's income. The case of Birendra Kishore Manikya v. Secretary of State for India (2) now overruled on the main question which it decided does support the views of the Commissioner and the Board, but it is to be observed that this Court has not accepted the law as laid down in that case. In Raja Shiva Prasad Singh v. The Crown (4) this Court refused to follow the view of the Calcutta High Court that salami paid on the settlement of land was income. In that case the question was whether a sum of money received by the assessee by way of salami or premium for granting a mining lease was taxable. Dawson Miller, C. J. observed :—

"There is a vast difference between a sum paid once for all for the lease of mineral rights and a rent or royalty paid annually to the lessor. The lessor in this case who holds an unfettered right of disposal would appear, in granting these leases, to have had two objects in view which are distinguishable. In so far as rent and royalty are reserved, he is founding an annual increment to the income of the Raj for himself and his successors, but with regard to salami it is the price he demands for parting with his direct enjoyment of the property by himself and his successors for a period of 999 years. He is parting with the capital to persons who, whilst not purchasers of the fee simple, are undoubtedly purchasers of a large interest therein. The purchase price is presumably not based upon the estimated outturn but is paid in exchange for the long term transferred. Possibly it may be objected that the distinction is one of degree rather than of kind; recurring payments at short periods being treated as income and a single payment of a similar kind covering a long period being treated as capital, but after all this is a distinction acknowledged in s. 4 of the Act itself, and, as has been observed, the Income Tax Acts are not cast upon absolutely logical lines. Nor does there appear to be any reason why we should extend the exception made in the case of rent and royalty to the case of a non-recurring payment made to cover a long period."

This case was distinguished by the learned Commissioner on the ground that it related to royalties; but the case was approved and followed by a Bench of this Court in Commissioner of Income-tax v. Maharajadhiraj Kumar Visheshwar Singh (3), which was a case not connected with minerals but was a case relating to land. In this case the learned Judges reviewed all the authorities and came to the conclusion that where the premium or salami represented the whole or part of the price of the land, it could not be income. Income connoted a periodical monetary return coming in with some sort of regularity, or expected regularity, from definite sources. The premium, or salami, which was paid once for all, was not a recurring payment and did not satisfy the test of income. Manohar Lall, J. further stated that it was impossible to lay down a hard and fast rule that a salami can in no case be taxable. The question in each case would depend on the facts and circumstances of that particular case.

The same view was taken by another Bench of this Court of which I was a member, in the case of Rani Bhuneshwari Kuar v. The Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar (5). These two recent cases make it clear that salami cannot be regarded as income as a matter of law. Salami may in certain cases be regarded as payment of rent in advance, and in such cases the salami could rightly be regarded as income. Where, however, salami cannot be regarded as payment of rent in advance, it cannot be regarded as income and would, therefore, not be taxable. In the present case, as I have stated, no facts are given relating to any particular payment of salami. It is for the Income-tax Authorities to show that there do exist facts which would make the salami income. Prima facie, salami is not income, and it is impossible upon the facts as stated to say that the salamis received by either assessee in this case constitute part of their income and, therefore, assessable to agricultural tax. I would, therefore, answer this third question in the negative.

I think it only right to draw the attention of the Agricultural Income-tax Authorities to s. 25 (6) Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act. They must in future regard cases decided by this Court under the Act as binding upon them and they will not be entitled in the case of a conflict of authorities to follow decisions of other Courts or to rely on their own experience.

Question No. (4) Whether the income from trees derived by the assessee is agricultural income as defined in the Act?

The Maharaja of Chota Nagpur was assessed to income-tax on Rs. 832-12-0 income from bankar, Rs. 636-10-0 income from lahkar and Rs. 22-4-0 income from phalkar. The Raja of Panchkote appears also to have been assessed on income from some if not all the sources, though the actual amounts received from the various sources are not set out in the order of the Income-tax Officer, or in either the judgment of the Commissioner or the Bihar Board of Agricultural Income-tax. Further, no details of any kind are given in the cases stated as to the precise nature of the sources of this income. All that can be gathered is that income from bankar, lahkar and phalkar has been taxed, and the contention of the assessee is that such is not income derived from land used for agricultural purposes, and, therefore not taxable.

The Commissioner of Income-tax appears to have thought that income derived from timber in virgin forests was income derived from land used for agricultural purposes. In his view trees were undoubtedly a crop, and the practice of forestry formed part of agriculture. He relied upon the case of the Chief Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Zamindar of Singampatti (6). In that case, however, the learned Judges appear to have thought that income from forests and fisheries might be regarded as agricultural income, though they pointed out that it was not necessary to determine whether such was the case or not. Another case supporting the view of the learned Commissioner is the case of Panadai Pathan v. Ramasami Chetti (7), in which it was held that a lease of land for growing casuarina trees is a lease for an agricultural purpose within the meaning of s. 117, T. P. Act, and, therefore, does not require a registered instrument for its creation. It was further held that "agriculture" does not connote tilling the soil for raising food products alone but means cultivation of the soil for any useful purpose.

The Bihar Board of Agricultural Income-tax upheld the Commissioner, but he conceded that the point involved was a difficult one, and he in fact gives no reasons for agreeing with the Commissioner. All he says is:

"The learned Commissioner has given his reasons for thinking that virgin forest is a crop and all I will say is that for the purposes of these proceedings I will not differ from him."

"Bankar" is income derived from the sale of wood from jungles whereas "lahkar" is income from letting lands and trees for cultivation of lac. "Phalkar" is income from the fruit of jungle trees and bushes. The question which has to be determined is whether the income from these sources can be said to be derived from land used for agricultural purposes or from agriculture. If the land is not so used, then the income is not taxable under the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act. "Agriculture" is defined in Shorter Oxford Dictionary, Vol. I, p. 37, as "The science and art of cultivating the soil, including the gathering in the crops and the rearing of live stock", and another alternative definition is "farming in the widest sense."

It will be convenient to deal with the items bankar, lahkar and phalkar separately.

Bankar. It appears that this head of income was derived from virgin jungles or jungle land not actually cultivated. A few forest guards appear to have been employed to protect the property, but it cannot be said that the trees have grown as the result of cultivation. They appear to have grown naturally in the jungles without the intervention of human agency, and in my view the growth of these trees cannot be said to result from the cultivation of the soil. In fact, it was the absence of cultivation that permitted the area to develop into a jungle.

In the later cases decided in Madras the learned Judges take a different view from the cases already referred to. In the case of the Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. T. Manavedan Tirumalpad (8), a Special Bench of three Judges held that the amounts received by the owner of unassessed forest lands, by the sale of timber trees thereon, are income liable as such to income-tax under the Indian Income Tax Act. In short, the income was not derived from land used for Agricultural purposes and, therefore, not within the exception in the Indian Income Tax Act. In this case, however, it does not appear to have been seriously contended that income derived from the sale of such trees was income derived from land used for agricultural purposes or from agriculture.

In Chandrasekara Bharati v. Duraiswamy Naidu (9), a Bench held that growing casuarina trees, that is trees for fuel, is not an agricultural purpose so as to make the person who holds the land for that purpose a raiyyat within the meaning of the Mad. Estates Land Act.

A similar view appears to have been taken by the Allahabad High Court in a Full Bench case, Kesho Prasad Singh v. Sheo Pargash Ojha (10). The learned Judges held that land held for the purposes of a grove was not land held for agricultural purposes, and this view was approved of in appeal by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Kesho Prasad Singh v. Sheo Pragash Ojha (11) in which their Lordships stated expressly that they agreed with High Court that land held for the purposes of a grove was not land used for agricultural purposes. In my judgment it has not been established in this case that the income referred to as "bankar" is derived from agricultural land or from agriculture and, therefore, it cannot be assessed under the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act.

Lahkar. This is income derived from letting land and trees for the cultivation of lac. Lac is a substance produced by certain insects which are placed on certain trees. Lac does not seem to be the result of any cultivation but is the creation of a particular insect when placed on particular trees. Nothing appears to be done beyond placing the insect on the trees, and in my judgment on the materials before the Court I cannot hold that this head of income is derived from land used for agricultural purposes or from agriculture.

Phalkar. This is income derived from wild jungle fruits, and it cannot be said that the fruit gathered is the result of any cultivation, but, on the contrary, it is the result of the absence of cultivation. Trees and bushes yielding these fruits grow not on cultivated soil but on land not under cultivation and frequently the more neglected and wild the land is the thicker grow these wild bushes and trees yielding such crop. Practically in all cases the crop is the result of want of cultivation and not the result of cultivation. In my judgment it is not established that the income described as "phalkar" in these cases is income derived from land used for agriculture or from agriculture and is therefore, not assessable to agricultural income-tax.

The case as stated on this fourth question does not set out precisely how the various items of income were obtained. On the materials before me, I cannot hold that any item constitutes agricultural income but on a fuller statement of the facts it may be open to a Court to come to a different conclusion. The question is in the main one of fact, and the authorities should bear this in mind when stating a case.

In the result, therefore, I would answer this question in the negative.

The assesses have been partially successful in this case though they have failed on the main question as to cess. In all the circumstances, I would make no order as to costs of these references, particularly as the points involved are new and difficult.

Fazi Ali, J.—I agree.

Manohar Lall, J.—I also agree.

Order accordingly.

PESHAWAR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT

Appeal No. 105/39 of 1939

November 11, 1940

ALMOND, J. C. AND MIR AHMED, J.
SECRETARY OF STATE—APPELLANT

versus

MOHD. SAIFUR KHAN NAQIBULLAH
KHAN AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), ss. 23, 4 (1)—Market value — Sale prices after notification under s. 4 (1) for acquisition—Fact of land being used for building purposes and proposal for converting sub-division in which it was situate into district, if can be taken into account.

In determining the market value of the land to be acquired the sale prices of similar types of land in similar position in the past as well as after the notification under s. 4 (1) of the Land Acquisition Act, the fact that the land was at the time of determining its value being used for building purposes; a proposal to convert the sub-division in which the land was situate into a district resulting in acceleration of high price for the land, can all be taken into account even though the aforesaid factors have come into being after the notification under s. 4 (1). 181 Ind. Cas. 230 (1), relied on.

A. against the decree and the judgment of the District Judge, Peshawar Division, dated March 30, 1939.

Mr. Arbab Taj Mohd. Khan, Govt. Pleader, for the Appellant.

L. Hukam Chand, and Mr. S. M. Abbasi, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2, and other respondents, respectively.

Mir Ahmed, J.—The Govt. required land for building a hydro-electric sub-station at Mardan. A notification was therefore issued on October 15, 1935 for acquiring 12 kls. 13 mls. 6 srs. of land belonging to Mohd. Saifur Khan, Abdul Gafur Khan, Saadullah, Mehr Dil, Mahmud and Purdil. The Collector offered to pay Rs. 280-10-0 per kanal for the land. The owners did not accept this price. They asked for a reference to Court under s. 18, Land Acquisition Act. The matter was therefore sent up to the District Court and the District Judge tried the case. The District Judge found that this piece of land was situated in the midst of a new growing suburb. He referred to a sale by Fateh Mohd. Khan to Ghulam Haider of 10 marlas of land for Rs. 750. According to a copy of the mutation which has been entered to record, the sale took place on October 14, 1935. The Judge also referred to a judgment of a single Judge of this Court dated August 15, 1935. It was in a case of pre-emption. The land in dispute was situated in the neighbourhood of the land now in suit and was one kanal in area. This Court held that the sum of Rs. 800 which had been paid before the Sub-Registrar was the correct price of the land under pre-emption. The District Judge also pointed out that Mardan had been converted into a District. (It was made a District on January 1, 1937). He observed that in expectation of the conversion of Mardan into a District from a sub-division the price had been gradually rising round about that town. He also adverted to the sales of lands belonging to Attar Singh in a Court auction. These sales took place on March 31, 1937, April 1, 1937 and April 6, 1937. The land was sold at an average rate of Rs. 149-11-8 per marla. He mentioned the fact that the owners had stated before the Collector that the land was at least worth 90 per marla. Taking all these factors into consideration the Judge arrived at the conclusion that Rs. 80 per marla, or in other words Rs. 1,600 per kanal, was a fair average price of the land in suit. He therefore increased the price payable to the owners accordingly.

The Secretary of State has come up on appeal to this Court. The learned Counsel has pointed out that besides the copy of the mutation which has not been attested, no proof has been produced to show that Fateh Mohd. Khan sold 10 mls. of land to Ghulam Haider at Rs. 750. He referred to s. 23 (1), Land Acquisition Act, in which the market value of the land in the neighbourhood on the date of the sale has been laid down as the criterion for assessing the price to be paid to the owner for forcible acquisition. He objected to the admissibility of the evidence with regard to the sales of Attar Singh's lands. He said that the sales took place long after the notification had been issued for the acquisition of the land in suit. Counsel did not attach any value to the fact that the land was situated near the other habitations and also remarked that there was nothing to indicate that the proposal to convert Mardan into a District had anything to do with the rise of prices in the locality in which the land is situated. We have given the matter our careful consideration. It is in the award of the Collector that a Police Station was built close to this land in 1923. It is not therefore a matter for surprise that the proximity of the Police Station encouraged the building of houses in this locality. In fact the Collector has said :

"As I have remarked in my previous award good many houses have been built in the vicinity and many more are being built. The land became more costly being suitable for the construction of houses near the civil lines."

We are satisfied therefore that the land should be treated as one used for building purposes and that in view of its potentiality as a building site the most lucrative and advantageous price should be fixed for its forcible acquisition. We are fortified in this opinion by the remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council in a ruling reported in Narayana Gajapatiraju v. Revenue Divisional Officer, Vizagapatam (1). At p. 102* their Lordships have remarked :

"It is perhaps desirable in this connection to say something about this expression 'the market price.' There is not in general any market for land in the sense in which one speaks of a market for shares or a market for sugar or any like commodity. The value of any such article at any particular time can readily be ascertained by the prices being obtained for similar articles in the market. In the case of land, its value in general can also be measured by a consideration of the prices that have been obtained in the past for land of similar quality and in similar positions, and this is what must be meant in general by 'the market value' in s. 23. But sometimes it happens that the land to be valued possesses some unusual, and it may be, unique features as regards its position or its potentialities. In such a case the arbitrator in determining its value will have no market value to guide him, and he will have to ascertain as best he may from the material before him, what a willing vendor might reasonably expect to obtain from a willing purchaser, for the land in that particular position and with those particular potentialities. For it has been established by numerous authorities that the land is not to be valued merely by reference to the use to which it is being put at the time at which its value has to be determined (that time under the Indian Act being the date of the notification under s. 4 (1), but also by reference to the uses to which it is reasonably capable of being put in the future. No authority indeed is required for this proposition. It is a self-evident one. No one can suppose in the case of land which is certain, or even likely, to be used in the immediate or reasonably near future for building purposes but which at the valuation date is waste land or is being used for agricultural purposes, that the owner, however willing a vendor, will be content to sell the land for its value as waste or agricultural land as the case may be. It is plain that in ascertaining its value, the possibility of its being used for building purposes would have to be taken into account."

We think that the rate of Rs. 80 per marla fixed by the lower Court is a fair and reasonable price. It is approximately the rate at which Fateh Mohd. Khan sold his land to Ghulam Haider and is nearly half of the peak price reached when the lands of Attar Singh were sold in 1937. A copy of the deed of sale by Fateh Mohd.

Khan to Ghulam Haider has been produced in another case, Secretary of State v. Abdul Ghafur, which is also before us to-day and its correctness is not denied by the Counsel for the appellant. The mutation is therefore a reliable piece of evidence. No doubt the sales of Attar Singh's lands were subsequent to the notification for the acquisition of the land in suit but they indicate the high water mark of the rise in prices which most probably began in 1923 and was accelerated by the proposal to convert Mardan into a District. They are therefore useful in assessing the price of the land in dispute and cannot be ignored. We do not see any ground for disagreeing with the lower Court and dismiss the appeal with costs. Pleadar's fee Rs. 150, half to be paid to Mohd. Saifur and Abdul Ghafur and the other half to the remaining set of respondents in equal shares.

Appeal dismissed.

Bihar and Orissa Municipal Act (VII of 1922), s. 192—Offence under—Sentence—Rigorous imprisonment in default of payment of fine cannot be awarded.

A person committing an offence under s. 192 of the Bihar and Orissa Municipal Act is liable to be fined but is not liable to imprisonment otherwise than in default of payment of the fine. Therefore, by reason of s. 67 of the I. P. C., the imprisonment to be awarded in default of payment of the fine must be 'simple'.

Or. R. from an order of the Deputy Commissioner, Ranchi, dated January 4, 1941.

Messrs. L. K. Chowdhury and R. K. Sahay, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. K. Banerji, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—The petitioner has been convicted of an offence under s. 192 of the Bihar and Orissa Municipal Act (VII of 1922), and has been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50 or, in default, to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one month. The first point to be noticed is with regard to the sentence. A person committing an offence under s. 192 of the Act is liable to be fined—not exceeding Rs. 500 but is not liable to imprisonment otherwise than in default of payment of the fine. Therefore, by reason of s. 67 of the I. P. C., the imprisonment to be awarded in default of payment of the fine must be 'simple'.

With regard to the merits, it has been contended that the prosecution is barred by limitation by reason of the provisions of s. 375 of the Municipal Act, which requires, in the case a continuing offence such as the present, that the prosecution shall be instituted within six months of the commission of the offence, or within six months from the time when it is first brought to the notice of the Commissioners of the Municipality. The Courts below have found in the present case with regard to a part of the building which the petitioner is putting up, that the offence was brought to the notice of the Commissioners within six months of the date on which the prosecution was instituted. The petitioner alleges that the offence was committed on October 16, 1939, and that the Commissioners had notice of it on that date. The Courts found that there was no evidence to show that the offence had been committed on that date and held that the offence had been committed between December 8, 1939, and January 14, 1940. There is no merit in the point.

The rule is discharged subject to this modification that the period of the imprisonment in default of payment of the fine will be one month's simple imprisonment and not one month's rigorous imprisonment.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 437—Scope and object—Essential point to be considered before acting under s. 437—Case before Magistrate in middle of hearing—Order directing commitment is not justified.

Section 437, Criminal P. C., contemplates a case in which there has already been a completed inquiry under the provisions of Chap. XVIII followed by an order of discharge in a case triable exclusively by the Court of Session. The object of s. 437 is to enable the Sessions Judge in such a case to order commitment for trial without the necessity of a fresh and unnecessary inquiry. Such a procedure as is contemplated by s. 437 may be either in a proceeding under Chap. XVIII or in a case in which the accused has been tried out and convicted or acquitted on other charges in a warrant case. Such discharge may be either express or by implication. The essential point either for a Magistrate acting under s. 347 or for a Sessions Judge acting under s. 437 is to make certain that the rights of the accused are in no way prejudiced. [p. 216, col. 1.]

In a case where the Magistrate has only framed charges in respect of certain offences and fixed a date for further cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses and thus the case is still in the middle of its hearing an order under s. 437, Criminal P. C., directing commitment is not justified and must be set aside. 132 Ind. Cas. 47 (1), 190 Ind. Cas. 761 (2) and 93 Ind. Cas. 145 (3), referred to.

Cr. R. for the revision of the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, of Kheri, dated October 26, 1940.

Mr. Siraj Husain, for the Applicant.

The Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Mr. A. N. Mulla, for the Opposite Party (Prem Narain).

Judgment.—This is an application in revision by one Nasimullah against an order of the Additional Sessions Judge of Kheri, directing under s. 437 of the Criminal P. C., that the Magistrate should commit the present applicant to the Court of Session for trial on charges under ss. 367 and 307, I. P. C., in addition to charges under ss. 377/511 and 323 which had already been framed against him.

This case arose out of a first information report filed on June 29, 1940, and registered as a report of an offence under s. 307, I. P. C. The report was made by Jagat Narain Gupta in regard to an offence said to have been committed by the present applicant Nasimullah against his brother Prem Narain. The story told was that Nasimullah wanted to have unnatural intercourse with Prem Narain and kidnapped or abducted him for that purpose. The boy refused to allow unnatural intercourse and the applicant was said to have throttled him so that he became unconscious. The boy Prem Narain was sent for medical examination on June 30, and on July 18, the Police prosecuted the case to Court under s. 377 read with s. 511, and the Magistrate in due course took up the trial as for a warrant case. On September 16, he heard arguments prior to the framing of a charge and it appears to have been urged before him that a prima facie case had been established not only under s. 377 read with s. 511, and s. 323, but also under ss. 367 and 307 or 308, I. P. C. The Magistrate, however, on September 23, framed charges under ss. 377/511 and 323, I. P. C., only and fixed October 4, for further cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses. On the following day, September 24, Mathura Prasad, guardian, of Prem Narain, applied to the Magistrate to commit the case to the Sessions Court on charges under s. 367, 327 and 307 or 308 in addition to the charge under s. 377/511. This application the learned Magistrate returned to the applicant Mathura Prasad with an endorsement "Returned. It must come through P. I." Whether or not the Prosecuting Inspector would have pressed this application cannot be known as on the very next day, September 25, Mathura Prasad filed an application in revision under ss. 435 and 437 of the Criminal P. C., in the Court of the Additional Sessions Judge of Kheri.

The Additional Sessions Judge has written a lengthy order and has ultimately come to the conclusion that he had the power under s. 437 of the Criminal P. C., to direct that Nasimullah applicant be committed for trial upon the matter of the charges under ss. 367 and 307, I. P. C. It is against this order that the present application is filed. Learned Counsel for the applicant contends that this order of the Additional Sessions Judge is bad in every way, and to a certain extent the learned Govt. Advocate has to concede that there is force in this argument. It is doubtless the case that under s. 435 of the Criminal P. C., the Sessions Judge may call for and examine the record of any proceeding before any inferior Criminal Court situate within the local limits of his jurisdiction for the purpose of satisfying himself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order recorded or passed, and as to the regularity of any proceedings of such inferior Court. It is not very clear first of all as to what order the learned Sessions Judge could be justified in considering to be incorrect, illegal or improper. There was nothing at any rate very improper in the Magistrate's endorsement on the application of Mathura Prasad. The case before him was being conducted by the Prosecuting Inspector, the prosecution being by the Crown and any application of the kind should necessarily have been made to him by the Prosecuting Inspector. Secondly it is difficult, to see what irreregularity there was in the proceedings of the Magistrate. The Magistrate had before him a case in which a report had been made, in consequence of which the Police registered a case under s. 307, I. P. C., but the Police had chosen to prosecute the case under s. 377 read with s. 511. It might be that the evidence suggested the possibility of other charges being framed against the accused, but if the Magistrate at that stage of the case thought that the only charges made out prima facie against the accused were charges under s. 377 read with 511 and 323, I. P. C., that was a view which he was perfectly competent to take. It did not tie his hands in any way. He was going on to allow further cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses according to law and further to hear such defence evidence as might be produced by the accused. It would be open to him under s. 347 of the Criminal P. C., if at a later stage he came to the conclusion that the case was one which ought to be tried by the Court of Session, to commit the accused under the provisions herein before contained, that is the provisions stated in Chap. XVIII of the Code. It seems to me prima facie that this was most definitely not the stage at which the Sessions Judge should have interfered with the discretion of the Magistrate. Non-interference could not possibly interfere with the ultimate doing of justice.

Coming now to the order which the Judge did proceed to pass having once sent for the record under the provisions of s. 435, he could, of course, send it back without further comment or with any remarks he might think advisable for the guidance of the Magistrate or he might take action under s. 436 or under s. 437, if either of those sections was properly applicable.

Section 436 prescribes that "on examining any record under s. 435 or otherwise, the Sessions Judge may direct the District Magistrate by himself or by any of the Magistrates subordinate to him to make, and the District Magistrate may himself, make or direct any Subordinate Magistrate to make, further inquiry into any complaint which has been dismissed under s. 203 or sub-s. (3) of s. 204, or into the case of any person accused of an offence who has been discharged."

Provided that no Court shall make any direction under this section for inquiry into the case of any person who has been discharged, unless such person has had an opportunity of showing cause why such direction should not be made."

Prima facie the words "further inquiry" in the first paragraph of this section are applicable to all cases of discharge with the possible exception of that case of discharge which is mentioned in s. 437, that is to say it will cover case of discharge under ss. 203 and 204 or under s. 253 or under s. 209. In none of these cases can there be any question of prejudice to the accused against whom an order is made after he has had an opportunity of showing cause why such order should not be made because the direction for making of further inquiry clearly means that no final order can be passed against such a person without such further inquiry.

The position in regard to s. 437 is very different. That section provides that "when, on examining the record of any case under s. 435 or otherwise, the Sessions Judge..... considers that such case is triable exclusively by the Court of Session and that an accused person has been improperly discharged by the inferior Court, the Sessions Judge..... may cause him to be arrested, and may thereupon, instead of directing a fresh inquiry, order him to be committed for trial upon the matter of which he has been, in the opinion of the Sessions Judge...improperly discharged."

There are two provisos which do not require consideration in the present case.

It seems to me that the clear distinction between ss. 436 and 437 is that s. 437 contemplates a case in which there has already been a completed inquiry under the provisions of Chap. XVIII followed by an order of discharge in a case triable exclusively by the Court of Session. The object of s. 437 appears to be to enable the Sessions Judge in such a case to order commitment for trial without the necessity of a fresh and unnecessary inquiry. Such a procedure as is contemplated by s. 437 may be either in a proceeding under Chap. XVIII or in a case in which the accused has been tried out and convicted or acquitted on other charges in a warrant case. Such discharge may be either express or by implication. The essential point either for a Magistrate acting under s. 347 or for a Sessions Judge acting under s. 437 is to make certain that the rights of the accused are in no way prejudiced, vide for example the case of Ram Ghulam v. Emperor (A. I. R. 1931 All. 434) (1). That was a case of a complaint under s. 363, I. P. C. The prosecution witnesses were examined and cross-examined. A charge was framed and all the defence witnesses were also examined and cross-examined. Then the Magistrate acting under s. 347 of the Criminal P. C., amended and framed the charge under s. 366, I. P. C., and committed the accused for trial. It was held that the procedure of the Magistrate was not illegal. The accused had no right of further examination and cross-examination to disprove the amended charge as every possible defence had been given. The amended charge must be deemed to be framed under s. 210. After the commitment the proceedings must be deemed to be in an inquiry under Chap. XVIII and not in a trial. Further examination and cross-examination could be made in the Court of Session. The crucial question in the case was whether there had been any illegality or irregularity or any prejudice to the accused, and it was held that there was no prejudice.

Strong stress was laid on the same point in Fazal v. Emperor (A. I. R. 1940 Lahore, 389) (2). It was held that "there is nothing in s. 347 to suggest that where a Magistrate decides to commit under that section he should be required to commence proceeding de novo under Chap. XVIII. What is necessary is that as soon as a Magistrate acting under s. 347 has made up his mind to commit, he should be careful not to prejudice the accused by depriving him of the opportunities provided by ss. 208 and 212 of offering defence evidence: and always provided that the requirements of ss. 208, 211 and 212, as well as the formalities required by s. 213 of the Code are carefully observed, there is no reason why a Magistrate should be required to take proceedings de novo under Chapter XVIII of the Criminal P. C."

Great stress in all these cases is laid on the importance of seeing that all the provisions of Chap. XVIII are complied with and the interests of the accused are not prejudiced by his being deprived of any of his rights. On the other hand the order of the learned Additional Sessions Judge in the present case obviously puts the accused at a great disadvantage. The Magistrate has been ordered to commit the case for trial at a stage when the prosecution witnesses have not been recalled for further cross-examination and the original cross-examination, was not an adequate cross-examination because it was recognised that there would be a further right of cross-examination subsequent to the charge. In addition the accused is being deprived of his right to produce defence evidence before the Magistrate. It seems to me that apart from the question whether s. 437 could at all authorise the Sessions Judge to make an order of commitment at this stage it is obvious that this is a case in which he was not justified in so doing. If it is the duty of a Magistrate acting under s. 347 to be most careful to see that the accused has all the advantages which are given to him in an inquiry under Chap. XVIII, it is obviously, one might almost say a fortiori, the duty of the Sessions Judge to be most careful not to make an order which would have the effect of prejudicing the interests of the accused. In my opinion the order was not justified in the circumstances of the case and I am personally also of opinion that s. 437 does not justify such an order in a case which is in the middle of its hearing. Such an order may possibly be justified when a Magistrate has tried out a case and has allowed the accused all the privileges which are common to a full trial in a warrant case and to a full inquiry under Chap. XVIII, but it is certainly not justifiable at the stage at which the order was made in the present case.

In this connection I may refer to an early case of this Court, Bilodar v. King-Emperor (A. I. R. 1926 Oudh, 194) (3), in which it was held that where the Police chalan contains mention of ss. 147 and 304, I. P. C., but the Magistrate, after hearing the evidence for the prosecution, frames a charge under ss. 147 and 325, the accused cannot be said to have been discharged within the meaning of s. 437 and the Sessions Judge is not authorised to order commitment under s. 437. Section 253 suggests that the word 'discharge' means absolute discharge.

"A High Court has itself power under s. 439 read with s. 423, to order commitment in a case, and it would obviously be the proper course for the High Court itself to order such commitment if the Sessions Judge's order is held to be a proper one; however, the action under s. 437 or s. 439 for ordering a commitment should rarely be taken in the midst of a trial, and certainly only when the failure of a Court to commit is shown on the face of proceedings to be improper."

I would further remark that in my opinion such interference with a trial, while it is actually going on, is to be deprecated and even if such a power exists it should only be exercised in rare cases. The Magistrate is himself seized of the case, he has heard the witnesses for the prosecution and he may have come to certain conclusions about them, but his conclusions are not yet final and they will only become final after he has heard the further cross-examination subsequent to the charge. He is at liberty at any stage up to the date on which he may either acquit or convict to take action under s. 347 in respect of the charges with reference to which an application was made to the Sessions Judge. The Sessions Judge will further himself, in case of conviction under other sections, be at liberty to set aside the conviction and order a commitment to Sessions if he thinks the case one in which such a commitment should have been made.

In my opinion, therefore, the order of the Sessions Judge cannot be sustained. I allow this application and set aside the order. It will be open to the Magistrate to deal with the case according to law in whatever way he thinks fit.

COLLECTOR OF BROACH AND PANCH
MAHALS—APPELLANT*versus*

OCHHAVAL BHICALAL—

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 70—Imprisonment suffered in default of payment of fine—Fine, if can still be recovered—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 386 (1) (b) and (3)—S. 386, whether controls s. 70, Penal Code—Effect of s. 386 (3)—Interpretation of Statutes—Adjective law cannot control substantive law in absence of express provision.

The property of the accused is liable to the payment of fine even if he has undergone imprisonment in default of payment of fine.

Section 70, I. P. C., is substantive law as to the payment of fine while s. 386, Criminal P. C., relates to the procedure of its recovery. Section 70, I. P. C., is not therefore controlled by the provisions of s. 386, sub-ss. (1) (b) and (3), Criminal P. C. The warrant issued under s. 386 (1) (b), Criminal P. C., is to be deemed to be a decree for certain purposes only and not for all purposes. For the purpose of limitation therefore the substantive law contained in s. 70 is not affected. The only effect of s. 386 (3), Criminal P. C., is that the warrant which is to be deemed to be a decree is to be executed according to the mode laid down in the civil procedure code. Section 48, Civil P. C., does not prescribe any period of limitation for taking out execution. Section 48, Civil P. C., does not therefore apply to the warrant under s. 386 (3), Criminal P. C.

It is a general rule relating to the construction of statutes that in absence of an express provision, an adjective law cannot control the provisions of substantive law.

Mahals at Nadiad, in Panch Mahals Special Darkhast No. 1 of 1938.

Mr. R. A. Jadhagirdar, Govt. Pleader, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. R. Vidyarthi, P. M. Kapadia and B. Moropanth, for the Respondent.

Divatia, J.—This appeal arises in execution of a darkhast to recover a certain amount by the appellant who is the Collector of Broach and Panch Mahals against the respondent. The latter had been convicted on January 12, 1929, of the offence of cheating and sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment with a fine of Rs. 15,000 and rigorous imprisonment for nine months in default of payment of fine. On May 10, of that year a letter was sent by the Sessions Judge to the Collector under s. 386 (1) (b), Criminal P. C., authorizing him to realize the amount of the fine by execution according to civil process against the immovable property of the defaulter. This letter was sent because the opponent had not paid the amount of fine although he subsequently suffered the period of imprisonment in default of payment of the fine.

Two darkhasts were filed by the Collector in 1929 and 1930 to realize the amount of the fine and a sum of Rs. 4,227 was realized in execution. The third darkhast was filed in 1933 and the undivided interest of the opponent in certain immovable property was ordered to be sold. The sale took place on June 19, 1935, but as there were no bidders the property was not sold and the darkhast was therefore disposed of. Thereafter on February 8, 1938, the present darkhast was filed to recover the balance of the fine out of the interest of the opponent in certain immovable property.

The opponent contended in the course of that darkhast that as he had suffered rigorous imprisonment in default of payment of the fine, his property was no longer liable to the payment of the fine. His second contention was that under s. 70, I. P. C., the fine imposed upon him should have been recovered only within six years from the date of the sentence, and the present darkhast, which was filed in February 1938, after the period of six years was over, was therefore time-barred.

The learned first class Subordinate Judge rightly held on the first point that the claim of the darkhastdar was legal even if the opponent had undergone imprisonment in default of payment of the fine. That is clear from the provisions of the I. P. C.

On the second point, the learned Judge was of the opinion that under the provisions of s. 386 (3), Criminal P. C., the warrant issued by the Collector did not become a decree of a Civil Court for all purposes and that the provisions of s. 70, I. P. C., were not affected by s. 386 (3), Criminal P. C., which was added for the first time in 1923. He therefore held that the darkhast was time-barred and accordingly dismissed it.

This appeal is presented against that order, and it is contended on behalf of the Collector that s. 70, I. P. C., is controlled by the provisions of s. 386, sub-ss. (1) (b) and (3), Criminal P. C. Now it is clear that under s. 70 the fine, or any part thereof which may remain unpaid, may be levied at any time within six years after the passing of the sentence. This means that the fine could not be levied after the period of six years is over except in the circumstances mentioned in that section i. e., where the person is imprisoned for a longer period than six years. Under s. 386, Criminal P. C., as it stood before the amendment of 1923, whenever an offender was sentenced to pay a fine, the Court passing the sentence may issue a warrant for the levy of the amount by distress and sale of any movable property belonging to the offender. By the amendment the power to issue a warrant has been given to the Criminal Court so as to proceed against the movable as well as the immovable property of the defaulter. It is provided therein that the Court might issue a warrant for the levy of the amount by attachment and sale of any movable property belonging to the offender and it may also issue a warrant to the Collector authorizing him to realize the amount by execution according to civil process against the movable or immovable property, or both, of the defaulter. Then sub-s. (3) provides that where the Court issues a warrant to the Collector under sub-s. (1), cl. (b), such warrant shall be deemed to be a decree, and the Collector to be the decree-holder; within the meaning of the Civil P. C., and the nearest Civil Court by which any decree for a like amount could be executed shall, for the purposes of the said Code, be deemed to be the Court which passed the decree. It is lastly provided that all the provisions of that Code as to execution of decrees shall apply accordingly.

Relying on this new provision it is contended by the learned Govt. Pleader that all provisions relating to execution in the civil procedure could be applied to this warrant, which is to be regarded as a decree of a Civil Court, and that s. 48, Civil P. C., would therefore apply to such a warrant. Under that section where an application to execute a decree not being a decree granting an injunction has been made, no order for the execution of the same decree shall be made upon any fresh application presented after the expiration of twelve years from certain dates mentioned therein. Now in the first place it is important to realise that s. 70, I. P. C., is substantive law as to the payment of fine while s. 386, Criminal P. C., relates to the procedure of the recovery. It is true that in certain matters such as the prevention of offences and maintenance of wives and children the Criminal P. C., provides for certain substantive rules, but it is quite clear that s. 386 deals only with procedure of levying the fine imposed under the substantive law of crimes. It is a general rule relating to the construction of statutes that in absence of any express provision, an adjective law cannot control the provisions of substantive law. It must be presumed that the Legislature had the provisions of s. 70, I. P. C., in mind at the time when this new provision was introduced for the first time in 1923, and if no change was made in that section, it must be for the reason that the warrant issued under s. 386 (1) (b), Criminal P. C., was to be deemed to be a decree for certain purposes only and not for all purposes. For the purpose of limitation therefore the substantive law contained in s. 70 was not to be affected.

The warrant which was to be deemed to be a decree was to be executed according to the mode laid down in the civil procedure. That is the only effect of sub-s. (3). But the learned Govt. Pleader says that under that sub-section all the provisions of that Code as to execution shall apply, and that would include the application of s. 48, Civil P. C. But that section only says that no order for the execution of the same decree shall be made upon any fresh application presented after the expiration of twelve years from certain dates. It does not prescribe any period of limitation for taking out execution. That is provided for in the Lim. Act, and, if it was the intention of the Legislature that the provisions of the Lim. Act, were to apply, it would have expressly stated that the warrant, which was deemed to be a decree, was to be governed for the purpose of execution by the Lim. Act. But the fact that it does not say so, and the further fact that there has been no amendment or alteration in s. 70, I. P. C., mean that so far as limitation, i. e., the period during which the fine was to be realised was concerned, it did not contemplate any change. All that it intended to do was that over and above the movable property of the offender the immovable property could also be proceeded with by means of execution of the warrant which was to be treated for that purpose as if it were a decree, but the levy of the fine as against movable as well as immovable property was subject to the control of the provisions of s. 70, viz., that it was to be levied within the period of six years. We think therefore the lower Court was right in holding that the darkhast which was presented after the period of six years from the date of the sentence is barred under s. 70, I. P. C. The order of the lower Court is therefore confirmed and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Execution sale—Nullity—Declaration as to, sought by party—Onus is upon him—Nature of proof required.

When a party seeks a declaration that an execution sale is a nullity it is necessary for him to prove the circumstances which would nullify the sale. It is not sufficient for him to show only that the sale was not held on the first day of the month of sales or on the actual date fixed in the sale proclamation but also to show that the monthly sales had come to an end before the sale was actually held.

A. from a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Darbhanga, dated September 30, 1939.

Messrs. S. K. Mitra, P. B. Ganguly, M. N. Pal and Jotish Brahma, in S. A. No. 928, for the Appellants.

Messrs. L. K. Jha and Rameshwar Chaudhury, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—In these appeals by the two plaintiffs arising out of the same suit, the only question is whether an execution sale is void as it was not held on the date fixed but on a subsequent date. The date fixed for the sale was March 8, 1937. The sale was actually held on the 15th of that month. The Court below has held that no suit lies and the proper remedy was by means of an application under O. XXI, r. 90. Furthermore, the Court has held that possibly March 15, was the date on which the monthly sales were being held in which view the sale in the present instance would have been entirely regular.

On behalf of the plaintiffs-appellant reference has been made to the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Chedami Lal v. Amir Beg (1) in which it was held that a sale before the time fixed for it was a nullity and not a mere irregularity. That case is not of much assistance as it refers to a different state of circumstances altogether. The next case relied on is the decision in Motahar Hussain v. Mohammad Yakub (2). In that case the date fixed for the sale was July 1, 1922. That day was a holiday and, therefore the sale could not be held on it. A title suit was instituted by the sisters of the judgment-debtor claiming the property sought to be sold and praying for stay of the execution sale. In that case an order was passed on July 4, directing that the execution case should be put up on July 7, along with the application for stay. On July 7, the application for stay was objected to and the property was put up for sale on the same date. It was held that the sale was a nullity. It is to be remarked that an application under r. 90, was made to set aside the sale and in exercise of its revisional jurisdiction the High Court set the sale aside on the ground that it has been held although no date had been fixed for it. That case does not appear to be followed in the case of Gobardhan Behari Basu v. Sarat Chandra Bhattacharjee (3). In Jogendra Nath Bhattacharya v. Sheikh Nabi Newaj (4) it was held that a Court could not treat an execution sale as a nullity on the ground that it was not held on the date fixed for it in the absence of an application by the judgment-debtor under O. XXI, r. 90. The order of the Court below declaring the sale to be a nullity was set aside. The two last mentioned Calcutta cases are based on a decision of the Privy Council in which it was held in similar circumstances that the holding of the sale on a date not fixed for it but within the period during which the monthly sales take place could not be treated as a nullity. It is contended by the plaintiffs-appellant that they having shown that March 8, was fixed for the sale and that the sale was not held on that date but on the 15th the onus did not lie on them of showing that March 15, was a date on which monthly sales were continuing. In my opinion, when a party seeks a declaration that an execution sale is a nullity it is necessary for him to prove the circumstances which would nullify the sale. It is not sufficient for him to show only that the sale was not held on the 1st day of the month of sales or on the actual date fixed in the sale proclamation but also to show that the monthly sales had come to an end before the sale was actually held.

In these circumstances the appeals fail and must be dismissed with costs.

U KYAW THA—RESPONDENT

Arbitration—Award—Suit to set aside—Award under Burma Co-operative Societies Act, ignoring law of limitation—Suit to set aside such award, if maintainable.

Courts are always inclined where possible to support the validity of an award and will not lend themselves to a consideration of what a Court of Law would have done, when the parties have agreed on the one hand, or when there is a statutory obligation placed upon them on the other, to refer their disputes to a tribunal which is not a Court of Law. But, on the other hand, that tribunal must come to a decision which is a quasi judicial decision or must make an award which has been arrived at after proper consideration of the case. An arbitrator is bound to give effect to all legal defences including a defence under any statute of limitation.

Consequently where an award made by an arbitrator appointed under the Burma Co-operative Societies Act, has ignored the law of limitation, a suit to set aside the award is maintainable. 178 Ind. Cas. 674 (3), explained.

order to prevent the respondent from filing a suit to set aside the award of an arbitrator and to claim relief under s. 39, Specific Relief Act. What the plaintiff has done in each of the suits is to aver in his plaint that there is no error of law manifest on the face of the record which vitiates an award; some particulars are given and it is said that, although the arbitrator was bound to comply with the law of limitation, he ignored the principles of law and allowed the claim basing his award on a manifestly erroneous legal proposition. And the question is whether this suit is maintainable. Lord Haldane in British Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., Ltd. v. Underground Electric Railways Co. of London Ltd. (1), said:

"I am of opinion, that the doctrine in Hodgkinson v. Fernie (2), to the effect that where an error of law appears on the face of the award the error can be reviewed, is a well established part of the law of the land."

There has been some confusion in connection with arbitrations which are conducted under the Co-operative Societies Act, and I must regret to learn that it has arisen owing to a misunderstanding of the scope of the decision, to which I was a party, in H. C. Dey v. Bengal Young Men's Co-operative Credit Society Ltd. (3). That was a case in which a member of a co-operative society, being bound by the very terms of his membership and the statutes which deal with co-operative societies and their members to refer any dispute between him and the co-operative society which touched its business to the Registrar, was sued and it was held that a suit brought in the Courts was impliedly barred under s. 9, Civil P. C.; and all that that case is authority for, is the simple proposition that where a statute expressly says that persons of a certain class must go to arbitration or must refer their disputes in a particular way and not come to the Courts, they are obliged to take that step and the Courts will not, when they do not take that step, entertain an action by them.

But although that step must be taken in the first instance, the case cited is no authority for the surprising proposition that when an award of an arbitrator has been made, or the decision of the Registrar has been arrived at, an error manifest upon the face of the award or decision leaves the party aggrieved with no remedy and ousts the jurisdiction of the Courts altogether. It has often been observed that Courts are always inclined where possible to support the validity of an award and will not lend themselves to a consideration of what a Court of Law would have done, when the parties have agreed on the one hand, or when there is a statutory obligation placed upon them on the other, to refer their disputes to a tribunal which is not a Court of Law. But, on the other hand, that tribunal must come to a decision which is a quasi judicial decision or must make an award which has been arrived at after proper consideration of the case. I ventured to give this morning as an illustration something which is far different from what is alleged in this case, namely, a case in which an arbitrator being lazy might declare that the issues of law and fact were so complicated that he was just as likely to fall into error as decide right, and thereupon might think he was justified in deciding the case upon the spin of a coin, which would be not his arbitrament but an arbitrament of chance. Other cases may be thought of in which parties may have a right to come to Court to set aside an award not so flagrant; one such would be, in my opinion, the delegation by an arbitrator to some other person never contemplated by the parties, of the duties which lay upon the arbitrator himself.

The question whether in this particular case the arbitrator was right or wrong does not arise at all; nor have we to decide now whether the law of limitation applied, or whether, if it did apply, the arbitrator refused entirely to consider it, or came to a wrong decision of law respecting it; nor have we to decide whether there was an error of law manifest on the face of the award, as the plaintiff pleads. All we have to decide is whether such a suit is maintainable; and if the plaintiff says that there is an error of law, he is clearly entitled to go to the Courts and try to establish that proposition; whether there was such conduct on the part of the arbitrator as would justify the Court interfering, is a matter for the Court before whom the suit is tried. I agree, with respect, with the decision of my learned brother Mackney and find but little to add to it. He has pointed out what are the limits within which the case in H. C. Dey v. Bengal Young Men's Co-operative Credit Society Ltd. (3), may be applied, and, by reference to the existing law on the subject, has shown that this is a case in which the aggrieved party is plainly entitled to challenge the award of the arbitrator. I desire to add very little as to the vexed question of how far an arbitrator should consider the law of limitation: the matter is one which is largely open. This seems clear from the observations in the speech of Viscount Cave L. C., in Board of Trade v. Cayzer Irvine & Co. Ltd. (4). He said:

"I am far from wishing to throw doubt upon the view which has been commonly held, and which was affirmed by the decision of a Divisional Court in In re Astley & Tyldesley Coal and Salt Co., and Tyldesley Coal Co. (5), that an arbitrator acting under an ordinary submission to arbitration is bound to give effect to all legal defences, including a defence under any statute of limitation. A decision against that view might seriously prejudice the practice of referring disputes to arbitration; and, while I am unwilling to pronounce a final opinion upon a question which does not really arise in this case, I certainly say nothing which is adverse to the view to which I have referred."

For these reasons, we think that the learned Judge's decision in second appeal was undoubtedly right and, accordingly, these appeals must be dismissed with costs; Advocate's fee in each appeal six gold mohurs.

Blagden, J.—I agree.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 390, 391—Words 'for that end', in s. 390, meaning explained—Accused first beating complainant and then committing theft—If offence under s. 391 committed.

The words 'for that end' used in s. 390, I. P. C., clearly mean that the hurt caused by the offender must be with the express object of facilitating the committing of the theft, or must be caused while the offender is committing the theft or is carrying away or is attempting to carry away the property obtained by the theft. It does not mean that the assault or the hurt must be caused in the same transaction or in the same circumstances: 38 Ind. Cas. 730 (1) and 147 Ind. Cas. 99 (2), referred to. [p. 224, col. 1.]

Where it was established that the accused persons first belaboured the complainant and his servant and subsequently committed the theft of the cash:

Held, that in the circumstances it could not be said that whatever injury was caused it was caused when the assault was made with the primary object of enabling the accused to the committing of the theft. The assault or the beating had no relation whatever to the commission of the theft, although the theft was committed at the same time or immediately afterwards. The accused were not, therefore, guilty of an offence under s. 394. [p. 224, col. 1.]

Or. R. Apps. of the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Hardoi, dated March 5, 1941.

Dr. J. N. Misra, for the Applicants.

The Assistant Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Order.—These are three connected criminal revisions by Bishambhar, Hitta Singh, Bechey Lal and Roop Narain alias Filas, who were convicted by a Magistrate under s. 394 of the I. P. C., and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for one year and a fine of Rs. 50 each, and whose convictions and sentences were upheld in appeal by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Hardoi.

The prosecution case against the applicants briefly was that on November 11, 1940, the applicants went to a carnival show held at Hardoi, where they tried their luck what is known as dart shooting stall. This stall had a table placed in the middle which had different colours painted on it. There was a board which had similar colours just behind the table. Those who wanted to bet were given three darts with which to shoot at the board at the colour selected by them. The customers paid one anna at least for each set of darts. Filas applicant along with his companions started the betting at about 8 p. m. and this went on for about three hours. At about 11 p. m. Filas bet Rs. 2 on a white colour and threw all his three darts. These did not hit X a white colour at the board, but they hit a black colour. Filas demanded his money back claiming that he had bet on a black colour and had consequently won. The Manager in charge of the stall refused to accept his claim and asserted that he had really bet on a white colour. This led to an altercation between Filas on the one side and the Manager on the other. There was an exchange of hot words between the two persons with the result that all the four accused including Filas tore down the cloth surrounding the booth, entered the enclosure and began to belabour the Manager, Maqbul Husain P. W. No. 1 and his assistant Agha Khan, P. W. No. 2, with fists, kicks and lathis.

The accused overpowered the two persons, and removed the cash box and the money lying on the table. The cash box which contained Rs. 114 was turned down by Filas accused and its money was taken away by all the accused. There were a number of spectators at the spot, and it is somewhat remarkable that the carnival staff which had arrived at the spot on hearing the alarm was not able to arrest the accused with the help of the spectators, due, it is stated to the fact that the accused were armed with lathis. The accused disappeared with the booty. The two Police constables who were on duty at the carnival premises, arrived at the spot after the accused had run away. Maqbul Husain, the Manager received six injuries while his companion Agha Khan, received three. These injuries were simple. Maqbul Husain was advised to lodge a report at the Police Station by the constables, who remained at the spot to guard the scene of occurrence. They detained some persons who were eye-witnesses of the occurrence. Maqbul Husain made the first information report at the Police Station at 12-30 A. M. In this report the facts stated above are substantially repeated, but the important fact which needs special mention is that the report says that upon an altercation ensuing between the Manager and Filas accused on the question whether he had bet on a white colour or a black colour, Filas and his companions looted all the cash in the cash box and the other money which was lying on the table, and that when they were restrained from doing so then Filas and his companions began to beat Maqbul Husain and Agha Khan with their lathis.

The Sub-Inspector arrived at the scene of the occurrence soon after the report and examined the witnesses to the occurrence. He arrested all the accused except Filas who had absconded. The accused denied the charge and put up a counter story which need not now be discussed as it has been rejected by the learned Magistrate and the learned Additional Sessions Judge. The learned Magistrate upon a consideration of the entire prosecution evidence came to the conclusion that all the accused were present at the shooting stall as stated by the prosecution witnesses, and that they took part in the assault upon the Manager and his servant and that they further robbed them of the money. He held that all the accused were guilty of an offence under s. 394 of the I. P. C.

and sentenced each of them to undergo one year's rigorous imprisonment and pay a fine of Rs. 50. The learned Additional Sessions Judge dismissed the appeals of all the accused.

The learned Counsel on behalf of the applicants has argued that even accepting the evidence of the prosecution witnesses the necessary ingredients of an offence under s. 394 of the I. P. C. have not been established and a conviction under that section is not legally sustainable. Reference has been made in this connection to the definition of the word, 'robbery' in s. 390 of the I. P. C. The relevant portion of s. 390, I. P. C. lays down that

"Theft is 'robbery' if in order to the committing of the theft, or in committing the theft, or in carrying away or attempting to carry away property obtained by the theft, the offender, for that end, voluntarily causes or attempts to cause to any person death or hurt or wrongful restraint, or fear of instant death or of instant hurt, or of instant wrongful restraint."

It is argued before me that although the first information report did actually set out the case that when the Manager of the stall and his servant attempted to stop the accused from removing the cash, the latter pounced upon them and started belabouring them. This story is, however, contradicted by the prosecution evidence, which is to the effect that when an altercation ensued the accused started beating the Manager and his servant, and when they succeeded in overpowering them the accused removed the cash and ran away. In other words while, according to the first information report, the beating followed the theft of cash, according to the evidence of the prosecution the beating preceded the theft. I have looked into the evidence of Maqbul Husain, P. W. No. 1, Agha Khan, P. W. No. 2, Rahim Khan, P. W. No. 3 and Matroo P. W. No. 4, and it seems to me that there is force in the contention that Maqbul Husain and Agha Khan were first belaboured as a result of the quarrel and the money from the cash box on the table was removed subsequently, while accepting the prosecution evidence in agreement with the opinion of the Courts below I hold that it has been satisfactorily established that the accused persons first belaboured the Manager and his servant and subsequently committed the theft of the cash. The question for determination upon this finding, therefore, is whether the offence falls within the purview of s. 394 of the I. P. C. Can it be said in the present case that in order to the committing of the theft of cash or in committing the theft of cash; or in carrying away or attempting to carry away property obtained by the theft, the accused, for that end, voluntarily caused or attempted to cause hurt? The words 'for that end' used in s. 390 of the I. P. C. in my opinion, clearly mean that the hurt caused by the offender must be with the express object of facilitating the committing of the theft, or must be caused while the offender is committing the theft or is carrying away or is attempting to carry away the property obtained by the theft. It does not mean that the assault or the hurt must be caused in the same transaction or in the same circumstances. A Bench of the Madras High Court in Karuppa Gounden and Kothukara Thirumalai Gounden v. Emperor, (18 Cr. L. J. p. 346) (1) has held that "the words 'for that end' in s. 390 of the I. P. C. cannot be read as meaning 'in those circumstances'."

It was held by the Lahore High Court in Karman v. Emperor, (35 Cr. L. J., p. 297) (2) that "before a person can be convicted of robbery the prosecution must prove that hurt was caused in order to the committing of the theft or in committing the theft or in carrying away or attempting to carry away the property obtained by the theft. The hurt contemplated must be a conscious and voluntary act on the part of the thief for the purpose of overpowering resistance on the part of the victim, quite separate and distinct from the act of theft itself."

In the present case it cannot be contended with any show of reason that whatever injury was caused it was caused when the assault was made upon the stall Manager and his servant with the primary object of enabling the accused to the committing of the theft. I am satisfied, therefore, that the assault or the beating had no relation whatever to the commission of the theft, although there is no doubt that the theft was committed at the same time or immediately afterwards. I am of opinion that the accused are not guilty of an offence under s. 394 of the I. P. C. I therefore set aside their convictions on the charge of robbery. The result of this finding is that all the accused will, however, be liable under s. 323 of the I. P. C. I therefore, alter the conviction of the applicants under s. 394 of the I. P. C. to one under s. 323 of the

I. P. C., and reduce their sentence to three months' rigorous imprisonment under the latter section.

As regards the question whether the applicants are guilty of an offence under s. 379 of the I. P. C., the learned Counsel on behalf of the applicants has argued that the only person liable under this section is Filas, who according to the evidence of Kartar Singh P. W. No. 6, in the main case and of Matroo, P. W. No. 4, in the cognate case, alone removed the cash. This argument ignores the other prosecution evidence on the record which is unanimous upon the point that all the four accused removed the cash. This evidence was accepted by both the Courts below, and it is not open to the applicants to urge in revision that in preference to that evidence the evidence of these two witnesses, namely, Matroo, P. W. No. 4 and Kartar Singh, P. W. No. 6, should be given greater weight. I therefore hold that all the applicants committed the theft of the cash and are consequently liable under s. 379 of the I. P. C. In my opinion the ends of justice will be sufficiently met if Bishambhar, Hittā Singh and Beche Lal accused, are sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for six months each and a fine of Rs. 50 each under s. 379 of the I. P. C. Roop Narain alias Filas, who appears to have taken the leading part, deserved no reduction in sentence. He is accordingly sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 50 under s. 379 of the I. P. C. In default of payment of fine, each accused will undergo another six weeks rigorous imprisonment.

The result is that I allow the revision applications in part, set aside the convictions and sentences of the applicants under s. 394 of the I. P. C., convict them under s. 323 of the I. P. C. and s. 379 of the I. P. C. and sentence them as stated above. The sentences of rigorous imprisonment under ss. 323, I. P. C. and 379, I. P. C. shall run concurrently.

Government of India Act, 1935, (25 & 26 Geo. V, Ch. 42), s. 208 (b)—Leave to appeal to Privy Council—Grounds—General importance of cases—Decision dealing with decrees whose number is limited—No leave can be granted.

The Federal Court will not be disposed to grant leave to appeal to the Privy Council save in cases of real importance, cases which are likely to affect a large number of interests thereafter or cases in which difficult questions of law are involved. Where a decision deals with appeals whose number is limited and cannot be added to, no leave can be granted to appeal against it.

App. for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council under s. 208 (b) of the Govt. of India Act, 1935.

Mr. Mohammad Taqi, Senior Advocate, Federal Court, (Raghbir Singh with him), instructed by B. Banerji, Agent, for the Applicant.

The Opposite Party was not represented.

Gwyer, C. J.—This is an application for leave to appeal under s. 208 (b) of the Constitution Act. The case was one in which the appellant had sued the respondent for a sum due under a promissory note and had obtained a decree. After the decree had been obtained, the Mad. Agri. Relief Act became law. That Act gave agriculturist debtors the right to have their debts drastically scaled down, and s. 19 empowered the Courts to apply its provisions to a decree for the payment of a debt obtained against an agriculturist before the commencement of the Act. This Court, when the case came before it, heard arguments on a variety of questions, including the question whether the Act conflicted with the Negotiable Instruments Act, which is an Act within the exclusive competence of the Central Legislature; but a majority of the Court were of opinion that questions relating to the Negotiable Instruments Act were irrelevant for the purposes of the case, and held that the original debt had merged in the decree and that the scaling down was of a liability evidenced by a decree and not by a negotiable instrument at all.

Counsel for the appellant has cited to us a number of decisions in which the Judicial Committee itself has indicated the principles on which it will act when advising His Majesty to grant or withhold special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. This Court will not attempt to formulate in advance any code of rules which it will take for its guidance in granting or withholding leave to appeal to the Judicial Committee, and will deal with each case on its merits as it comes before it. But it will not be disposed to grant leave to appeal save in cases of real importance, cases which are likely to affect a large number of interests hereafter or cases in which difficult questions of law are involved.

In the present case the decision of the Court dealt only with the scaling down of decrees obtained before the Mad. Act came into force. The number of such decrees must necessarily be limited, and there can be no addition to their number. In a case which was before us in May 1939 and in which we had refused leave, the applicant afterwards petitioned the Judicial Committee for special leave to appeal. The Judicial Committee, in refusing special leave, emphasized the fact that the decision of this Court was concerned with the construction of a section which would have no application in the future: Hori Ram Singh v. King-Emperor (1). It appears to the Court that this is a sufficient reason for refusing leave in the present case. It should be added that the amount in dispute in the case appears on the figures which were given to us not to have exceeded Rs. 3,000 or Rs. 4,000 at the outside.

The majority of the Court declined to enter into any of the other questions which were raised at the Bar and reserved their opinion upon all of them. There is therefore nothing to prevent these matters being raised and determined at any future time in an appropriate case.

The application is dismissed.

PATNA HIGH COURT

Appeal from Appellate Order No. 290 of 1940

April 17, 1941

DHAVLE, J.

BIKRAMA LAL—APPELLANT

versus

MAHARAJ BAHADUR RAM RAN

BIJAYA PRASAD SINGH—

RESPONDENT

Bihar Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 177-A (b)—Exemptions in s. 177-A, if confined to rent executions—House of judgment-debtor when exempt from sale under s. 177-A (b), stated—It must belong to raiyat and occupied by him as such.

Section 177-A, Bihar Ten. Act, gives exemptions which are not, in terms at any rate, confined to rent execution.

Under the Proviso to s. 177-A (b) the houses of *raiya*ts and under-*raiya*ts are saved from execution sales when the execution relates to decrees for arrears of rent due in respect of lands other than the sites of the houses. But execution against the site of a house on a decree for arrears of rent due in respect of other land would obviously be a money execution as distinguished for a rent execution, and it is precisely in such cases that sub-s. (b) of s. 177-A exempts houses from sale. It cannot be said that s. 177-A does not apply to money executions, and that therefore, the house of the judgment-debtor can be sold. But what cl. (b) of s. 177-A saves is a house belonging to the *raiya*t and occupied by him as such.

A. from an order of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Arrah, dated May 31, 1940.

Mr. A. B. N. Sinha, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. P. Sinha, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the judgment-debtor. In execution of a decree for arrears of rent the decree-holder respondent proposed to proceed in execution against the appellant's house in Buxar. This was refused by the executing Court on the ground that what the landlord was taking out was a rent execution and that under s. 177-A (b) of the Bihar Ten. Act the house of the judgment-debtor cannot be sold in execution. The landlord appealed, and the lower Appellate Court considered that the decree-holder was entitled to take out a money execution and that this was a money execution, with the result (so the Court took it) that the matter was not governed by s. 177-A (b), and that therefore, the house could be sold.

It has been contended on behalf of the judgment-debtor-appellant that the lower Appellate Court fell into an error as regards the application of s. 177-A. A rent execution strictly so-called is execution against the holding following upon a rent decree strictly so-called, and cases are not unknown where holders of rent decrees strictly so-called fail to bring about a rent execution by inadvertence, for example, in leaving out one of the judgment-debtors during the execution proceedings. Section 177-A gives exemption which are not, in terms at any rate confined to rent executions. It says that a decree for arrears of rent obtained against a *raiya*t or an under-*raiya*t shall not be executed (a) by the detention in the civil prison of the judgment-debtor, or (b) by the sale of houses and other buildings belonging to the *raiya*t or under tenant and occupied by him; and to cl. (b) an exception is furnished by the proviso that any such house or building... may be sold in execution of decrees for arrears of rent due in respect of the site of such house or building. It follows from this proviso that the houses of *raiya*ts and under-*raiya*ts are saved from execution sales when the execution relates to decrees for arrears of rent due in respect of lands other than the sites of the houses. But execution against the site of a house on a decree for arrears of rent due in respect of other land would obviously be a money execution as distinguished from a rent execution, and it is precisely in such cases that sub-s. (b) of s. 177-A exempt houses from sale. It is impossible to agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that s. 177-A does not apply to money executions and that therefore, the house of the judgment-debtor can be sold. The Assistant Govt. Advocate who appears for the respondent-decree-holder has not contested the point made by Mr. Sinha on behalf of the appellant, so far as the exemption of the *raiya*t's house in execution of a decree for arrears of rent due in respect of land other than the site of the house is concerned. He has, however, contended on the authority of Bajinath Ram Marwari v. Rai Kumar Sinha (1), that what cl. (b) of s. 177-A saves is a house belonging to the *raiya*t and occupied by him as such. In the present case, as I understand, the house that the decree-holder desires to bring to sale in execution is situated in Buxar, while the land which was the subject-matter of the rent suit brought by the respondent lies a couple of miles away. The appellant is or was working about the Courts in Buxar, and it is a serious question in the case whether or not the house that the decree-holder desires to proceed against is occupied by the appellant as a *raiya*t. Mr. Sinha has urged that this point should not be now investigated because it has so far been taken for granted that the house is occupied by the appellant as a raiyat. Of this, however, I can see no trace in the papers before me. The result is that while the view of the lower Appellate Court that the house can be sold because s. 177-A does not apply to money executions must be overruled, I am not in a position to dispose of the appeal finally, for the decision must turn on a finding on the question whether or not the house is occupied by the appellant as a raiyat. On this point the lower Appellate Court will remand the case to the trial Court for taking evidence and recording a finding. The lower Appellate Court will then dispose of the appeal in accordance with the law. The costs of the hearing in this Court, including a hearing fee of one gold mohur, will abide the event, and there will be no order regarding the costs already incurred in the lower Appellate Court.

s. Order accordingly.

Testamentary Case No. 1 of 1940

B. LAKHSHMI SHANKER AND ANOTHER
versus

In the matter of the estate of the late
KUNWAR RAMSHANKER

Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925), ss. 229, 230, 231, 232, 234—Validity of will disputed by executor—He must accept or renounce executorship before validity of will is adjudicated upon, on application of another person—Word "prove", meaning of—Construction of sections of Act—Reference to English Law.

It is implied by ss. 229 and 230 of the Succession Act that an executor who disputes the validity of a will appointing him as such must accept or renounce his executorship under s. 229 before the validity of the will is adjudicated upon on an application for letters of administration by another person. Motibai v. Karandas Narayandas (1), 60 Ind. Cas. 974 (2), 94 Ind. Cas. 73 (3) and Bewsher v. Williams Ball (4), referred to. [p. 227, col. 2.]

The word "prove" in ss. 231, 232 and 233 of the Succession Act, is used primarily in its ordinary meaning. It is not used in the sense of taking of letters of administration or of taking of probate in the case of an executor. [p. 230, col. 1.]

The Courts should not read into the sections of the Succession Act a construction which is at variance with the ordinary meaning of the words used merely because there is a distinction in English Law between a citation to propound and prove a will and a citation to take probate.

Judgment.—The question referred to the Full Bench is:

Is it implied by ss. 229 and 230 of the Indian Succession Act that an executor who disputes the validity of a will appointing him as such must accept or renounce his executorship under s. 229 before the validity of the will is adjudicated upon on an application for letters of administration by another person?

The question arises out of an application for letters of administration in respect of a will executed by Kunwar Ram Shankar on October 8, 1935. Kunwar Ram Shankar died on March 8, 1937. By this will he appointed his elder son, B. Baijnath Shankar, sole executor. The applicants for letters of administration are his second son, B. Lakshmi Shankar, and the minor son of B. Baijnath Shankar under the guardianship of B. Lakshmi Shankar. A caveat was entered by B. Baijnath Shankar who alleged that the will of October 8, 1935, was revoked by a later will of August 16, 1936.

The applicant prayed that citation might be issued to B. Baijnath Shankar under s. 229 of the Indian Succession Act calling upon him to accept or renounce his executorship. He objected to the issue of such a citation on the ground that it would be premature, representing that it should not issue until the applicants have established that the will of October 8, 1935, is the last will and testament of Kunwar Ram Shankar.

The referring order shows that different views have been taken by Bombay High Court on the one hand and the Calcutta and Madras High Courts on the other, but the facts in the cases cited are not parallel to those in the present case.

In Motibai v. Karandas Narayandas, (I. L. R. 19 Bom. 123) (1), the Bombay High Court considered the effect of the reply of an executrix to a citation that she did not renounce the executorship and held that this did not amount to an acceptance. They did not consider whether the citation had issued prematurely.

In Sarojini Dasi v. Rajlakshmi Dasi, (I. L. R. 47 Cal. 838) (2), the Calcutta High Court held that letters of administration should not have been granted without issue of a special citation to the executor to accept or renounce his executorship, but added the obiter dictum that the executor was not bound to accept or renounce his executorship unless and until the validity of the will was established.

In the Madras case of Venkataramier v. A. Govindarayaiah, (A. I. R. 1926 Madras, 605), (3) the Madras High Court no doubt held that an executor may challenge the genuineness of a will and at the same time claim probate if it is proved to be genuine, but this was a case where a will was propounded by one executor and disputed by another. Section 229 did not apply to the facts of that case. Under s. 224 where several executors are appointed probate may be granted to them all simultaneously or at different times. It is open therefore for an executor to apply for probate after probate has been already granted to another executor. There is no provision for the issue of a citation to an executor on an application by another executor. Section 229 only comes into operation on an application for letters of administration.

(1) 19 B 123.

(2) 47 C 838; 60 Ind. Cas. 974.

It appears therefore that there is no Indian authority directly on the point under consideration.

Sections 231, 232 and 234 show in what cases and to whom letters of administration may be granted.

Section 231, provides that if an executor renounces or fails to accept an executorship within the time allowed the will may be proved and letters of administration may be granted to the person who would be entitled to administration in case of intestacy.

Section 232, provides that where no executor has been appointed, where an executor is legally incapable or refuses to act or has died, or where an executor dies after proving the will but before administering the estate a universal or a residuary legatee may be admitted to prove the will and letters of administration with the will annexed may be granted to him.

Section 234, provides that where there is no executor and no residuary legatee or he declines or is incapable to act, or cannot be found, the person or persons who would be entitled to the administration of the estate of the deceased if he had died intestate, or another legatee having a beneficial interest or a creditor, may be admitted to prove the will, and letters of administration may be granted to him or them accordingly. Admittedly, it would be under this section that letters of administration would be granted in the present case, if at all.

It will be observed that in all these cases it appears to be implied that the conditions which justify a grant of letters of administration must be satisfied before anyone but an executor "may be admitted to prove the will." In section 231 one of the conditions is that the executor renounces or fails to accept the executorship; in section 232 one of the conditions is that the executor refuses to act; and s. 234, includes cases where the executor declines to act. No distinction would appear to be intended for this purpose between absolute renunciation of an executorship, failure to accept an executorship and refusal to act. No one is given any locus standi any power to take any steps to prove the will unless and until one of the conditions laid down in these sections is satisfied, and it certainly seems to be implied that the person who proves the will shall be entitled to letters of administration. On a consideration only of the terms of these sections we should therefore be disposed to answer the question which has been referred in the affirmative.

This conclusion might also be supported by the argument that there is nothing in the Act which indicates that any other procedure is contemplated. If the other view be adopted it would be necessary for the Court first of all to determine on the application of a non-executor whether the will was proved, and then to ascertain before proceeding further whether the condition which alone would justify a grant of letters of administration to a non-executor was satisfied. We find it very difficult to believe that such a procedure was intended.

Learned Counsel for B. Baijnath Shankar has referred to the provisions of English Law, but we have not been able to find any English authority which is directly on the point.

The Indian Succession Act provides only for the issue of a general citation under s. 283 (1) (c) calling upon all persons claiming to have any interest in the estate of the deceased to come and see the proceedings before the grant of probate of letters of administration, a special citation under s. 229 calling upon the executor to accept or renounce his executorship, and a citation under s. 235 calling on the next-of-kin to accept or refuse letters of administration where the question of a grant of letters of administration to a legatee other than a universal or residuary legatee is under consideration. In English Law a citation may issue calling upon anyone concerned, including an executor to propound a will.

In the case of Bewsher v. Williams, Ball reported in 164 English Reports, 1195 (4), the testatrix died on April 19, 1859, leaving one will dated March 15, 1863, wherein she appointed the Rev J. Bewsher residuary legatee.

gatee; and another dated March 15, 1857, wherein she appointed Williams executor. Mr. Bewsher propounded the will of 1853 and cited the executor and parties interested in the will of 1857 to propound and prove it if they thought fit to do so. A legatee named Mrs. Ball propounded it. Its validity was contested by Bewsher on the ground of the deceased's insanity, but the will was held valid. The Court was moved to grant letters of administration with the will annexed to Mrs. Ball and objection was taken to this on the ground that the executor and residuary legatee named in the will had not been cited. It was argued that they had been cited to propound and prove the will and had failed to do so and therefore under s. 16 of the Probate Act, 1868, the executor not having appeared on a citation to take probate, the right to the executorship had ceased. It was said by the Court (Sir Cresswell):—

"I do not think that in the citation you speak of the term 'prove' is used according to the meaning or spirit of this section. There is a difference between being cited to propound and prove a will, and being cited to take probate. I cannot make the grant to Mrs. Ball until Mr. Williams has renounced or has been cited to take probate."

Learned Counsel has argued on the basis of this authority that the words, "the will be proved" in s. 231, and "to prove the will" in ss. 232 and 234 do not mean the establishment of the validity of the will by evidence, but rather the subsequent taking of letters of administration, this corresponding to the taking of probate in the case of an executor.

We have considered whether this construction can be placed on the word "prove" in the sections of the Indian Succession Act under consideration. It would no doubt be possible to hold that it means "take probate" in cases where probate is granted to an executor, but it could only mean "take letters of administration" by analogy. We very much doubt whether this was the intention, particularly as the language of ss. 231, 232 and 234 does not in our opinion, support this construction. It would be necessary to hold that where one of these sections says that a legatee may be admitted to prove the will and letters of administration may be granted to him, the meaning is that he may be allowed to take letters of administration and letters of administration be granted him, which is tautologous.

It has been suggested that the words "may be admitted to prove the will" in s. 232 cannot mean "be allowed to establish the will by evidence," but must have some other meaning, because the contingency referred to in cl. (c) of that section is that "the executor dies after having proved the will" and therefore no further proof is necessary. But the words have also to be considered in connection with the two previous contingencies referred to in cls. (a) and (b), in which it would certainly be necessary for the legatee to establish the validity of the will by evidence. No doubt where the will has already been proved by the executor it would not be necessary for the legatee to do more than produce the "probate" (as defined in the Act). It may also be that the words "to prove the will" mean more than merely to establish the validity of the will by evidence; they may mean "to do whatever may be necessary to obtain probate or letters of administration," as the case may be; but that would in most cases include establishing the will by evidence. So that it does not appear possible to hold that wherever these words are used they refer to a stage subsequent to the establishing of the validity of the will by evidence.

It has also been suggested that it would be anomalous if an executor who has disputed a will propounded by another executor is allowed subsequently to claim probate jointly with him, and yet be barred from asserting his right as executor under a will which has been successfully propounded by a legatee. But it is to be noted that in the former case the successful executor is not displaced by the unsuccessful executor; he merely becomes a joint executor with him, while if an executor who has disputed a will propounded by a legatee is allowed subsequently to obtain probate he ousts altogether the legatee, although the latter has won his case and the executor has lost it.

We were referred to some observations of the Calcutta High Court in Brojo Lal Banerjee v. Saharajubala Debi, (I. L. R. 51 Cal. 745) (5), which are pertinent in considering whether the provisions of the Indian Succession Act should be interpreted in the light of English Law. In this case the question under consideration was whether an executor who had renounced his executorship could thereafter apply for probate. The Calcutta High Court observed (at p. 758*) ceased is no doubt liable to account for his dealings with the estate. It appears that in England the Court may compel such an executor to take out probate so as to represent the estate. It is unnecessary for us to consider in the present case whether the law is the same in this country as no one applied for compelling the appellant to take out probate. We may, however, observe that the practice in England has grown up under different conditions and is regulated by different statutes, and the practice there need not necessarily be followed by us here.

"A person intermeddling with the estate of the deceased."
(5) 51 C 745; 84 Ind. Cas. 154; A I R 1924 Cal. 864.

Further on he said (at p. 759*) :—

It has been contended before us on the analogy of English cases decided under 20 & 21 Victoria Ch. 77 s. 79, that it is open to the executor to retract his renunciation so long as no fresh grant of administration has been made to some other person."

"It seems to have been held in England that the old practice was not abrogated by the statute and the Court is not itself concluded, but may permit a retraction of an executor's renunciation in a fit case..... It is fruitless to endeavour to interpret the rules relating to procedure under the Indian Act by reference to what has been decided with regard to another statute in England on different considerations even if the language of the two statutes had been the same."

We do not consider that we should read into the sections of the Indian Succession Act under consideration a construction which is at variance with the ordinary meaning of the words used merely because there is a distinction in English Law between a citation to propound and prove a will and a citation to take probate. We can find no such distinction in the Indian Act. We hold that the word "prove" in ss. 231, 232 and 234 of that Act is used primarily in its ordinary meaning and we accordingly answer the question which has been referred to us in the affirmative.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. II, Art. 17, Sch. I, Art. 1—Suit falling under Art. 17—Court-fees payable on plaint and memo. of appeal arising out of such suit—Joint property—Partition suit—Plaintiff claiming to be in actual or constructive possession—Appeal arising from such suit—Plaintiff found not to be in possession—Court-fee payable—Sch. I, Art. 1, applicability of.

The wording of Art. 17, Court Fees Act, which are plain and explicit should be given their ordinary meaning. They show clearly and indubitably that when a suit falls under any one of the clauses of Art. 17, Sch. II, the plaint as well as the memorandum of appeal arising from such a suit, is chargeable with a fixed court-fee of ten rupees only, irrespective of whether the subject-matter in appeal is or is not capable of being estimated in money value. Therefore in appeal arising from a suit for partition of alleged joint properties, of which the plaintiff claimed to be in actual or constructive possession, a court-fee of Rs. 10 is payable on the memorandum of appeal, even though the trial Court had found the plaintiff not to be in possession of some or all such properties. 170 Ind. Mr. S. M. Sikri, for the Advocate-General, for the Financial Commissioners.

Tek Chand, J.—The question, referred to the Full Bench, relates to the amount of court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal presented in this Court against the preliminary decree in a suit for partition of alleged joint properties. The suit was brought by the plaintiff-appellant on the allegation, that he and the defendants were joint owners of four houses, described as alif, be, jim and dal in the plaint, that he was in actual possession of the entire house dal and of a part of house be and in constructive possession as a co-parcener or co-owner of the remaining two houses; that it was not possible for the parties to continue to hold these properties jointly, and, therefore, he sued for separation of his one-fourth share by metes and bounds and delivery of possession of the portion allotted to him. The suit was valued for purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 5,200 and a court-fee of ten rupees was paid on the plaint under Art. 17 (vi) of Sch. II, Court Fees Act.

The defendants pleaded that the plaintiff had no concern with houses alif and jim which were owned exclusively by them and that house be belonged to a third party, of a part of which the plaintiff had taken forcible possession. They admitted that house dal was ancestral of the parties and stated that they had no objection to the plaintiff's one-fourth share in it being separated, provided he paid his share of the money, which had been paid by one of the defendants to redeem a mortgage created by the common ancestor. In the written statement the defendants had raised the objection that the plaint was insufficiently stamped, the proper fee payable being ad valorem on one-fourth of the market value of the four houses in dispute. This objection, however was subsequently withdrawn in view of the Full Bench decision of this Court in Asa Ram v. Jagan Nath (1), in which it had been laid down that a suit for partition of alleged joint properties of which the plaintiff claimed to be in actual or constructive possession was governed by Art. 17 (vi) of Sch. II and a fixed court-fee of ten rupees was payable on the plaint.

The parties went to trial on the merits and the Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff was not a co-owner of houses alif and jim which belonged exclusively to the defendants, that house be belonged to a third party but the plaintiff was in possession of a part of it, that house dal only was jointly owned by the parties and that the plaintiff was entitled to have his one-fourth share in it separated without any payment. He accordingly passed a preliminary decree for partition of the plaintiff's share in house dal and appointed a local Commissioner to suggest the mode of partition. The suit relating to the other three houses was dismissed. From this decree the plaintiff appealed to this Court praying that a preliminary decree for partition of houses alif, be and jim also be passed. He valued the appeal for purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 5,200 and stamped the memorandum with a court-fee of Rs. 10 only. On an objection by the Stamp Reporter that the proper court-fee payable on appeal was ad valorem on one-fourth of the market value of houses alif, be and jim, the case was placed before the Taxing Officer. He was inclined to hold that having regard to the nature of the suit from which the appeal arose the memorandum was sufficiently stamped, but in view of conflicting rulings which had been given from time to time, he referred the matter to the Taxing Judge. The learned Taxing Judge was of the opinion that this difficult and frequently arising question should be authoritatively settled by a larger Bench. Accordingly this Bench has been constituted to hear the reference. Notice of this reference was sent to the Financial Commissioners and we have had the advantage of hearing Mr. Sikri on their behalf.

As stated above, the plaintiff alleged in the plaint that he and the defendants jointly owned all the four houses in dispute. He also averred that he was in actual possession of some of them and in constructive possession of the others. On these allegations he asked for partition of his share. It has been held in Asa Ram v. Jagan Nath (1), and this view is now accepted by most of the High Courts, that the real relief asked in such a suit is the change in the mode of enjoyment of the properties from joint possession to separate possession and that it is not possible to estimate its value in money. It has, accordingly, been held that such a suit falls under cl. (vi) of Art. 17. Mr. Sikri admitted the correctness of this decision so far as the court-fee payable on the plaint in a suit of this kind is concerned. He contended, however, that the position in an appeal arising from such a suit was materially different. In appeal (he urged) we have to look to the subject-matter of the dispute in appeal and if this can be estimated in money value, ad valorem court-fee would be payable on it under Art. 1 of Sch. I of the Act, even though the suit, as originally brought, fell within some other article. He pointed out that the suit has since been tried and the Court has found that the plaintiff had neither title in, nor possession of the properties to which the appeal related. He maintained, therefore, that the relief asked in appeal was not merely for change in the mode of enjoyment of these properties, but to establish the appellant's title and possession of his alleged share in them, that this relief was not incapable of being estimated in money and therefore Art. 17 (vi) did not apply.

The contention for the appellant, on the other hand, is that on the plain wording of Art. 17 of Sch. II, court-fee payable on a memorandum of appeal arising from suits falling under any of the clauses of that article is Rs. 10, and that for this purpose what has to be looked at is not the finding of the trial Court but the fact that the appeal is from a decree passed in such a suit. The question for determination, therefore, is whether Art. 17 (vi), Sch. II, or Art. 1, Sch. I governs the case. Schedule I of the Act prescribes ad valorem fee at certain specified rates on the documents described in the various articles of that schedule. Article 1, (omitting words which are not necessary for our present purposes) reads as follows:

"Plaint or memorandum of appeal, not otherwise provided for in this Act, ... presented to any Civil Court, except those mentioned in s. 3."

It will be seen that this is the residuary article and applies only when there is no other provision in the Act, governing the case under consideration. If therefore the memorandum of appeal in a particular case falls within Art. 17 of Sch. II, Art. 1 of Sch. I will obviously not apply. Article 17 of Sch. II prescribes a fixed fee of Rs. 10 on

"plaint or memorandum of appeal in each of the following suits :

- (i) * * * *
- (ii) * * * *
- (iii) * * * *
- (iv) * * * *
- (v) * * * *

(vi) every other suit where it is not possible to estimate at a money value the subject-matter in dispute, and which is not otherwise provided for by this Act."

It is clear from the opening part of Art. 17 that in suits falling within any of the six clauses mentioned in this article, the court-fee leviable on plaints as also on the memoranda of appeal arising from such suits is the same. In interpreting this article the Full Bench held in Asa Ram v. Jagan Nath (1) that for the purpose of determining the amount of court-fee payable on a plaint in a suit for partition of property, alleged to be joint of the plaintiff and defendants and of which the plaintiff alleges to be in actual or constructive possession, the allegations in the plaint are to be considered and no regard is to be had of the defendants' denial of the plaintiff's alleged title or possession. The provision in the article relating to memoranda of appeal is identical and, therefore, if the appeal arises from such a suit the fee payable thereon is the same and it is immaterial what the findings of the Courts below are and whether the appeal is presented by the plaintiff or the defendant. This view has been taken in a number of cases decided in other Courts. The latest case in Calcutta is Jyoti Prasad Singha Deo v. Jogendra Ram Ray (2) where it was held that a suit for partition of joint property is, with reference to the matter of court-fees, governed by Sch. II, Art. 17 (vi), Court Fees Act, and in appeals against decrees from partition suits, the proper court-fees payable are those specified in that article. At p. 191* it was observed :

"The present case seems to be clearly governed by the plain language of Sch. II, Art. 17, cl. (vi) and the moment it is shown, as has been shown in this case, that the memorandum of appeal arises, in the suit where it is not possible to estimate the money-value of the subject-matter in dispute and which is not otherwise provided for by the Act, the plaintiff can claim that the court-fees payable are those provided for in that article. So far as this Court is concerned, it has always been recognized that in appeals against decrees from partition suits, the proper court-fees payable are Rs. 10 and this has been raised to Rs. 15 by the amendment of 1922. It does not matter whether the ground of attack is with reference to the allotment of specific portions of immovable or movable property or the ground of attack is the question of costs.

Suppose in a partition suit a sum of money has been awarded to one of the parties as owelty money and the party against whom the payment of the owelty money has been directed is aggrieved by such a decree, then he is entitled to prefer an appeal to this Court; and it can hardly be said that in such a case, although the matter arises in a partition suit, the court-fees leviable would be the amount of the owelty money which forms the subject-matter of the complaint in the appeal."

This decision is in accord with an earlier ruling of Sir Richard Garth, C. J., given as far back as 1882 in Kirty Churn Mitter v. Annath Nath De (3) where it was held that the stamp fee payable on appeals to the High Court in suits asking for partition, the separation of a share, and for khas possession of that share after separation is that leviable under Art. 17 (vi), Sch. II, Court Fees Act. More recently, the Lucknow Chief Court had to consider this question in Parmeshur Din v. Har Gobind Prasad (4). In that case, the plaintiff had brought a suit for partition of certain alleged joint property, alleging that he was a co-sharer in joint possession. The lower Court, finding that the property was not owned by the parties jointly but was the self-acquired and separate property of the defendant, had dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed paying court-fee under Art. 17 (vi). On objection that ad valorem court-fee on the value of the plaintiff's alleged share in the property was payable, it was held by a Division Bench that as the suit from which the appeal arose was for partition of joint properties which the plaintiff alleged were in his actual or constructive possession, the court-fee payable on the plaint was that under Art. 17 (vi) and as the case remained the same in appeal, so far as its nature was concerned "the fee payable was the same and not ad valorem on the value of the share sought to be partitioned."

In Abdul Rahman v. A. B. Crisp, 126 Ind. Cas. 645 (5) a Division Bench of the Rangoon High Court held that in appeals arising from suits falling under Art. 17 the principle of valuing the appeal must be the same as the principle used in valuing the original plaint for purposes of court-fee. In Allahabad, the leading case on the subject is Jai Pratap Narain v. Rabi Pratap Narain (6). There, the plaintiff alleging himself to be in joint possession of certain property as a member of a joint Hindu family, sued for partition and separate possession of his share paying a court-fee of Rs. 10 on the plaint. The trial Court found that the parties were not members of a joint family and that the plaintiff was not in possession and dismissed the suit. On the question of insufficiency of court-fee being raised, it was held that the memorandum of appeal was properly stamped. It was, however, observed, following the practice of that Court with regard to appeals as well as plaints that, if subsequently the Court found that the appellant had not established his joint possession, it could require the plaintiff to make good the deficiency on obtaining an adjudication in his favour on the merits.

The only case of Court outside the Punjab cited by Mr. Sikri is Nand Kishore v. Achambit Kumar (7), decided by James, J. as Taxing Judge. In that case the learned Judge pointed out that it has not ordinarily been the practice of the Patna High Court to depend exclusively on the averment in the plaint for the ascertainment of what should be the proper court-fee payable, which should be determined on an appreciation of what the plaintiff really sought. Applying this rule of practice to the particular case before him, the learned Judge held that where in a partition suit the lower Court had found that the plaintiff was out of possession of some properties in dispute and the suit had been dismissed qua these properties, the memorandum of appeal should bear ad valorem court-fee on the value of such properties. This, of course, follows logically from the view which the Patna High Court has all along taken with regard to valuation of partition suits. This view, however, was not accepted by this Court in Asa Ram v. Jagan Nath (1), which has authoritatively settled the law on that point so far as this province is concerned.

The learned Counsel cited a number of decisions of the Punjab Chief Court and this Court, but it is unnecessary to refer to the cases decided prior to 1934, when the Full Bench set at rest the conflict relating to valuation of suits for partition of alleged joint properties of which the plaintiff claimed to be in actual or constructive possession. I shall therefore refer to the more recent cases to which our attention was drawn by the learned Counsel. In Sukha Nand v. Shiv Devi (8), the particular question now before us was not considered. It was conceded by Counsel who appeared for the appellant in that case that if the lower Court had decided the question of plaintiff's title and possession after recording evidence ad valorem court-fee would be payable on the memorandum of appeal but as in that particular case the Court had shut out all evidence relating to possession, it was claimed that a court-fee of Rs. 10 only was payable. This contention was obviously untenable and was rejected.

In R. F. A. No. 279 of 1938 (unreported) the High Court had found as a fact that the plaintiff had not established his ownership of the properties in dispute and therefore it was held that the claim for partition was not maintainable. The learned Judges also gave it as an additional reason for dismissing the appeal that ad valorem court-fee had not been paid on the memorandum of appeal. There was no discussion of the point nor was a considered decision given. The matter has been before the learned Taxing Judge in a number of cases. R. F. A. No. 128 of 1939 is a case on all fours with the case before us. It was held there that the memorandum of appeal must bear ad valorem court-fee on the properties, of which the appellant seeks partition but of which the trial Court had found that he was not entitled to partition. In that case the question was not considered in the light of the wording of Art. 17 (vi), to which no reference is made in the judgment. In subsequent cases this case was distinguished: see e. g., R. F. A. No. 145 of 1940, and a court-fee of Rs. 10 was held to be sufficient under Art. 17 (vi).

The above review of the case-law shows that the consensus of authority is in favour of the view put forward by the appellant. Mr. Sikri conceded that this was so. He however referred to a large number of cases decided in this and other Courts, in which a court-fee of Rs. 10 had been held payable, under cl. (vi) of Art. 17, on memoranda of appeal arising from suits for recovery of money, or possession of immovable property, or other reliefs where the appeal related to a matter which it was not possible to estimate in money value. From this, the learned Counsel asked us to infer that the word "suit" in the opening part of Art. 17 should be taken to have been used by the Legislature in its wider significance, as meaning not merely proceedings in the trial Court but also those in the Court of Appeal. He maintained that if this were so, that part of the Article which prescribes the court-fee payable on memoranda of appeal must be taken to be limited to those cases only in which it is not possible to estimate in money value the subject-matter in appeal, irrespective of the nature of the suit from which the appeal arose. In my opinion, this does not necessarily follow from the rulings cited by the learned Counsel and, in any case, I do not see why the wording of Art. 17 which are plain and explicit should not be given their ordinary meaning. They show clearly and indubitably that when a suit falls under any one of the clauses of Art. 17, Sch. II, the plaint as well as the memorandum of appeal arising from such a suit, is chargeable with a fixed court-fee of ten rupees only, irrespective of whether the subject-matter in appeal is or is not capable of being estimated in money value. My answer to the reference therefore is that in appeal arising from a suit for partition of alleged joint properties, of which the plaintiff claimed to be in actual or constructive possession, a court-fee of Rs. 10 is payable on the memorandum of appeal, even though the trial Court had found the plaintiff not to be in possession of some or all such properties.

Din Mohammad, J.—I agree with the judgment of my learned brother, Tek Chand, J.

Skemp, J.—I agree. Reference to my notes of the argument in R. F. A. No. 128 of 1939 shows that Art. 17 ((vi)) was mentioned, but it was only mentioned. The Taxing Officer in his note on the present case says that the argument based on the opening words of Art. 17 (vi) is a new argument; and it certainly is as far as I am concerned. R. F. A. No. 128 of 1939 must be taken as having been wrongly decided.

D. Answer accordingly.

Execution — Ghatwali tenure — Judgment-debtor ghatwal of ghatwali governed by Bengal Regulation XXIX of 1814 — Surplus profits are available for satisfaction of decree—What would be surplus profits is to be determined by Court executing decree—Consideration in determining surplus profits—Allowance to be paid to judgment-debtor for his maintenance and other expenses—Tenure under attachment of government for their dues—Receiver appointed — Commissioner fixing allowances to be paid to ghatwal—Government dues satisfied — Surplus profits under attachment by Civil Court—Allowances fixed by Commissioner are not binding on Civil Court.

Where the judgment-debtor is a ghatwal in the Santal Parganas whose ghatwali tenure is governed by Ben. Regulation XXIX of 1814 and is inalienable the surplus profits of such ghatwali tenure which may be left "after the payment of Govt. revenue, the wages of the chowkidars employed by the ghatwal and other like charges" are available for the satisfaction of decrees obtained against the ghatwal. 76 Ind. Cas. 8 (1) and Rajkeswar Deo v. Bunshidhar Marwari (2), referred to.

The question of what would be the surplus profits available to the decree-holders of the ghatwal must be determined by the Court executing the decree. Whatever is left to the ghatwal out of the income of his tenure "after the payment of Govt. revenue, the wages of the chowkidars employed by the ghatwal and other like charges" is his personal property and as such liable to be seized and appropriated by the decree-holder. The ghatwal's maintenance allowance and other personal expenses do not come within the expression "other like charges". The Court, however, executing the decree must make provision for the maintenance and other necessary expenses of the ghatwal judgment-debtor. His maintenance allowance cannot be regarded as salary to be fixed by the executive authorities. Where the surplus profits are under attachment by the Civil Court, it is that Court which has to determine the amount of surplus profits available to the decree-holder and for that purpose to fix the allowance to be paid to the judgment-debtor for his maintenance and other expenses. The Receiver in possession of the judgment-debtor's estate is under the control and supervision of the executing Court and must, therefore, prepare the budget with the sanction of that Court. 180 Ind. Cas. 8 (3), referred to.

Where the profits of the ghatwali tenure were attached by the Govt. for the recovery of their dues and a Receiver was appointed for the satisfaction of those dues and after the satisfaction of the Govt. dues the surplus profits are under attachment by the Civil Court, the allowances to be paid to the ghatwal fixed by the Commissioner of the Division at that time are not subsequently binding on the Civil Court, which can reduce the allowances according to the circumstances.

A. from an order of the District Judge of Santal Parganas, dated March 4, 1940.

Mr. Sambhu B. Prasad, for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. C. Mazumdar and K. P. Sukul, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of an execution proceeding. The judgment-debtor is a ghatwal in the Santal Parganas whose ghatwali tenure is governed by Ben. Regulation XXIX of 1814 and is inalienable. It is well settled that the surplus profits of such ghatwali tenure which may be left "after the payment of Govt.

revenue, the wages of the chowkidars employed by the ghatwal and other like charges" are available for the satisfaction of decrees obtained against the ghatwal—see Tikait Damodar Narain Singh v. Ganga Ram (1) and Rajkeswar Deo v. Banshidhar Marwari (2). In the present execution case (No. 9 of 1934) which was started in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Deoghar, the decree-holder prayed for attachment of the surplus profits of the judgment-debtor's ghatwali tenure. In the meantime in December 1934 the surplus profits were attached by the Govt. for satisfaction of certain Govt. demands other than revenue, and the tenure was placed in charge of a Receiver. In the said execution case (No. 9 of 1934) the Court ordered that the surplus profits would be made available for the satisfaction of the decree after realisation of the Govt. dues. The Govt. dues were satisfied in December 1937. Thereafter the surplus profits were attached by the executing Court in the said execution case (No. 9 of 1934).

When the surplus profits were under attachment by the Govt. the Commissioner of the Bhagalpur Division fixed certain allowances to be paid to the ghatwal, namely Rs. 300 monthly for his maintenance, Rs. 300 annually for puja expenses and Rs. 200 annually for house repairs.

In 1939 the rentals of all estates and tenures in the Santal Parganas were reduced by 25 per cent. under Reg. I of 1939 for the purpose of giving relief to the tenants. In consequence of this reduction, the Receiver framed a fresh budget in which he reduced the monthly maintenance allowance of the judgment-debtor ghatwal from Rs. 300 to Rs. 250 and the annual allowance for puja expenses from Rs. 300 to Rs. 250 and for house repairs from Rs. 200 to Rs. 100. When the budget was submitted to the Subordinate Judge for sanction, the judgment-debtor took objection to the reduction in his aforesaid allowances. The learned Subordinate Judge overruled his objections and with certain modifications with regard to other matters he sanctioned the budget as prepared by the Receiver. The judgment-debtor appealed against his order to the District Judge of Dumka, who dismissed the appeal. The judgment-debtor has now come up to this Court in appeal.

In this appeal the objection is pressed

(2) 23 C 873.

only with regard to the monthly maintenance allowance of the judgment-debtor. The contention raised is that the services to be rendered by a ghatwal being of a public nature, his maintenance allowance should be fixed by the executive authorities, and in the present case the allowance having already been fixed by the Commissioner of the Bhagalpur Division, it could not be altered by the Civil Court without the Commissioner's sanction. In the first place, this objection does not appear to have been taken in either of the Courts below. In the next place, the question of what would be the surplus profits available to the decree-holders of the ghatwal must be determined by the Court executing the decree. Whatever is left to the ghatwal out of the income of his tenure "after the payment of Govt. revenue, the wages of the chowkidars employed by the ghatwal and other like charges" is his personal property and as such liable to be seized and appropriated by the decree-holder. The ghatwal's maintenance allowance and other personal expenses do not come within the expression "other like charges". The Court however, executing the decree must make provision for the maintenance and other necessary expenses of the ghatwal judgment-debtor. His maintenance allowance cannot be regarded as salary to be fixed by the executive authorities. The surplus profits in the present case being now under attachment by the Civil Court, it is that Court which has to determine the amount of surplus profits available to the decree-holder and for that purpose to fix the allowance to be paid to the judgment-debtor for his maintenance and other expenses. The Receiver now in possession of the judgment-debtor's estate is under the control and supervision of the executing Court and must, therefore, prepare the budget with the sanction of that Court.

A similar question was raised and decided by this Court in Bansidhar Shroff v. Thakur Ashutosh Ghatwal (3). In that case it was held that when an executing Court is a Civil Court, that Court has to appoint a Receiver to make an estimate of the collections and expenditure of the estate which he has to submit to the Court for approval and it is the duty of the Court to pass final orders settling the budget.

In the last place, the Commissioner of the Bhagalpur Division fixed the allowances apparently because the surplus profits were attached by the Govt. and the Receiver was appointed for satisfaction of the Govt. dues. The Govt. dues have been satisfied and now the surplus profits are under attachment by the Civil Court. The allowances which were fixed by the Commissioner at that time cannot now be binding on the Civil Court.

It is also faintly contended that the reduction of the maintenance is not justified. But, as the learned District Judge has rightly pointed out, "this is purely a matter of cutting the coat according to the cloth". Sitting in second appeal, I find it difficult to hold that the learned Courts below were wrong in reducing the amount of the maintenance allowance.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 162—Report made to Police by accused after first information report—Accused not questioned by Police—Admissibility of—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 8, 25—Self-exculpatory report made by accused to Police—Admissibility.

Where after the first information report of a murder has been made and recorded, the accused makes a report to the Police by voluntarily going to the Police Station, by way of defence and possibly by way of reply to the report already made and no question is put to him by the Police and his report is not recorded as a report but only noted in the general diary, such a report is not a statement made in the course of investigation within the meaning of s. 162, Criminal P. C., and is not inadmissible. Such report is admissible under s. 8, Evi. Act.

A report made to the Police by the accused which is of a self-exculpatory nature, should not be excluded under s. 25, Evi. Act, as being of a nature of confession made to the Police Officer. 180 Ind. Cas. 1 (1), relied on.

Cr. A. against the order of the Sessions Judge, Fyzabad, dated June 11, 1940.

The Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Mr. Ali Hasan, for Accused Nos. 2 and 3 Pandohi and Musai.

Judgment.—This is a Govt. appeal under s. 417 of the Criminal P. C. against the acquittal on May 30, 1940, by Mr. Ali Hammad, Sessions Judge of Fyzabad, of three men named Bhagi alias Bhagirath, Pandohi, and Musai on a charge under s. 302 of the I. P. C.

On the admission of the appeal it was ordered by this Court that non-bailable warrants for the arrest of the accused should be issued under s. 427 of the Criminal P. C. Pandohi and Musai have been arrested, but it has not been found possible to arrest Bhagi. The hearing of this appeal has been delayed on this account. As the District Magistrate has reported that there is little prospect of his arrest in the near future the appeal has been heard against Pandohi and Musai. Pandohi is Bhagi's brother, and Musai is his cousin.

The accused were charged with having committed murder by intentionally causing the death of a man named Binda with spears and lathis on the night between November 18 and 19, 1939.

The first report in the case was made at the Musafirkhana Police Station in the Sultampur District at 10 A. M. on November 19, by Sat Narain, brother of the deceased Binda. Sat Narain and his brother lived in Keshopur, some six miles from this Police Station.

Sat Narain's story was that the previous night while he, his brother Binda and his nephew Tung Nath were warming themselves by a fire Bhagi came and asked Binda to accompany him to keep watch over a jarhan crop. Binda was reluctant to go, but on being pressed agreed. Some time after midnight Sat Narain heard a cry of "thief" from the direction of the houses of Bhagi and Musai, which, as the sketch plan Ex. 17 shows, are situated to the south of Sat Narain's house. He and others went there and found Bhagi striking a man with a lathi, while Pandohi and Musai were kicking him. There were saying that they had caught a man who had been lifting the thatch with a view to enter the house. Sat Narain and the others who had come up asked Bhagi to stop beating him. Bhagi did not stop immediately and when he did the man was found to be dead. It was then discovered that he was Binda.

The report then proceeded to indicate a motive for the crime. During Bhagi's absence from the village his wife had contracted an illicit connection with Binda, and on the death of Harkhu, Bhagi's brother his widow also contracted illicit connection with Binda. Nevertheless on his return home Bhagi effected friendship with Binda and so the latter had confidence in him. The report suggested that Bhagi had asked Binda the previous night to assist him in watching the jarhan crop merely as a pretext to get him away from his house, and had then killed him in the field where there were stains of blood. The sketch plan Ex. 17 it may be mentioned, shows the jarhan field as some distance to the north of Binda's house. There were also traces of blood, the report continued, from the field up to Bhagi's house. Consequently Sat Narain suspected that Bhagi, Pandohi and Musai had killed Binda and then had raised a false cry of thief.

The report also showed that Sat Narain had been unable to procure men to bring the body with him and added that his relative Ranchhor and the chaukidar would bring it after they had collected men. The evidence of Ranchhor (P. W. No. 8), who is Binda's son-in-law, and the chaukidar, Debi Din, (P. W. No. 4) shows that they brought Binda's body to the Police Station and that they were accompanied there by Bhagi and Musai. An entry (Ex. 13) in the Police Station general diary shows that Bhagi and Musai helped to carry the corpse there.

A report (Ex. 12) was made at the Police Station at 10.45 A. M. by Musai, the contents of which were corroborated by Bhagi. The report was recorded in the general diary by the Head Constable Mahadeo Singh (P. W. No. 15) who had recorded Sat Narain's report. Musai's report was to the effect that he and Bhagi had found a thief lying on the ground under a nim tree behind his house and that Bhagi had struck him with a lathi. It was then found that the thief had died and the corpse was identified as that of Binda. Musai could not say who had killed Binda. He had called the chaukidar and come with him to the Police Station to make this report against Binda that he had tried to break into the house to commit theft. He had come at the request of Bhagi and also of one Sukhnandan Brahman—"otherwise we will be implicated."

It is noted after this entry in the general diary that as a report had already been made against Bhagi and Musai under s. 302 of the I. P. C. they were taken into custody and their persons examined and searched. A fresh abrasion was found on Bhagi's right elbow and what appeared to be blood-stains were found at two places on Musai's shirt. On their admission in jail two abrasions were noted on Bhagi's elbow

The Head Constable explained that he did not record Musai's report on the prescribed form as in his opinion it did not amount to a report either of a cognisable or of a non-cognisable offence.

We may mention here that the Sessions Judge held that this report was inadmissible. For reasons which we shall give later we cannot concur in this view.

The post mortem examination was performed by the Civil Surgeon of Sultanpur on the afternoon of November 20. His report and evidence show that Binda was about 35 years of age. No less than 43 injuries were found on his body. There were a large number of incised wounds, incised punctured wounds, and abrasions, mostly on the legs, thighs, arms and head. There were ruptures of the left lung, peritoneum, spleen, and left kidney. Death had probably occurred from shock and hæmorrhage, and the injuries having apparently been caused a little time before death.

No Sub-Inspector was present at the Police Station when the report was made and the Head Constable sent a constable (not a witness) to the village. The Second Officer, M. Abdul Majid, arrived at the Police Station within an hour. He prepared an inquest report and sent the corpse to the mortuary at Sultanpur. He took possession of Musai's shirt. He then went to the village which he reached about 4 P. M. He prepared the plan Ex. 17. He searched the joint house of Bhagi and Pandohi and recovered therefrom a lathi and a kurta. He also took a lathi from Musai's house. He examined the jarhan field where it was suspected that Binda had been murdered and found what he thought was blood stained earth some of which he took into his possession. He did not find any blood-stains near the houses of the accused. There was no sign of anyone having tried to lift the thatch of Musai's house. He was unable to find Pandohi and he deputed constables to arrest him.

The Station Officer, M. Bashir Ahmad, took over charge of the investigation on the morning of November 20, M. Abdul Majid remaining in the village with him until the 22nd. Pandohi appears to have been arrested shortly after the arrival of the Station Officer. Pandohi gave some information to the Station Officer and various articles were discovered with his assistance. There were:—

(1) a blanket Ex. V from a heap of straw at the back of his house :

(2) a spear-head Ex. XI from a sugarcane field :

(3) a chadar Ex. III and angocha Ex. VI which were found buried in the mud of a tank.

Of these Mst. Dropadi (P. W. No. 6) wife of Binda, identified the chadar as that of her husband, and a witness named Nand Kumar (P. W. No. 16) identified the spear-head as that of Bhagi. There were eleven small holes in the chadar which appeared to have been caused by a sharp-pointed instrument.

These and some other articles, thirteen altogether were sent to the Chemical Examiner who found blood-stains on the eight of them by the spectroscopic test and blood-stains on the remaining five by the benzidine test, though not by the spectroscopic method. They were all sent on to the Imperial Serologist who found five articles stained with human blood; the blood-stains on four others were disintegrated and he could not determine their origin; no blood was detected on the remaining four.

Of the five articles found to be stained with human blood two were articles of clothing taken from the deceased. The third was earth taken from the alleged scene of the murder; the fourth was the kurta taken from the house of Bhagi and Pandohi, and the fifth was the blanket Ex. V which had been taken from the same house. The prosecution suggestion is that the body had been carried in this blanket from the jarhan field to the place where it was found.

The Chemical Examiner had detected blood-stains on Musai's shirt, but the Imperial Serologist could not determine their origin as the blood-stains were disintegrated.

As regards the motive for the crime we have the evidence of Binda's brother Sat Narain and Bhagi's wife Mst. Mendia. From the evidence of Sat Narain it appears that on Harkhu's death his widow Mst. Chhutka went to live with her brother-in-law Bhagi. Sat Narain stated in the Magistrate's Court that there was no dharrua form of marriage between the two, while in the Sessions Court he stated that there was, but this discrepancy on a minor point is not sufficient to discredit his evidence about their relations. It would appear, therefore, that Bhagi had strong reason for enmity with Binda in that Binda had deprived him not only of his own wife, Mst. Mendia, but also had intrigued with the woman Mst. Chhutka whom he had taken to live with him after his brother's death. Mst. Mendia herself fully supported the prosecution allegation of illicit intercourse between her and Binda, stating that she was turned out of her husband's house because of this illicit connection which resulted in her pregnancy. She admitted that she had given out at the time that a man named Sukh-nandan was responsible for her pregnancy, but said that she had done this at the instance of Binda. We have no doubt that this evidence establishes the existence of a motive.

The Sessions Judge was of opinion that the prosecution had failed to establish any motive. He said that there was no legal evidence to bring home the connection of the deceased with Mst. Chhutka. We have, however, the definite evidence of Sat Narain on this point. He was not cross-examined about it, and there is no apparent reason why his evidence should be rejected.

To support the allegation that Bhagi came and took Binda away on the night of November 18, on the pretext that he required his assistance in watching the field, there is the evidence of Sat Narain, Binda's brother, and Tung Nath his nephew, as well as that of Mst. Dropadi, Binda's wife. The Sessions Judge disbelieved this story because he did not think that it was proved that Bhagi had any interest in this jarhan field. The accused Bhagi and Pandohi denied, that they had joint cultivation in it with Binda, and it was admitted that the patta was in the names only of Binda and his brother Sat Narain. Moreover the prosecution witness Jiawan admitted that the jarhan crop had been harvested by Sat Narain.

On the other hand there is evidence that Bhagi had an interest in the crop. It was not stated by Sat Narain in the first information report that they had a joint interest in this field, but in his evidence he said that all three accused had at various times kept watch over the crop there. He was not cross-examined particularly with regard to their interest in the crop. The crop had been harvested and had been stacked in the field, and if Bhagi had an interest in it, it was not unnatural that he should have suggested keeping watch over it. The Sessions Judge thought that there was a contradiction in Sat Narain's evidence about Bhagi going on previous occasions with Binda to the field. Bhagi is said to have returned to his village from abroad the previous Kunwar and "according to his own showing he used to come every two or three years". The Sessions Judge thought it impossible to reconcile this with Sat Narain's statement that Bhagi used to go in previous years with Binda to keep watch over the field. We do not think that there is contradiction because it is quite possible that Bhagi did go with Binda and others whenever he re-visited his village. We can find no good reason to reject the story that Binda was taken away by Bhagi on the night of November 18, on this pretext. According to the evidence of Sat Narain Bhagi asked this witness to lend him a tatti of straw and the witness allowed him to take his tatti. Bhagi promised to supply Binda with a blanket. A tatti of straw was found in the jarhan field, and the prosecution suggestion is that the blanket supplied by Bhagi was the one recovered from his house (Ex. V).

The Civil Surgeon deposed that death probably occurred two hours after the last meal and on the evidence that the deceased took his last meal about 7 or 7-30 p. m. the Sessions Judge concluded that the murder was committed about 10 or 10-30 p. m. It might, we think, have been committed rather earlier than this, as Bhagi is said by Sat Narain to have come for Binda about two and half hours after night-fall, and the evidence of Mst. Dropadi shows that he came not long after Binda had taken his evening meal.

It is not possible to fix the time of the discovery of the corpse with any certainty, but it was no doubt in the early hours of the following morning. Sat Narain gives the time as about 1-30 A. M. but it may have been later. As no blood-stains were found between the jarhan field and the place where the corpse was lying it would appear that bleeding had had ceased before it was removed from the field. The statement by Sat Narain in his report that there were blood-stains between the two places was not confirmed by the investigating officers.

The Sessions Judge entirely rejected the story that the corpse was found behind the houses of the accused, together with the story that they themselves had drawn attention to it by raising a cry of thief and beating and kicking it. He said that the story of the body being brought to this place was "ab initio improbable and appears to be a pure fiction". He was of opinion that the absence of blood-stains proved that it was false. If, he said, the murder was committed between 10 and 10-30 p. m. there must have been some effusion of blood when the body was brought to the kulia, (lane between the house of the accused) since blood remains fluid for some time after death and rarely begins to coagulate until four hours and sometime not until twelve hours after death.

We do not think that there is any force in this argument because it may very well be that the body was not brought to the kulia until more than four hours after death. Moreover if it was carried there in a blanket it is quite possible that no blood-stains would have been found either in the kulia or at the place where the body was alleged to have been dragged. We are quite unable, therefore, to agree with the Sessions Judge that the absence of blood-stains at these places throws any doubt on the prosecution evidence that the body was found behind the houses of the accused.

A criticism of the Sessions Judge about this blanket which we are entirely unable to follow is based on the fact that "it contains no small holes made with some sharp pointed instrument." The Sessions Judge remarked that "if the blanket was really in the use of the deceased at the time he was murdered then it must have contained such holes as are said to have been noticed in other articles of the deceased."

No doubt this would be so if the deceased kept the blanket round his body while he was being attacked, but in our opinion it is extremely unlikely that he would have done so. In any event as we do not know the exact circumstances of the attack upon him it cannot be said that he was using the blanket it must have been pierced by the sharp-pointed instrument or instruments which caused some of his injuries.

Before considering other criticisms of the Sessions Judge we may first refer briefly to some other prosecution evidence. The witness Sahtu deposed that some time prior to the alarm of thief he had seen the three accused together with a fourth man, whom he did not recognise, carrying a bundle and coming from the north towards the south. He accosted them and recognised the voice of Bhagi replying. He also recognised all three accused from their appearance.

stated that as he was going to his jarhan field that night he saw the three accused going in the same direction. He went with them part of the way.

The chaukidar, Debi Din, (P. W. No. 4) deposed that Musai had come to him two gharis before sunrise and told him that his house had been broken into by four thieves, that he and his cousins Bhagi and Pandohi had seized one of them and the others had escaped. He had beaten the man who had been caught. He asked Debi Din to accompany him to the Police Station to make a report. Debi Din went back with him and found the dead body of Binda lying in front of Bhagi's door.

Finally there is the evidence of a witness named Durga Din (P. W. No. 11) who stated that he went to Bhagi's house on hearing that thieves had been there and questioned Bhagi. Bhagi had replied:

"To kuch hona tha woh ho gaya" which may be translated:—

"What had to be, has taken place".

The Sessions Judge rightly, we think, rejected these stories of Sahtu and Sarju Din. Sahtu admitted that he did not tell Sat Narain what he had seen when the body of Binda was found. Jiawan said that Sahtu told him and as Jiawan is his nephew it is possible that he did. But Sahtu admitted that Bhagi had got him outcasted so that in any case we should not be inclined to rely on this witness, and to some extent our distrust of him must be extended to his nephew Jiawan.

The Sessions Judge held that Sarju Din was unreliable because he "did not disclose his knowledge to the Police prior to November 20, 1939, when his statement was recorded by the second officer." This appears to be incorrect as the second officer deposed that he did not record the statement of anyone on the 20th. It was the Station Officer (as his evidence shows) who recorded the statement of this witness. But this does not affect the criticism and we agree with the Sessions Judge that the evidence of Sarju Din is of no value.

The Sessions Judge rejected the evidence of Debi Din and Durga Din about the finding of the body near Bhagi's house in view of the absence of blood-stains there. We do not consider that this is a sufficient reason, and apart from this no reason has been shown why these witnesses should not be believed. Debi Din was not cross-examined at all about Musai coming to him and asking him to accompany him to the Police Station to make a report, and Durga Din was not cross-examined about his talk with Bhagi. We do not, however, lay much stress on Durga Din's story.

On the other hand we regard the evidence of the chaukidar, Debi Din, as very important since it very definitely corroborates the prosecution story as to the manner in which the body was found, and even if the report made by Musai at the Police Station is rejected as inadmissible we should still have to consider whether that story could be reconciled with the innocence of the accused. Debi Din was only cross-examined very briefly about the presence of Sat Narain and Sahtu at the place where the body was lying when he went there on the information given to him by Musai. He lives in another village about a mile from Keshopur and no reason whatever has been suggested for his making a false statement.

The Sessions Judge also thought that the medical evidence disproved the prosecution story, as it indicated that the injuries appeared to have been caused a little before death. He thought that if the victim had been beaten after death injuries caused by such beating would have been noticed by the Civil Surgeon. But the question whether any of the injuries might have been caused after death was not put to the Civil Surgeon whose attention was no doubt directed primarily to the more important injuries which must have been caused before death. He simply made a statement about the injuries generally that they appeared to have been caused a little before death. We do not consider that this is sufficient to disprove the prosecution story. It was a dark night and the accused were only pretending to beat and kick the man, that is, if the prosecution story is believed.

The Sessions Judge has also said that it is not at all likely that "the accused would have been prepared to incur the risk of detection and to get themselves involved in further troubles by removing the dead body close to their house even if they had committed the crime. In any case, they would have created some sort of evidence to indicate that the house of Musai was visited by burglars".

With regard to this criticism we would first of all observe that it is always unsafe to argue that a criminal would not have acted in any particular manner after committing a murder. Individuals vary in their mentality and the mental condition of a man who has just committed a murder is rarely quite normal. Apart from this we do not think there is anything improbable in what the accused are alleged to have done.

If we accept the prosecution evidence that Bhagi had good reason to dislike Binda, and if we also accept the prosecution evidence that he came and took Binda away that night, he must have known that suspicion would naturally fasten on him, and he and his relatives may well have thought that the best solution would be to allege an attempted burglary and an attack by them on one of the burglars, his identity at the time being unknown to them. No doubt they would have made this defence stronger by creating some sort of evidence to show that there had been an attempt to break into the house, but their failure to take this precaution is just what might be expected in the circumstances. It is rare to find that a man who has just committed murder thinks of everything that common sense might suggest to a person who can reflect on the position calmly and dispassionately.

We come now to the all important question whether the report, Ex. 12, made by Musai at the Police Station is admissible. All that the Sessions Judge said to justify his rejection of it was :—

"Exhibit 12 cannot be said to be the first information report recorded under s. 154 or 155 of the Criminal P. C. It was not even signed by Musai. It is therefore inadmissible in evidence under s. 8 of the Evi. Act. The fact that Musai went to the thana along with the dead body and in the company of the chaukidar is by itself of no importance and cannot add strength to the story."

In our opinion there is nothing in this criticism which renders the report inadmissible and the learned Counsel for the accused has not attempted to argue that there is. The report was not regarded by the Police as the report of an offence on which any action was desired or was necessary. The Head Constable who recorded it was not asked to explain his reasons for this view, but we may note two possible reasons. The first is that it was a report against a man who was dead; the second is that, as the report itself shows, it was made by way of defence and possibly by way of reply to the report already made by Sat Narain. So far as the s. 8 of the Evi. Act is concerned it is under that section that the report would be admissible if at all.

It is, however, necessary to consider whether the report is inadmissible under s. 25 of the Evi. Act, as a confession made to a Police Officer, or under s. 162 of the Criminal P. C. as a statement made to a Police Officer in the course of an investigation. The learned defence Counsel has not contended that it is a confession, but he has contended that it is a statement to a Police Officer in the course of an investigation.

We have, however, considered whether the report should be excluded as being of the nature of a confession and we are clearly of opinion that it should not. It contains the statement :—

"I do not know who killed Binda and with what instrument".

It was clearly of an exculpatory nature as the following passage shows :—

"Sukhnandan Brehman of Keshopur and Bhagi Ahir asked me to go to the thana along with the corpse and make a report against Binda that orahi (lifting thatch with a bamboo and thus making a passage for committing theft) was used, otherwise we will be implicated. Hence Bhagi and I have come to make a report."

It was recently held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Pakala Narayana Swami v. Emperor (A. I. R 1939 P. C. 47) (1) that no statement that contains self-exculpatory matter can amount to a confession, if the exculpatory statement is of some fact which if true would negative the offence alleged to be confessed. And they added :—

"Moreover a confession must either admit in terms the offence, or at any rate all the facts which constitute the offence. An admission of a gravely incriminating fact, even a conclusively incriminating fact, is not of itself a confession, e. g. an admission that the accused is the owner of and was in recent possession of the knife or revolver which caused a death, with no explanation of any other man's possession".

Their Lordships proceeded to consider the definition of "confession" in Stephen's Digest of the Law of Evidence which defines a confession as an admission made at any time by a person charged with a crime, stating or suggesting the inference that he committed that crime, and they observed :—

"The definition is not contained in the Evi. Act, 1872: and in that Act it would not be consistent with the natural use of language to construe confession as a statement by an accused 'suggesting the inference that he committed the crime'."

It was argued strongly that the statement was made in the course of the investigation into Binda's murder and it was pointed out in support of this argument that Sat Narain's report had been recorded three quarters of an hour before, and that the second officer had returned to the Police Station before the statement was made. It was also suggested that Musai and Bhagi had already been taken into custody, though the entry in the diary indicates that they were taken into custody and their persons searched immediately after the report was made.

The evidence of the Head Constable, Mahadeo Singh, shows that the second officer was present when the report was made, but not a single question was put either to him or to the second officer suggesting that Musai was examined during the course of an investigation which had already commenced. In fact the second officer was not questioned at all about the report, either in examination-in-chief or in cross-examination, and it would appear that he returned to the Police Station just when the report was about to be recorded.

The position would be quite different if after the report of Sat Narain had been recorded the Head Constable or the second officer had called up Musai and Bhagi and examined them. There is nothing to indicate that this was done, and on the contrary the report itself shows that it was a voluntary report made with a definite object. We have also the evidence of the chaukidar that Musai had come to the Police Station in order to make the report. We have therefore no hesitation in finding that the report was not made in the course of the Police investigation, and in holding that it is admissible.

The accused were not examined in a very satisfactory way. In the Magistrate's Court both Pandohi and Musai denied killing Binda, said they did not know how he had died and alleged that they had been implicated as a result of enmity with Sat Narain.

In the Sessions Court Pandohi said he did not cultivate any jarhan field jointly with Sat Narain or Binda as was alleged by the prosecution. He denied that he had handed over the blanket to the Sub-Inspector. He said that he was on bad terms with Sat Narain, Jiawan and Sehtu, and that the other witnesses deposed against him under Police influence.

Musai also denied in the Sessions Court his joint cultivation of the jarhan field; he denied that there was any injury on his person when he was arrested and he denied that the shirt taken from his person belonged to him. As regards the prosecution witnesses he made the same statement as Pandohi.

The accused should have been questioned by the Sessions Judge in regard to other points. No question for instance was put to Musai either about his alleged visit to Debi Din two gharis before sunrise or about his subsequent report at the Police Station.

It is quite clear, however, that the accused, possibly on the advice of their Counsel, had no desire to put forward in Court by way of defence the story which they had originally imagined would be a good defence. And the reason is clear. On the medical evidence that Binda had died several hours before his body was discovered it was impossible to allege that he had been attacked as he was trying to break into Musai's house. Therefore the story was manifestly false and if pressed would not help the accused at all, but on the contrary would be extremely prejudicial to them. So it was presumably decided to say nothing more about this story and contend that the report was inadmissible.

The Sessions Judge found that the presence of blood-stains in the jarhan field showed that the murder was committed there and we concur. But we cannot agree with him that the accused had no motive for crime, that Binda is not proved to have been taken away by one of them on the night of the murder, and that the body was not carried to the vicinity of their houses and discovered there in the manner alleged by the prosecution. We consider that the evidence establishes the contrary beyond reasonable doubt.

The Sessions Judge referred to the ruling in Emperor v. Mendai (1939 O. W. N. 700) (2) that "where a charge of murder is based purely on circumstantial evidence that evidence must point conclusively to the guilt of the accused and must practically exclude the possibility of the murder having been committed by other persons".

We are of opinion that the circumstantial evidence in this case satisfies this test, for if the accused were not concerned in the murder of Binda we cannot imagine any explanation which will account for their conduct. Musai's report fully supports the prosecution evidence about the discovery of the body. The case against Musai is further strengthened by the injuries on his person and the presence of blood-stains on his shirt, though it could not be proved whether the stains were of human blood or not. Against Pandohi there is the fact that he produced a blanket which was found to be stained with human blood. The Chemical Examiner's report shows that there were ten blood-stains on this blanket and that the largest was six inches in length.

In our opinion the evidence is such as to leave no reasonable doubt about the guilt of Musai and Pandohi while it does not exclude the possibility of others also being guilty, it definitely indicates that they were concerned in the murder.

We accordingly allow the Govt. appeal, set aside the order of acquittal passed by the Sessions Judge, and convict Musai and Pandohi on the charge under s. 302 of the I. P. C. As the murder was brutal, apparently premeditated, and treacherous, and there was no immediate provocation, there is no reason why the extreme penalty of the law should not be imposed, except such reason as may be found in the length of time that has elapsed since the murder was committed. This, we think, is no reason why the capital sentence should not be passed. We express no opinion on the question whether it should be carried out. We therefore sentence Musai and Pandohi under s. 302 to be hanged by the neck until they are dead.

In conclusion we note that there are two apparent mistakes in the judgment of the lower Court. The Sessions Judge observed in dealing with the time of death that "the medical evidence disclosed that semi-digested food was found in the stomach of the deceased which fact affords an indication to the effect that the deceased was alive two or three hours before his death".

Presumably the Sessions Judge intended to say that the deceased died two or three hours after he has last taken food. Secondly in discussing the evidence of Jiawan the Sessions Judge remarked that "the witness has no hesitation in saying that Sehtu did tell Binda what he had seen shortly after it was discovered that the victim was Binda".

The Sessions Judge apparently meant to say that Jiawan had no hesitation in saying that Sehtu had told him, Jiawan, what he had seen.

Appeal No. 639 of 1938

April 4, 1940

HARRIES, C. J. AND DHAVLE, J.

AKHAURI HALIWANT SAHAY AND

ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

DEO NARAIN MALI AND OTHERS—

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 23, 26, 28—Owner of gairmazrua-am and ahar land completely dispossessed by other person by building chabutra on land—Suit for possession beyond 12 years is barred—S. 23 does not apply—S. 23, if distinguishes between private and public suits—Encroachment—Extinction of owner's title—Whether gives good title to wrong doer—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), provides for acquisition of ownership by possession—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I., r. 8—Public right of irrigation interfered with—Suit by members of public in individual capacity—Half-hearted resort to O. I., r. 8—Whether prevented from obtaining relief as members of public specially injured—Practice—Pleadings—Limitation—Owner of land dispossessed and his irrigation rights obstructed—He cannot circumvent law by suing for injunction in respect of irrigation rights.

• Where an owner of land recorded as gairmazrua-am and ahar is dispossessed completely by building a chabutra on that land by another person, a suit for possession brought by the owner after more than 12 years is barred by limitation. Section 23, Lim. Act, does not apply to such a suit as the case is not one of a continuing wrong but of complete ouster.

[Case-law discussed.]

Section 23, Lim. Act makes no distinction between private suits and public or representative suits.

Under s. 28, Lim. Act, the owner's title to the portion encroached upon and built over is extinguished at the end of 12 years, the period limited for instituting a suit for possession of the land; and the extinction of the owner's title operates to give a good title to the wrong-doer. Gossain Das Chunder v. Issur Chundar Nath (4), relied on. [p. 245, col. 1.]

The Lim. Act not only deals with the limitation of suits, but also contains in Part IV (ss. 26 to 28) a set of provisions relating to acquisition of ownership by possession. Rajrup Koer v. Abdul Hossein (2), relied on. [ibid.]

Where a public right of irrigation has been interfered with by a person by encroaching upon ahar land and members of the public have brought a suit substantially in their individual capacity, the half-hearted resort to O. I., r. 8, Civil P. C., would not prevent the plaintiffs from obtaining relief as members of the public, specially injured by the defendants' interference with the "public" right of irrigation. [p. 246, col. 1.]

An owner of ahar land whose rights of irrigation have been obstructed and who has been dispossessed, can bring a suit for possession and he cannot be allowed to circumvent the law of limitation by suing for injunction in respect of irrigation rights. Kanaku Sabai v. Muttu (5), relied on.

A. from the appellate decree of the Additional District, Judge, Shahabad, dated May 30, 1938.

Messrs. D. N. Varma and Kanhaiyaji, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. Rahman, for the Respondents.

Dhavle, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against the dismissal of their suit for recovery of possession of a certain portion of plot No. 230 after removal of a chabutra erected thereon by the defendants for sitting and for tying their cattle. The plot was recorded as gairmazrua-am and is an ahar. Plaintiffs are the sixteen-anna proprietors of the tauzi, and their case was that the land is public land and was used for storing the irrigation water of the plaintiffs, and that the act of the defendants in erecting the chabutra after filling up a part of the ahar had put the plaintiffs, the other residents of the mauza and the public to loss and caused difficulty in irrigation, etc.

According to the plaintiffs, the defendants' encroachment on the ahar was effected in 1343 Fasli, about a year before the suit. The defendants denied any encroachment and claimed to have erected the chabutra and been in possession of it for more than twelve years. They also urged that the suit was barred under O. I. r. 8, Civil P. C. A Pleader Commissioner found that there had been an encroachment over the ahar to the extent of 1 katha 2 dhurs and 8 dhurkis. The trial Court dismissed the suit, holding that the plaintiffs had been out of possession for more than twelve years, whether as landlords or as members of the public. As to the objection based on O. I. r. 8, the learned Munsif held that though the plaintiffs had obtained permission to proceed under that provision of the law, the case was one of a private nuisance, in the removal of which the plaintiffs were interested as they had zerat lands in the village to irrigate from the ahar, and that therefore the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain the suit in their "own personal capacity."

Plaintiffs appealed, and the lower Appellate Court upheld the finding of encroachment. The finding that the chabutra was erected more than twelve years before the suit was not assailed, but it was urged on behalf of the plaintiffs that the suit should have been decreed because there is "no limitation in the case of an encroachment upon a public ahar under s. 23, Lim. Act." The learned Judge below held that this section of the Lim. Act had no application as the suit had been brought by the plaintiffs in their individual capacity and the prayer was for recovery of khas possession, so that the suit could not properly be regarded as one for removal of an encroachment from public property. Action had been taken under O. I. r. 8, but the plaint was not framed as for a representative suit, and the permission given under O. I. r. 8 could not alter the character of the suit. The learned Judge therefore held that the suit had been rightly dismissed on the ground of limitation. It has been contended on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants that the lower Appellate Court fell into an error as regards s. 23, Lim. Act, and also as regards O. I. r. 8. The former section only provides that in the case of a continuing wrong independent of contract, a fresh period of limitation begins to run at every moment of the time during which the wrong continues. It certainly makes no distinction between private suits and public or representative suits; but does the section apply to the case? A trespass or nuisance may or may not be a continuing wrong, according to circumstances. If the act complained of creates a continuing source of injury and is of such a nature as to render the doer of it responsible for the continuance, the wrong would be a continuing wrong.

A good instance is found in a recent English decision: Konskier v. Goodman, Ltd. (1). In pulling down the upper storeys of a certain house the defendants had a license from the neighbouring owner to pull down part of his chimney stack on an undertaking to make good any damage caused. They omitted to remove a quantity of rubbish which they had allowed to fall on the roof. The rubbish was in course of time carried down by a drain pipe from the roof and choked a gully in the basement. A heavy storm of rain in consequence flooded the basement after the plaintiff had taken a lease of the house. Plaintiff sued for damages. Salter, J. gave him a decree on the ground that the defendants' was an act of continuing negligence. The Court of appeal held that there could be no continuing negligence without a continuing duty, but that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree upon a different ground—the continuing trespass, which arose on the undisputed facts of the case. The learned Advocate for the appellants began with Rajrup Koer v. Abdul Hossein (2) where the defendants had cut a khund or channel, besides making another diversion, in the side of a pain constructed by the plaintiff on defendant's land, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that these obstructions to the flow of water were in the nature of continuing nuisances, as to which the cause of action arose de die in diem.

A similar view was taken in Hukam Chand v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (3) as regards the action of the Swetambari Jain in placing charans of a certain description in place of older charans of a different description in certain temples on the Parasnath Hill. But the present is not a case of mere trespass and obstruction, for the owner of the ahar—be it the plaintiffs as sixteen-anna landlords, or be it the public—has been completely dispossessed of the Act, the owner's title to the portion encroached upon and built over was extinguished at the end of twelve years, the period limited for instituting a suit for possession of the land; and the extinction of the owner's title operates to give a good title to the wrong-doer, Gossain Das Chunder v. Issur Chunder Nath (4). The suit is actually one for recovery of khas possession; but even if it had been a suit for an injunction in respect of irrigation rights, the owners could not have been allowed to circumvent the law of limitation by doing so when they could have sued for possession: Kanaka Sabai v. Muttu (5). The interference with the right to the flow of water in Rajrup Koer v. Abdul Hossein (2) was a wrong of which the continuing character could not be denied; it was indeed within the illustration to s. 24, Lim. Act of 1871:

"A diverts B's watercourse. At every moment of the time from which the diversion continues and B retains his right of re-entry, a fresh right to sue arises and a fresh period of limitation begins to run."

I have referred to this illustration, though it is not to be found in the present Act, because the Lim. Act, as was pointed out by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Rajrup Koer v. Abdul Hossein (2) not only deals with the limitation of suits, but also contains in Part 4 (ss. 26 to 28) a set of provisions relating to acquisition of ownership by possession, and the illustration indicates how the injury continues only as long as "B retains his right of re-entry." The distinction between a mere continuing trespass and dispossession has been referred to in several cases. Thus in Ramphul Sahoo v. Misree Lall (6) Mitter, J., in dealing with the question whether the suit, which was for the removal of a drain built by the defendant upon plaintiff's land was barred by time observed:

"If the plaintiff had been dispossessed from any portion of his land by an adverse possession having been taken by the defendant, the case would then fall within cl. (12); but if on the other hand, no adverse possession had been taken by the defendant, then each act of trespass on the plaintiff's land would constitute a fresh cause of action, and whether the period be six years or twelve years, the plaintiff would be competent to rely upon the last act of trespass as constituting a cause of action, unless the defendant had acquired an indefeasible right of easement by user."

From this point of view the Privy Council decisions from Rajrup Koer v. Abdul Hossein (2) and Hukam Chand v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (3) (already referred to), which have been cited by the learned Advocate for the appellants are not in point at all; they were not cases of dispossession. The learned Advocate has also cited Bhagwan Dutt v. Asrafi Lal Mahta (7) in which Kulwant Sahay, J., sitting singly, held, following the two Privy Council decisions, Nazimulla v. Wazidulla (8) and the decision of Jwala Prasad, J. in Jagroshan Bharthi v. Madan Pande (9) that s. 23, Lim. Act, applied to an encroachment on public pathway running over gairmazrua-am lands which had been made more than 12 years before the date of the suit. Now, it is true that in Nazimulla v. Wazidulla (8) it was held that an obstruction to a way is no less a continuing nuisance than an obstruction to a water-course, but it does not appear how far any question of adverse possession by the defendants after the ouster of the plaintiffs arose on the pleadings in that case, though the observations of the learned Judges do seem to imply that no such question can arise in the case of a continuing wrong.

In Jagroshan Bharthi v. Madan Pande (9) Jwala Prasad, J. was dealing with a case under s. 133, Criminal P. C. and observed that no length of user can justify an encroachment upon a public way; but there does not seem to have been any question of limitation before the learned Judge, the point for decision being whether the Magistrate was right in refusing to proceed with the enquiry on the ground that there was no public nuisance as "a sufficient width of the road" was left for public use. The familiar common law maxim "once a highway, always a highway," which is sometimes referred to in Indian cases, rests on the ground mentioned by Byles, J. in Dawes v. Hawkins (10) at p. 858 that "the public cannot release their rights, and there is no extinctive presumption or prescription"; but even in England power has been given to Justices of the Peace under certain circumstances, to divert or extinguish highways and there are instances of a highway ceasing to be a highway, as when access becomes impossible in consequence of the ways leading to it having been legally stopped up. We have in our Lim. Act, besides s. 28, Art. 146-A which provides a period of 30 years for suits by or on behalf of any local authority for possession of any public street or road or any part thereof from which it has been dispossessed. . . . The common law maxim was therefore not applied in Municipal Commissioners v. Saran-gapani Mudaliar (11), where the learned Judges declined to treat a pial built on a strip of land forming part of a highway as a continuing wrong and said that there was no authority for holding in India that the public, any more than a private proprietor is to be exempted from the consequences of its own laches.

The same view as regards dispossession from a highway was taken in Sundaram Ayyar v. Municipal Council of Madura (12), where Bhashyam Ayyangar, J., pointed out that the operation of s. 28, Lim. Act, upon Art. 146-A is to extinguish the right of highway 30 years after dispossession by encroachment, and that s. 23 would cease to have operation from the moment when the wrong ceases to be such by virtue of the title conferred by statute upon the wrongdoer. See also Basaveswara Swamy v. Bellary Municipal Council (13). In Ashutosh Sadhukhan v. Corporation of Calcutta (14), it was held that the Municipality had lost its right under Art. 146-A to a portion of what the Municipality claimed as a public street or drain on which the plaintiff had built a wall and platform about 50 years previously and that the erection of the wall was not a continuing wrong so as to make s. 23 applicable :

"The injury was complete on the erection of the wall and there was no continuing injury within the meaning of the Statute. The effect may continue, but this does not extend the time of limitation."

The case before us does not relate to a highway but the learned Advocate for the appellants only cited the ruling in Bhagwan Dutt v. Asrafi Lal Mahta (7) because it does seem to have held that s. 23, Lim. Act, will save limitation even in cases of complete ouster. In my opinion that is not a correct view of the section. The learned Advocate also referred to Sarat Chandra Mukherjee v. Nerode Chandra Mukherjee (15), where it was held that sheds erected on a common passage were a continuing wrong. That, however, was not a case for possession, and speaking with all respect the bearing of s. 28, and Art. 146-A on s. 23 was not considered, even though the decision in Ashutosh Sadhukhan v. Corporation of Calcutta (14) was referred to and distinguished. My conclusion on this part of the appeal is that s. 23, Lim. Act, has no application, not indeed on the ground adopted by the learned Judge below that this is not a public suit, but on the ground that this is a case not of a continuing wrong but of complete ouster in respect of the area on which the defendants have built their chabutra and of which even according to the plaintiff they are in wrongful possession. The finding of fact that the chabutra was built more than 12 years before the suit which was not disputed in the lower Appellate Court therefore concludes the appeal.

In this view it is not really necessary to deal with the appellant's contention that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that the suit was not a representative suit, even though the plaintiff took the permission of the Court under O. I, r. 8 and gave the required notice. Notwithstanding the action taken by the plaintiffs the cause title remained in the plaintiffs' individual names and the prayer was that possession may be delivered to the plaintiffs on dispossession of the defendants after removal of the chabutra, etc. The public is only mentioned in one paragraph of the plaint. The suit thus appears substantially to have been brought by the plaintiffs in their individual capacity but the half-hearted resort to O. I, r. 8 would not, in my opinion, have prevented the plaintiff's from obtaining relief as members of the public, specially injured by the defendants' interference with the "public" right of irrigation if the claim to the encroached portion had not been barred by limitation. I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Ch. 42), s. 208 (b)—Leave to appeal to Privy Council—

Grounds—Question must be of importance and really a substantial one—Question of interpretation of s. 292, Government of India Act as to whether it deprives Legislatures of power to legislate retrospectively, is not a substantial question.

When dealing with an application for leave to appeal to Privy Council the Federal Court must be satisfied that the matter is one of importance and that there is really a substantial question to be determined. On the question whether s. 292 of the Constitution Act can be interpreted as depriving Legislatures in India of the power to legislate with retrospective effect, there is no room for such serious doubt on the point as to justify Federal Court in holding that that is a substantial question on which leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council is to be granted. Valin v. Langlois (1), referred to.

Where it cannot be said that any decision to be obtained from their Lordships of the Privy Council, if the appeal should be permitted to go to them, is likely to have a material bearing upon future litigation there is no question of general public importance justifying the leave.

App. for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council under s. 208 (b) of the Govt. of India Act, 1935.

Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha, Senior Advocate, Federal Court, Messrs. (Prem Mohanlal Verma and Lakshmi Saran with him) instructed by Mr. T. K. Prasad, Agent, for the Applicants:

Dr. Narain Prasad Asthana, Advocate-General of the United Provinces (Mr. Sri Narain Sahai with him) instructed by Mr. Gurdayal Sahay, Agent, for the Opposite Party.

Varadachariar, J.—This is an application asking for leave, under s. 208 (b) of the Constitution Act, to appeal to His Majesty in Council, from a decision* of this Court given in December last. The constitutional question raised in the case related to the interpretation of s. 292 of the Constitution Act.

In the special circumstances described in the judgment in that case, the Govt. of United Provinces had to direct remission of rent for certain years in the zamindaris in the United Provinces; and when the validity of the remission was successfully questioned in judicial proceedings in the High Court, the U. P. Legislature passed the impugned Act (No. XIV of 1938), entitled the U. P. Regularization of Remissions Act, 1938. The validity of this enactment was in turn questioned by the present applicants when the matter was pending before the High Court at Allahabad; and a Full Bench of the High Court held that this Act was ultra vires the Provincial Legislature on various grounds. One ground on which alone all the three learned Judges who constituted the Full Bench agreed was that s. 292 of the Constitution Act precluded Legislatures in India from enacting any law with retrospective effect, so as to affect rights accrued before the date of the enactment. The tenant affected by the decree of the High Court did not appeal to this Court, but the Govt. of United Provinces, which had taken steps to get itself impleaded as a party just before the case was finally disposed of by the High Court preferred to the appeal to this Court.

At the hearing of the appeal objection was taken to the maintainability of the appeal by the U. P. Govt.; on the ground that there was no decree against the Govt. and that the Govt. was not a proper party to the litigation at all. On the merits, the conclusion of the learned Judges of the High Court that the Act contravened the limitation imposed upon the Legislature by s. 292 of the Constitution Act was contested on behalf of the appellant, but it was sought to be supported on various grounds by the learned Counsel who appeared for the plaintiffs-respondents. This Court, by a majority, held that the appeal was competent; and it unanimously held that the impugned Act was ultra vires the Provincial Legislature and that s. 292 of the Constitution Act did not on its true construction deprive Legislatures in India of the power to pass legislation with retrospective effect. It is against this decision that the applicants now seek to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

The amount of the disputed remission is very small, not even a hundred rupees; and even as to that amount, this Court did not (for the reasons given in the judgment) disturb the decree passed by the High Court in the petitioners' favour. The application for leave is supported on three grounds: (1) that the constitutional question involved is of general public importance; (2) that the impugned enactment, namely, Act XIV of 1938 of the U. P. Legislature affects the claim of the zamindars of the United Provinces as a body to a large amount of rent remaining in arrears; and (3) that the decision of the majority of this Court on the question of the right of the U. P. Govt. to maintain the appeal to this Court is open to criticism.

It is true that the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court interpreted s. 292 of the Constitution Act as depriving Legislatures in India of the power to legislate with retrospective effect. But, with all defence to them, this Court is unable to hold that there is room for such serious doubt on the point as to justify it in holding that that is a substantial question on which leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council is to be granted. When dealing with an application of this kind the Court must be satisfied that the matter is one of importance and that there is really a substantial question to be determined: Valin v. Langlois (1). As observed by the Judicial Committee in that case, "it is not to be presumed that the Legislature of a Dominion has exceeded its powers unless upon grounds really of a serious character."

After giving anxious consideration to the arguments advanced in support of the High Court's view, this Court unanimously came to the conclusion that s. 292 of the Constitution Act could not reasonably bear the construction sought to be put upon it by the plaintiffs. It will be observed from the judgment of this Court that many other questions which would have been relevant to the decision of the case had to be left open in the special circumstances in which this Court had to deal with the case. If, therefore, the matter is to be permitted to go on appeal to His Majesty in Council at all, it will be much more satisfactory that it should go in a case which is properly constituted so as to give their Lordships an opportunity of dealing with all the points arising in a litigation of this kind.

In considering the extent of interest indirectly affected by the U. P. Act XIV of 1938, must be pointed out that the operation of that Act was only temporary, as it sought to regularize certain remissions of rent which according to the opinion of the High Court in another case had been granted in violation of certain provisions of the then existing Rent Act. Those sections in the Rent Act have themselves been repealed by another Act of the U. P. Legislature passed in the year 1938 and the question is hardly likely to arise in the same form in respect of claims for rent accruing due after 1938. Claims to rent accrued due prior to 1938 can hardly be enforced in any future litigation, as nearly three years have now elapsed. The Court asked for information as to whether any large number of suits relating to rent accrued due prior to 1938 and likely to be affected by Act XIV of 1938 were pending; but no specific information on the point was available. Reference has been made in para. 13 of the petitioner's petition to certain circumstances bearing upon the indirect consequences of the decision of this Court, but even there no information on the above question is available. It cannot therefore be said that any decision to be obtained from their Lordships, if this appeal should be permitted to go to them— is likely to have a material bearing upon future litigation and that in that sense the question is of general public importance.

The only other point raised is the procedural question as to the maintainability of the appeal to this Court by the U. P. Govt. That is a matter of importance only to the clients in the particular case and as this Court did not, even while entertaining the appeal, disturb the decree of the High Court in the plaintiffs' favour, it is not possible to accept the contention that this procedural question is one which will justify the grant of leave to appeal. The application is accordingly dismissed. There will be no order as to costs.

Criminal Revision No. 696 of 1940

February 3, 1941

DHAWLE, J.

BHUTNATH KHAWAS—PETITIONER

DASRATHI DAS—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 439, 561-A—Government of India Act, 1935, (25 & 26 Geo. V, Ch. 42), s. 224 (1)—No appeal from order of acquittal—High Court, if has jurisdiction to expunge remarks made against witness in trial Magistrate's judgment, on application of such witness.

The superintendence given to the High Court under sub-s. (1) of s. 224 of the Govt. of India Act, 1935, is not to be construed as giving to a High Court any jurisdiction to question any judgment of any inferior Court which is not otherwise subject to appeal or revision.

Section 439 of the Criminal P. C., will not enable the High Court to expunge passages from a judgment which is not under appeal. So also, all that s. 561-A, Criminal P. C., does is to preserve the inherent powers of the High Court without conferring any additional power and no Court can claim inherent power to alter the judgment of another Court. 66 Ind. Cas. 1005 (3) and 190 Ind. Cas. 205 (5), relied on.

Cr. R. against an order of the Magistrate, 2nd Class, Jamshedpur, dated May 20, 1940.

Dr. Sir Sultan Ahmad and Mr. B. C. De, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Bhabananda Mukherji, for the Opposite Party.

Order. — Bhutnath Khawas, the petitioner, as Forest Officer of the Dhalbhum estate, lodged an information of theft with the Police against one Dasarathi Das for cutting away a mohul tree from a plot in Mauza Narsingharh belonging to the estate. The trying Magistrate held that the case was totally false, malicious and vexatious, and acquitted the accused and ordered the Forest Officer (so I understand) to pay compensation to him. After moving the Sessions Judge in revision unsuccessfully Bhutnath applied to this Court, not so much against the acquittal of Dasarathi Das as for expunging certain observations made by the trying Magistrate in his judgment against Bankim Chandra Chakravarty, the Manager of the estate who had been examined as a witness for the prosecution. At the hearing a question arose whether an application of this kind could be entertained at the instance of Bhutnath; and upon this Bankim Chandra Chakravarty himself put in an application praying that the observations objected to may be expunged.

Sir Sultan Ahmad who appeared for Bhutnath, and afterwards for Bankim Chandra as well, made it quite clear from the very beginning that his grievance was not the acquittal of Dasarathi Das—this Court does not as a rule interfere in revision with acquittals—but the observations of the Magistrate against Bankim Chandra.

The question whether an application of this kind can be entertained at the instance of Bankim Chandra Chakravarty himself, when the Court is not dealing with the orders passed in the case, does not appear to have been decided in this Court, but has been the subject of some difference of opinion in other High Courts. My attention has been drawn to Criminal Reference No. 45 of 1936 decided by Khaja Mohammad Noor, J. on August 14, 1936, as an instance in which this Court ordered certain remarks to be expunged from the judgment of a Magistrate. That, however, was a case of remarks not against a witness but against an Advocate, and the question how far the High Court has power to order such remarks to be expunged was neither raised nor discussed. The only reported decision of this Court that I have come across, which can at all be said to be in point, is Birnarayan Singh v. Emperor (1). The petitioner in that case was a Sub-Inspector of Police charged with extortion, who had been acquitted, but the judgment proceeded, after the acquittal, to make certain observations about the case ending with the words: "Enter true. Sections 385 and 384-II, I. P. C." Jwala Prasad, J. found that this was unjustified and held that this Court had jurisdiction to order it to be expunged. "It has been said", said the learned

ed Judge,

"that s. 439 of the Criminal P. C. does not intend to cover a case of this kind, where the order passed is not based upon the evidence but upon an impression, the order being to enter true. When the order is deleted, the reasons in the preceding paragraph must also go. The High Court has also power to deal with a case of this kind under its general superintendence under the Govt. of India Act. The power of the High Court to delete irrelevant orders of this kind has been upheld in the case of Emperor v. Thomas Pellako 16 Ind. Cas. 643 (2), where the irrelevant remarks and the Judge's opinion on certain matters contained in the judgment were ordered to be expunged and deleted on the ground that they were ill-judged and should not have found a place in a judgment in a criminal trial."

It is not very easy to say from this how far the learned Judge really held that s. 439 of the Criminal P. C. empowers this Court to order observations to be expunged from the judgment of an inferior Court when the operative order of that Court is itself not in question and this Court is not called upon to deal with the merits of the decision itself. This question was considered by Gokul Prasad and Stuart, JJ. in Emperor v. Dunn (3) and the conclusion was arrived at that s. 439 does not empower the High Court to amend the judgments of lower Courts by expunging objectionable passages in cases in which the Court has no authority to interfere with the effective orders passed by the lower Courts. The learned Judges observed that "If it is held that the grievances of persons who are unjustly criticized by Courts of law in circumstances which obviate the effective orders of the Courts coming before superior Courts in appeal or revision are so great as to require a special enactment for their protection, the matter is one for the consideration of the Legislature. But as the law stands we are satisfied that we have no authority."

This was in 1922, and in the following year s. 561A was added to the Criminal P. C. providing that nothing in the Code shall be deemed to limit or affect the inherent power of the High Court to make such orders as may be necessary to give effect to any order under this Court or to prevent abuse of the process of any Court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice. This new section was relied upon by Sulaiman, J., as he then was, in Panchanan Banerji v. Upendra Nath Bhattacharj (4), to order the deletion of certain passages, which were against the character of the complainant, from a judgment of acquittal. It has, however, been very recently pointed out by Beaumont, C. J. in Rogers v. Shrini- was Gopal Kawale (5), that all that s. 561-A does is to preserve the inherent powers of the High Court without conferring any additional power and that no Court can claim inherent power to alter the judgment of another Court. Jwala Prasad, J. also referred in Birnarayan Singh's case to the power of general superintendence given to the High Court under the Govt. of India Act, but the latest Govt. of India Act (26 Geo. V) makes it perfectly clear that the superintendence given to the High Court under sub-s. (1) of s. 224 of the Act is not to be construed—see sub-s. (2) as giving to a High Court any jurisdiction to question any judgment of any inferior Court which is not otherwise subject to appeal or revision. It was also pointed out in the Bombay case how s. 439 of the Criminal P. C. will not enable the High Court to expunge passages from a judgment which is not under appeal, affirming the view taken in Dunn's case (3) from 44 Allahabad. The order of acquittal in the present case is not under revision (being on the face of it so well-founded on the evidence that no application would have been entertained in revision against it, as was very rightly appreciated by learned Counsel). I can see no reason for differing from the view taken in Roger's case (5) regarding the powers of the Court in this matter. I must accordingly hold that in the circumstances of this case the Court has no jurisdiction to expunge the remarks, of which first his subordinate Bhutnath Khawas and then Bankim Chandra Chakravarti himself have made a grievance.

In this view I do not propose to discuss the remarks objected to. It may, however, be useful to draw the attention of the learned Magistrate to the fact that though he was apparently entitled from the evidence before him to infer that Bankim Chandra Chakravarty had not told or admitted all he knew, it was not a happy way of referring to this lack of candour to speak of his "suppressing telling the truth" and later on of his deliberately perjuring himself. The learned Magistrate would do well to refrain from using words with which he is not very familiar, perjury being apparently one of them.

The application in revision is dismissed.

RANGOON HIGH COURT

Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 6 of 1940

May 3, 1940

ROBERTS, C. J. AND BLAGDEN, J.

EBRAHIM MOHAMED BODI—

K. BA GYI—RESPONDENT

Presidency Towns (Rangoon) Insolvency Act (III of 1909), s. 8 (2) (b), 36—Letters Patent (Rangoon), cl. 13—“Judgment”, meaning of—Insolvency proceedings, whether “suits”—Decision whether witness should or should not be further examined under s. 36, if judgment—Refusal to exercise jurisdiction, if judgment—Exercise of powers under s. 36—Examination under s. 36, nature of—Right of—Discretion under s. 36 in refusing to summon witness or further examine him, if can be interfered with in appeal—Scope of examination under s. 36—Examination, when should be ordered—Fact that litigation against witness may ensue, if ground for refusing to examine witness—Witness legally represented at examination, if entitled to costs.

The word “judgment” in cl. 13, Letters Patent (Rang.) means and is a decree in a suit by which the rights of the parties at issue in the suit are determined. For the purposes of appeals the various proceedings in an insolvency should be regarded as a series of “suits” arising out of one failure, and that is a “judgment” for this purpose which finally determines the substantive rights of those concerned in any one such “suit”. A decision, therefore, which finally determines the question whether a witness should or should not be further examined under s. 36 of the Presi. Towns Insol. Act, is a “judgment” within the meaning of cl. 13 of the Letters Patent and is therefore appealable. A “judgment”, properly so called, must be an exercise of jurisdiction, and therefore a refusal to exercise jurisdiction, at all events if it be a lawful refusal, cannot be a “judgment”. 157 Ind. Cas. 1107 (2), explained, 93 Ind. Cas. 211 (3) and 111 Ind. Cas. 836 (4), distinguished. [p. 252, col. 2; p. 253, cols. 1 & 2]

Section 36 confers on the Court an extraordinary and inquisitorial, though certainly a necessary power, to be exercised in the interests of the due administration of the insolvent's estate without fear, but not without scrupulous regard to considerations of economy and of fairness to the person examined. In re Maundy Gregory (5), referred to. [p. 253, col. 2.]

The only right which the section gives to the Official Assignee or to any creditor who has proved is a right to apply to the Court to summon a witness. It is in the discretion of the Court whether or not it will do so at all, and, if it does do so, the examination of the witness is, in theory, an examination by the Court; it is only as a matter of practice that the person applying for the summons is permitted to attend and question the person summoned at all. Ex parte Eckersley (6), distinguished. [ibid.]

The discretion of the Court under s. 36 in refusing to summon or further to examine a witness is not lightly to be interfered with on appeal. It is not enough for the appellant to show that the discretion was wrongly exercised, but he must go further and show either that it was not exercised at all, or, if exercised, was exercised either unjudicially, or on a wrong principle of law, or on a wrong appreciation of the facts. But a right decision even if reached in the wrong way will not be interfered with. [p. 254, col. 1.]

It is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule limiting the scope of a private examination under s. 36 and though the Court may (not must) think it proper to confine it to questions arising out of the matters stated in the affidavit leading to the summons there is certainly no rule that only those matters themselves may be put to the witness. 121 Ind. Cas. 772 (1), Overruled. [p. 254, col. 2.]

Section 36 is not in terms restricted to the examination of persons who are thought to be indebted to or possessed of part of the debtor's estate but extends to "any person whom the Court may deem capable of giving information respecting the insolvent, his dealings or property". 118 Ind. Cas. 794 (9), dissented from. [p. 255, col. 1.]

The Court ought not to make an order for the examination of a witness under s. 36 of the Act unless there is ground for thinking that the order is likely to be of some use. Sub-sections (4) and (5) of s. 36 make it quite clear that the mere fact that litigation against the witness may ensue cannot be a ground for refusing the examination. 121 Ind. Cas. 772 (1), Overruled. [p. 255, col. 2.]

A witness who is legally represented at an examination under s. 36 is not entitled to costs of such representation. It is a measure of prudence which he takes at his own expense. A witness who is, rightly or wrongly, made a respondent to an appeal from an order under s. 36 and served as such but against whom no substantive relief was asked for and who would not have been out of pocket by reason of the appellate decision, had it gone against him, if he had not contested the appeal is not entitled to costs. In re Scharrer, Ex parte Tilly (10), referred to. In re Maundy Gregory (5), distinguished. C. Misc. A. against the order of the High Court, in Insolvency Case No. 49 of 1938, dated January 2, 1940.

Mr. B. K. Dadachanji, for the Appellant.

Mr. U Kyaw Myint, for the Respondent.

Blagden, J.—The appellant in this case is, it appears, the sole unsecured creditor of one U Po Sein against whom he has a decree for some Rs. 30,000 odd. On this decree an interest of U Po Sein was, on January 13, 1938, attached. That attachment lasted till April 25, 1938, and therefore at the last moment, February 3, 1938 at the latest, U Po Sein suffered an act of insolvency under s. 9 (e), Rangoon Insolvency Act, hereinafter called "the Act." Within three months of that date, to wit on April 25, 1938, the appellant presented an insolvency petition against U Po Sein founded on this act of insolvency. The proceedings under this petition were somewhat protracted and it was not until June 15, 1938 that U Po Sein was adjudicated insolvent. This however does not matter because by s. 51 of the Act the insolvency of U Po Sein must be deemed to have relation back to and to have commenced at midnight of 3rd/4th February 1938 at the latest. This moment of time is important. By s. 52 (2) (a) of the Act, the property divisible amongst his creditors (which by s. 17 of the Act vested in the Official Assignee) therefore included

(at least) all such property as belonged to U Po Sein at midnight of February 3rd/4th, 1938.

The respondent K. Ba Gyi comes into the matter in this way. According to the insolvent's schedule lodged on February 23, 1939 he was on June 15, 1938 a secured creditor of U Po Sein for Rs. 5,000 (the debt and security dating from July 25, 1932) and the security was thereby estimated to produce a surplus of Rs. 5,000. This made two things obvious, namely (1) that if the insolvent's estimate of the value of the security was anything like correct—and such estimates are, of course, apt to be optimistic—he was never likely to prove in the insolvency at all (see the proviso to s. 17 of, and Sch. II to the Act) and (2) that if the appellant, the only unsecured creditor, wished this particular point really investigated it was vital for him to know whether this debt, this security and not least this date (July 25, 1932) were or were not genuine, and, as hereinafter appears, he had reason to suspect that the debt had in fact been to a large extent repaid by midnight of February 3rd/4th, 1938. The public examination of the insolvent was concluded on July 4, 1939 and on the 28th of that month the present appellant applied to the Court for the private examination under s. 36 of the Act of the present respondent and of six other persons not material to the present appeal. In support of this application he filed an affidavit para. 15 of which reads as follows:

"15. In the schedule one K. Ba Gyi is also shown as a secured creditor for the sum of Rs. 5,000. In her affidavits in Civil First Appeal No. 106 of 1933 of this Hon'ble Court sworn on December 11, 1933, and also in Suit Civil Regular No. 29 of 1934 of this Hon'ble Court sworn on or about April 29, 1935 Ma Kyin Yone the insolvent's wife stated to the effect that Rs. 6,000 was borrowed from K. Ba Gyi on an equitable mortgage, that out of this sum of Rs. 6,000 Rs. 4,000 had been paid up and only Rs. 2,000 were due when she swore those affidavits."

Pursuant to this application the present respondent was on December 20, 1939, examined under s. 36 of the Act. According to his evidence, the transaction alleged by the insolvent to have taken place was, subject to an immaterial discrepancy as to its date, genuine. But it was not an isolated transaction, there having been repayments and renewals of the loan, not all recorded in any existing book of the witness. His deposition concluded as follows:

"I begin new books of account on June 15, of each year. The debit entry in the account of U Po Sein is dated May 19, 1938. The book for 1937-38 was started on June 15, 1937. Up to June 14, 1937, I had another book which has been destroyed. This is a ledger. I know book-keeping. I carry forward the balance from the old to the new book in each account."

Q. On May 18, 1938 nothing was due to you ?

A. No.

Q. This entry (Ex. B-1) shows that Rs. 5,000 a fresh sum, was paid on May 19, 1938 ?

A. Yes. No fresh mortgage was registered. I always however had the title deeds in my hands for the overdraft account. Ex. B is the account."

From this it will be seen at once that the examination had, in a sense, "gone beyond" what was stated in para. 15 of the applicant's affidavit. But to serve any useful purpose a private examination must elicit something more than is stated in the evidence on which the order for the examination is made, since that evidence is filed merely to show the Court that there are grounds for enquiry and it would be a vain thing if the Court were restricted to ascertaining from the witness facts of which it was already aware. It is also very apparent that the applicant had elicited information for more valuable to him than, on the facts as he previously supposed them to be, he could in his most sanguine moments have expected. The insolvency had notionally commenced at a date long anterior to that on which (according to the respondent) he made his advance and in consequence his security became ineffective as such. Unless therefore he could bring himself within s. 57 of the Act by proving affirmatively that he had no notice of the presentation of any insolvency petition his security appears, on his own showing, worthless in view of ss. 17, 51 and 52 (2) (a) of the Act while s. 46 (2) of the Act leaves it extremely doubtful if he had, on the same version of the facts even a provable debt. There might have been further matters which Mr. Dadachanji, for the present appellant might have wished to put to the witness and which the Registrar if asked to do so might have properly allowed him to ask. But Mr. Dadachanji told us very frankly that he could not now remember whether or not he had in mind any specific question as being desirable at that stage, though he was anxious to continue a general examination of the witness. Certainly, it does not seem that the Registrar was asked to consider allowing any specific further question to be put, and in the absence of any such request, I think, that he might, if unfettered by authority, well have taken the view that the applicant had elicited from the witness all he could possibly hope for and that further questions were a waste of time. That however is not quite the course he took. The following is his note of what occurred at this stage in the proceedings :

"Dadachanji for Bodi, creditor. Khoo for witness K. Ba Gyi. Examination under s. 36 begins: Mr. Khoo draws my attention to G. H. Ghanchee & Sons, In the matter of (1). The affidavit in support of the application to examine the witness (para. 15) shows that the intention of the creditor Bodi was to show that Rs. 2,000 and not Rs. 5,000 was due to K. Ba Gyi. The examination before me this morning has gone beyond the scope of para. 15 and possibly beyond the limit of s. 36. The matter is submitted to the Judge for further orders, on January 2, 1940."

On January 2, 1940, the matter came before my brother Ba U and his order reads as follows :

"The insolvency Registrar was perfectly justified in doing what he had done. If Mr. K. Ba Gyi wants to realize his share he must come before the Court and prove his case in the manner laid down by the Insol. Act. If and when he does this he can be subjected to searching cross-examination with regard to the amount due to him. It is unnecessary to go into this now. It will only result in waste of time. The order of the Registrar is confirmed."

Thence the matter comes before us by way of appeal. U Kyaw Myint took the preliminary objection that no appeal lies. In support of this proposition he relies on s. 8 (2) (b) of the Act which allows an appeal from the insolvency Judge in cases not covered by s. 8 (2) (a) (and the present case, he rightly concedes, is not so covered)

"in the same way and be subject to the same provisions as an appeal from an order made by a Judge in the exercise of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the Court."

He then draws our attention to cl. 13 of the Letters Patent and Dayabhai Jivandas v. A. M. M. Murugappa Chettiar (2), and cases there cited which, so far as this High Court is concerned, settle that the word "judgment" in that clause means and is a decree in a suit by which the rights of the parties at issue in the suit are determined. Abdul Gaffoor v. Official Assignee (3), shows that for "an order made by a Judge in the exercise of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the Court" to be appealable it must be either (a) within O. XLIII, r. 1, Civil P. C.; (which this order is clearly not) or (b) a judgment. The present order, he says, is not a judgment because it does not determine the rights of the parties to the insolvency. He rightly admits that this ingenious argument (carried to its logical conclusion) involves the startling proposition that no order made by the insolvency Judge as such is appealable at all, since no one order made in the course of a particular insolvency determines the rights of everybody concerned in that insolvency. It is curious, if this be so, that this Court should have heard hundreds of such appeals and (in, for example, the case last cited) declined to hear others, not on the ground that they were appeals from the insolvency Judge but on the ground that the particular order concerned was not a "judgment." Moreover, the Letters Patent were already in existence when, in 1926, the Presi. Towns Insol. Act (now the Act) was applied to Rangoon. In so applying it, the Legislature can hardly have meant to emulate that freak of nature which torments the desert traveller with visions of non-existent oases by extending before the citizens of Rangoon by [s. 8 (2) of the Act] an alluring prospect of a right of appeal well knowing that cl. 13, Letters Patent, made that right illusory.

It has, I think, to be remembered that neither this Court in Dayabhai Jivandas v. A. M. M. Murugappa Chettiar (2), nor their Lordships of the Privy Council in the judgments there cited had in mind the peculiar nature of an insolvency. For the purposes of this point the various proceedings in an insolvency should, in my opinion, be regarded as a series of "suits" arising out of one failure, and in my opinion that is a "judgment" for this purpose which finally determines the substantive rights of those concerned in any one such "suit:" for example, an order of adjudication on a creditor's petition is a "judgment" although it happens almost at the outset of the insolvency, but an order adjourning the hearing of the petition is not a "judgment." In Abdul Gaffoor v. Official Assignee (3) a Bench of this Court held that an order refusing to issue a commission to examine a witness in Madras could not be appealed. But there the witness's evidence was desired not as an end in itself but for the purposes of a then pending petition for the annulment of the adjudication, so that the Court's refusal was in reality an interlocutory order in that petition. Here there was, immediately before the decision of Ba U, J., no material proceeding pending other than the examination of Mr. K. Ba Gyi. This may or may not lead to further proceedings, but, for the moment, his further examination was desired as an end in itself and the decision of Ba U, J., finally determined the question in dispute before him, namely, whether the witness should or should not be further examined. The distinction is perhaps fine, but I think it is real. There is less difficulty in distinguishing Arjuna Iyer v. Official Assignee, Rangoon (4) for whereas, in the present case, the Court heard and determined a disputed question, there the Court in its discretion declined to entertain the question at all and left the appellant to his remedy if any by a regular suit. A "judgment," properly so called, must in my opinion be an exercise of jurisdiction, and therefore a refusal to exercise jurisdiction, at all events if it be a lawful refusal, cannot be a "judgment." This preliminary objection, therefore, in my opinion, fails. The substantial question remains whether we should now direct that Mr. K. Ba Gyi be further privately examined. Sub-ss. (1) and (3) of s. 36 of the Act reads thus:

"36. (1) The Court may, on the application of the Official Assignee or of any creditor who has proved his debt, at any time after an order of adjudication has been made, summon before it in such manner as may be prescribed the insolvent or, any person known or suspected to have in his possession any property belonging to the insolvent, or supposed to be indebted to the insolvent or any person whom the Court may deem capable of giving information respecting the insolvent, his dealings or property; and the Court may require any such person to produce any documents in his custody or power relating to the insolvent, his dealings or property.

(3) The Court may examine any person so brought before it concerning the insolvent, his dealings or property, and such person may be represented by a legal practitioner."

These sub-sections are for all material purposes identical with sub-ss. (1) and (3) of s. 25, English Bankruptcy Act, 1914, except that the right of the witness to legal representation at the examination is, in this country, expressly conferred by statute, while in England it is only sanctioned by long-established practice. The section confers on the Court an extraordinary and inquisitorial, though certainly a necessary power, to be exercised in the interests of the due administration of the insolvent's estate without fear, but not without scrupulous regard to considerations of economy and of fairness to the person examined: see for example In re Maundy Gregory (5). It is to be observed that the only right which the section gives to the Official Assignee or to any creditor who has proved is a right to apply to the Court to summon a witness. It is in the discretion of the Court whether or not it will do so at all, and, if it does do so, the examination of the witness is, in theory, an examination by the Court, it is only as a matter of practice that the person applying for the summons is permitted to attend and question the person summoned at all. In this connection attention was called to Ex parte Eddersley (6), where in the course of the judgment it is said :

"Where the statute has plainly said that the trustee has a right to examine persons as therein directed, I may not withhold from the Queen's subjects that right which the law has given them."

This was said in connection with s. 96, Bankruptcy Act, 1869, which was in similar terms to s. 36 (1) of our Act. I must therefore observe that the statute has not, plainly or otherwise, said what is attributed to it, and has in fact said nothing of the kind. The observation cited was unnecessary to the perfectly proper decision in that case and formed part of an unconsidered judgment of Vice-Chancellor Bacon sitting as Chief Judge in bankruptcy. He was a Judge of wide learning and experience whose decisions are entitled to great respect; but, as the Court of Appeal has not infrequently had occasion to observe, his unconsidered dicta are often characterized rather by the attractive vigour than by the accuracy of the language in which they are expressed. That the discretion of the Court in refusing to summon or further to examine a witness is not lightly to be interfered with on appeal is a proposition which Mr. Dadachanji, who appeared for the appellant, rightly accepts. He admits that it is not enough for him to show that the discretion was wrongly exercised, but that he must go further and show either that it was not exercised at all, or, if exercised, was exercised either unjudicially, or on a wrong principle of law, or on a wrong appreciation of the facts. That one or other of these things must be shown in order to sustain an appeal from the purported exercise by a lower Court of a discretionary power is too well-settled to need authority; but we must not forget that there is such a thing as a right decision reached in the wrong way. To take the most glaring example one could imagine of a failure to exercise discretion judicially or indeed at all, let us suppose that a Judge having a discretion to make or not to make a particular order decided not to make by the spin of a coin, substituting for his own judgment the arbitrament of chance. Even if this absurdity were shown to have occurred, still the Court of Appeal would not, I apprehend, make a different order if it thought that, on the facts as they were when the case came before it, a right decision had, by a fortunate accident, been reached.

Mr. Dadachanji, if I follow aright his careful argument, says that there was here (6) (1883) 48 LT 832.

no exercise of discretion because there was applied a supposed hard and fast rule against "going beyond" the evidence on which the summons was issued. I have already tried to show how absurd the literal application of any such rule would be. What I think the learned Registrar had in mind was the correct principle that s. 36 should not be used for purposes of what is sometimes termed a "roving commission" or "fishing enquiry." Both terms are apt to create confusion because they are necessarily inexact, though the expression "fishing" has a fairly well-known meaning in relation to interrogatories, the scope of which is of course much narrower than that of a private examination in an insolvency. Suffice it for the moment to say that it is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule limiting the scope of a private examination and that though the Court may (not must) think it proper to confine it to questions arising out of the matters stated in the affidavit leading to the summons there is certainly no rule that only those matters themselves may be put to the witness.

Alternatively, which is perhaps only another way of putting the same point, Mr. Dadachanji says that the discretion was exercised on what was really a wrong principle of law because the Court below conceived itself bound by G. H. Ghacnhee & Sons, In the matter of (1) to allow no further questions. He says that this decision does not decide that the Court was so bound, and that in any event it is not binding on us and he asks us to overrule it. If that decision were merely to the effect that the machinery of s. 36 is not, save in exceptional circumstances, to be used by one party to an actually pending suit for the purpose of his examining his opponent I should entirely agree with it: see In re Franks; Ex parte Gittins (7) and In re Desportes (8). To let one litigant see the other's brief is obviously wrong. But it is clear that the decision goes further. The Registrar there was of opinion that the Official Assignee intended to examine the witness in order to prepare for future litigation, and following certain observations of Davar, J., in Dada Nurmahomed & Bros. v. Ismail Karim (9), (not officially reported), he apparently disallowed the examination on that ground. Das, J. upheld his order, observing that "Section 36 was not intended for the purpose of enabling the Official Assignee to cross-examine a claimant and get from him the proof of his case."

As I have tried to indicate, he did not by "claimant" mean merely claimant in actually pending litigation, and therefore with all respect, I think that both he and Dayar J., were, if the latter is correctly reported, wrong. The section is not in terms restricted to the examination of persons who are thought to be indebted to or possessed of part of the debtor's estate but extends to "any person whom the Court may deem capable of giving information respecting the insolvent, his dealings or property." In England the corresponding section is constantly employed to examine, for example, persons claiming to be creditors with a view to considering a motion to expunge or reduce their proofs. I have had some experience of its operation in practice and not only does it not work injustice but the contrary is in my opinion the case. Moreover, if one looks at sub-ss. (4) and (5) it becomes quite clear that the mere fact that litigation against the witness may ensue cannot be a ground for refusing the examination. Suppose the witness admits that he owes the insolvent's estate Rs. 10 and has in his possession the insolvent's watch: the Court may under these sub-sections order him there and then to pay the money and to hand over the watch. But if he denies one or both of these things is the examination to be stopped on the witness's bare denial, or is it to proceed on the terms that if eventually it becomes clear that the witness's denials are false the Official Assignee is to do nothing about recovering the money and the watch? That the answer to the former question is no is clear from In re Scharrer: Ex parte Tilly (10) and that the answer to the latter is also no is plain common sense. In my opinion we ought to disapprove G. H. Ghanchee & Sons, In the matter of (1) and I am fortified in this opinion by the fact that both this decision and the cases there cited have been doubted in Goolbai v. Pherozshaw B. Petit (11) with which I respectfully and entirely agree.

Then it is said that Ba U, J., acted on a misapprehension as to the facts in that he assumed that sooner or later Mr. K. Ba Gyi "must come before the Court and prove his case in the manner laid down by the Insol. Act" when there will be a full opportunity for cross-examining him. This does seem to me, with great respect, a quite unfounded assumption, though I am not sure that it materially affects the result at which he arrived, as doubtless if Mr. K. Ba Gyi brought a regular suit for the purpose of bringing his security to sale he would have to make the Official Assignee a party. Mr. Dadachanji has therefore in my opinion made out two or possibly three, grounds on which we are entitled if we think fit to vary Ba U, J.'s order although his power to make that order was discretionary. It remains to be considered whether exercising our own unfettered discretion we should order a further examination or not. I am for myself much impressed by Ba U, J.'s observation "it will only result in waste of time" though as I have said I do not quite agree with the grounds on which he formed that opinion. Moreover the last paragraph of the head-note in Goolbai v. Pherozshaw B. Petit (11) reads:

This strikes me as both sound law and sound sense even if the word "further" be inserted before the word "examination." Mr. Dadachanji's examination of the witness has already produced results of which he had (if I may take an expression from another section of the Act) "no reasonable or probable ground of expectation." I can imagine some specific questions which might possibly make his client's prospects even brighter, but as there may be litigation between the parties about the matter I will not indicate what questions I have in mind. It may well be that Mr. Dadachanji would prefer not to put those particular questions at this stage and if so that is certainly a wise, and more than likely a right decision from his client's point of view. What he does ask us to do is to give him general liberty to continue the witness's examination in the hope of further windfalls. Whether a continuance of the examination will produce any result beneficial to the estate is, of course, a matter of speculation, but for my part I think it very unlikely. On the whole I think that Mr. Dadachanji's client has now got adequate materials on which to decide whether or not to take proceedings against Mr. K. Ba Gyi, and that he should make his mind up about it now. The appeal should, therefore, in my opinion, be dismissed. With regard to costs, a witness who is legally represented at an examination under s. 36 is not, I think, entitled to costs of such representation: It is a measure of prudence which he takes at his own expense. The position of Mr. K. Ba Gyi as to the appeal is somewhat different because (rightly or wrongly) he was made respondent and served as such : see as to this In re Scharrer: Ex parte Tilly (10) to which I have already referred in another connection. But no substantive relief was asked for against him, and he would not have been out of pocket by reason of our decision, had it gone against him, if he had not contested the appeal and I therefore think we ought to dismiss the appeal without costs. In In re Maundy Gregory (5), to which I have also referred, a witness was given costs of an appeal. But there he was himself the appellant, and the matter arose out of his refusal to answer a question. Unless he could justify that refusal (which he did) he would have been in contempt and liable to punishment. Possibly, Mr. Bodi may be advised to apply to the insolvency Judge for his costs out of the estate, to which the Official Assignee would have been entitled had this application and this appeal been properly made and preferred by him. We should therefore, I think, make an order for Mr. Bodi's costs to be taxed if he so desires, and, while expressing no opinion as to what should be done on that application, we should grant him liberty to make it.

Roberts, C. J.—I agree with the conclusions expressed by my learned brother. The order appealed from was made in the exercise of a discretionary power : and having regard to the answers already given in the examination under the Rang. Insolvency Act, I make no doubt but that the exercise of his discretion by the learned Judge in insolvency was not only one with which we ought not to interfere, but was in the circumstances a wise exercise of it. The examination of a person under this section is at least in theory, an examination by the Court; it is entirely a matter for the Court's discretion how far it should extend. The statutory power given to the Court does not entitle a creditor to demand this or that latitude in putting questions, but the decision in G. H. Ghanchee & Sons, In the matter of (1) cannot now be regarded as good law; and, as has been stated in Goolbai v. Pherozeahaw B. Petit (11) by the Bench of the High Court in Bombay, one of the objects of the section is to enable the Official Assignee to discover whether he has grounds for embarking on litigation on behalf of the creditors or not. I have not acquired the experience of my learned brother with regard to the English Law and practice in bankruptcy cases analogous to the case under appeal here. But I entertain no doubt that we ought not to interfere in the present matter, though it must be conceded that we have jurisdiction to do so, for the reasons which he has given. The appellant's learned Advocate has not been able to suggest any specific question which he was debarred from putting, and no hardship has been occasioned to his client. Any attempt to convert the latitude given to the Advocate of a creditor in these circumstances into a right to try and establish, by devious questioning and cross-examination of a speculative character, some accidental advantage ought to be discouraged. And it is for this reason that in my respectful judgment the learned Judge in insolvency exercised a wise discretion and the appeal against his order must be dismissed.

Contract—Building contract—Contractor contracting to build up building according to plan and of particular kind—Building owner appointing supervising engineer—Collusion between contractor and engineer—Building when nearly complete found very defective, as to necessitate its pulling down—Joint decree for damages held could be passed—Measure of damages—Passing of running bills by engineer, whether precludes owner from challenging work done.

A contractor contracted to build a building of a particular kind in a particular way and according to plans. The building owner appointed a supervising engineer. There was collusion between the contractor and the engineer. When the building was nearly complete it proved to be so defective and out of level as to make it necessary to pull it down :

Held, (i) that the owner was entitled when there was either such gross incompetence or gross negligence or gross dishonesty to put an end to the whole contract; and this apart from any special clause in it;

(ii) that a joint decree against two persons could be passed even when the liability of one was in contract and that of the other in tort and even though the connection between the plaintiff and the one was a direct one while that between the plaintiff and the other was indirect;

(iii) that the measure of compensation was the loss which the owner would suffer in erecting a structure of the kind for which he had contracted. [p. 258, col. 2.]

(iv) that the passing of running bills by the supervising engineer did not preclude the plaintiff from challenging the work done.

Judgment.—(The earlier portion of the judgment is not material for the purposes of the report.—Ed.) We are thus here concerned on any view with a bad building, and the question is: What is the proper remedy? The building owner says that he does not want it at all. It is no use to him: it cannot be put right: it has to be removed. The contractor says that he is agreeable to pull it down and to rebuild it. Alternatively he says if it is not pulled down it can be put right by lifting it in various ways so as to rectify the errors. The lower Court has in fact found that the right way to treat this matter is to consider how much the building owner has paid. Certain of those payments are referable to another piece of work and to a part of the present work that can be dissociated from the bad building. Therefore one deducts the sums referable to the work that has been properly done from the total payments made: the balance shows how much has been paid on account of this bad building. That is treated as money that is paid for nothing because this building has got to be removed; and accordingly the lower Court has given a decree for Rs. 10,115-12-0 and the contractor has been permitted to take this material away. As the lower Court has found collusion between the 1st defendant and the 2nd defendant it has given a joint decree against them. What we have now to consider is: (1) whether this is the proper measure of damage, (2) whether there should be a joint decree.

To consider the second question first: This is a case where, so far as the contractor is concerned, he is responsible to the building owner in contract. His contract was to put up a building of a particular kind in a particular way. He contracted to build according to plans. Those plans show a square and level building. If he delivers a building that is out of level so grossly as to make it useless or so unsightly as to make it necessary to pull it down then of course he has broken his contract. If the building owner chooses to throw up the contract—and that we consider is the position he takes up here—then this is a case where it is argued nothing has been done under the contract of any value so that the contractor is not entitled to sue on a quantum meruit, and the building owner has paid so many thousands of rupees for nothing. If this suit were laid in contract—or it may be in quasi contract—for money paid for no consideration the building owner it is urged would be entitled to get back his money. The contractor is liable for negligence also. As against the supervising engineer the building owner can sue him in contract or in tort for negligence, and the measure of damage would be again what the building owner suffered. In a recent case which came up to the Privy Council from Australia Grant v. Australian Knitting Mills Ltd. (1), their Lordships had to consider a much more difficult case where A sues B and C as a consequence of an injury that A sustained following upon the purchase from B of a defective article manufactured by C. Between A and B there was privity of contract and no negligence on the part of B because B was not aware of the defect which was latent. Between A and C there was no privity of contract but there was negligence in the manufacture of the article. The main question was:—Was C liable, that is to say for negligence in manufacture, and could a decree be given against both B and C for the damage suffered? It was decided that it could, the decree being against B in contract and against C for negligence; and the decree was in the same form as the present decree is and would result in each being liable: if one was proceeded against wholly he would have his remedy for contribution against the other. These latter points were not decided in that case but they would follow directly from the granting of a joint decree against both.

We have now to consider the damages. What is the measure of damage in this somewhat unusual case where a building has been put up and nearly completed and yet proves so defective that there is a mass of evidence to the effect that it should be pulled down?

The contractor has pressed us with the view that this is a case where the building owner should recover only nominal damages, alternatively only 10 per cent., the retention money. The latter point is founded on the contract. We do not propose to examine it because we do not think that there is much weight in that branch of the argument. The retention money was not intended to cover defects going to the whole root of the contract but only to guard against the possibility of the building owner having to complete the work even though he had paid the running bills relying on the supervising engineer's signature. The point has also been made that this is a case where a supervising engineer has given progress certificates which are final. There is nothing, we think, in this point. Progress certificates have not been given. Running bills have been passed but such passing does not preclude the building owner from challenging the work done.

The other point is a little more difficult. Here one has a building owner appointing a supervising engineer. The supervising engineer so acts that the builder spends thousands of rupees in part payment for a building which will, as the supervising engineer should well know, have to be pulled down. It is said that an engineer is employed as agent: agent's knowledge is principal's knowledge; the engineer knew the defects, therefore the principal knew: the principal stood by, and now he cannot recover. A somewhat more complicated case was considered in Mayor & Co. of Kingston-upon-Hull v. Harding (2). That was more complicated because in that particular case it was not a building owner who was suing a contractor but a building owner suing a surety who had assured the true performance of the building contract. It was a case where the building contract provided that the engineer's certificate should be final and the engineer has given his certificate. The jury in an action between the building owner and the builder had held that it was fraudulently obtained and consequently not effective. Then the building owner, having been unable to get satisfaction from the contractor, sued the surety and the surety said: "I am not liable because you (building owner) had a supervising engineer who allowed things to be done for which you are now holding me responsible."

It came before the Court of Appeal, and Bowen, L. J., (at p. 508*) observed as follows:

"The doctrine of law on this subject established in the case of M'Taggart v. Weston (3), and probably before the case, and expounded by subsequent authorities, particularly in the case of Dawson v. Larves (4) and other cases referred to in Mayor of Durham v. Fowler (5), is this: more omission on the part of the employer, mere passive acquiescence in acts which are improper on the part of the employer will not release the surety."

It is apparent from Lord Esher's judgment in the same case that the fact that the surety was there being sued caused the Court the only trouble that they had. Had the builder been sued it would have been a clear case.

In any event it is clear from these decisions that a joint decree against two persons is possible even when the liability of one is in contract and that of the other in tort and even though the connection between the plaintiff and the one is a direct one while that between the plaintiff and the other is indirect. We have therefore no difficulty in holding that a joint decree against the two defendants is possible and that it should be passed in this case. The defence which might otherwise have been available to the contractor, namely, that as the building was passed by the plaintiff's expert and agent up to the stage it has now reached it must be accepted as far as it goes, cannot be raised once it is found that the supervising engineer and the contractor were in collusion. We do not say that this defence would have been legally sound had the facts been otherwise. But as the point was argued, all we say is that the question does not arise in this case.

We now have to assess the damages and we think that the principle on which this should be done is to be found in the American Law Institute's Restatement of the Law, Contracts pp. 574 to 577. Dealing with the question of damages in the case of Construction Contracts, the learned authors state:—

"The purpose of money damages is to put the injured party in as good a position as that in which full performance would have put him; but this does not mean that he is to be put in the same physical position. Satisfaction for his harm is made either by giving him a sum of money sufficient to produce the physical product contracted for or by giving him the exchange value that that produce would have had if it had been constructed..... Sometimes defects in a completed structure cannot be physically remedied without tearing down and rebuilding at a cost that would be imprudent and unreasonable. The law does not require damages to be measured by a method requiring such economic waste."

We think that that accurately states the law which obtains, or which should obtain, here.

The example given to illustrate the rule is this:

"A contracts to construct a school house for B for $ 50,000. When completed the foundations sink and the building is dangerous. B has paid A $ 30,000. At a cost of $ 40,000 more, B tears down the walls, strengthens the foundations, and rebuilds the superstructure, this being necessary to make the building safe. B can get judgment for $ 20,000, this amount being the cost of tearing down and rebuilding, less the part of the contract price not yet paid."

The first question, therefore, is to see whether the building must be pulled down and started afresh or whether rectification is possible. On this the defendant's experts state that rectification is possible and that it can be done at comparatively small cost. The plaintiff's expert thinks that rectification is not possible if what is required is a reasonably satisfying building for the price paid.

We think that Ditchburn, P. W. No. 6, has better qualifications and much wider experience than the defendants' experts. It does not appear from the evidence of the latter that they have ever seen rectifications of this nature carried out or that they have ever done it themselves. As we have to choose between these two sets of opinions we prefer that of Ditchburn. This is particularly so as, though extraordinary feats of engineering are possible given the requisite knowledge, skill and machinery, we do not think they would be available in a place like Nagpur where constructional ability is not of a high order and where anything out of the ordinary is not often attempted. One has only to look to the results produced in this case by persons who are said to have qualifications, which, judging from their own and their Counsel's statements, as well as from the high prices charged and paid for their work, are regarded as extremely high in this locality. If this is the sort of state these local experts can get a building into one trembles to think what would happen to any difficult and complicated engineering feat entrusted to their care.

It is true the contractor has offered to do the rectification himself but, seeing the work he has already done, it is not surprising that the plaintiff is not prepared to entrust anything more to his hands.

The contractor has, as a matter of fact, offered to pull the whole thing down to the plinth level and start afresh from there without extra charge, and has undertaken to rebuild, using the old materials, to the satisfaction of any engineer the plaintiff chooses to name: a fair enough offer but not one which we can force the plaintiff to accept.

In the first place, Ditchburn says this would not be satisfactory: the materials would be second-hand and the result in a measure patch-work. We agree with the lower Court that the plaintiff who has agreed to pay high rates for a really first class building should not have one which, at the best, would not be in that class, foisted upon him. But also as a matter of law the plaintiff is entitled, when there is either such gross incompetence; or gross negligence or gross dishonesty, it does not matter which, as here, to put an end to the whole contract: and this apart from any special clause in it. If we were to compel the plaintiff to accept the contractor's offer it would mean that we are depriving him of a right to which he is legally entitled. Moreover, as the lower Court remarks, the plaintiff has already afforded the defendants this opportunity by his letters, Ex. 1-D-7 and Ex. P-7. They did nothing about it, so he was fully justified in putting an end to the contract altogether. We are consequently of opinion that rectification is not the right remedy in this case.

As regards damages, the plaintiff wanted a first class building at a certain price. He is entitled, therefore, to be put as nearly as may be in the same position as he would have been in if things had been rightly and properly done.

The lower Court holds in para. 22 of its judgment that the plaintiff has paid the contractor Rs. 17,036-15-0 and has supplied him with materials worth Rs. 424-11-0. That is to say the plaintiff has up to date, according to the lower Court, invested a sum of Rs. 17,461-10-0 in this building. For this money he has obtained what he has described as blocks A, B and C in his plaint. Of these, there is no complaint about blocks A and C except in a small matter which according to the lower Court can be set right at a cost of Rs. 10. We have, therefore, to deduct the sum spent on blocks A and C before we can arrive at any conclusion respecting block B.

The lower Court's figures are based on the statement in the plaint and its schedule. But they are not accepted by the contractor. He states in para. 9 of his written statement that the payment towards the works in dispute totals only Rs. 16,780-15-0 and not the Rs. 17,461-10-0 mentioned in the plaint.

The contractor's figures appear to be based on the plaintiff's measurement book, Ex. P-6. This shows that the following sums were passed for payment on the dates shown against them below.

	Rs.	a.	p.
21-3-32	1,830	2	0
23-5-32	3,957	13	9
9-7-32	4,009	6	0
26-7-32	2,487	9	3
	12,284	15	0
Add as per Schedule to the plaint	4,500	0	0
Total	16,784	15	0

There is a small difference of Rs. 4, which we can ignore; it is probably a misprint. But though these seem to have been the sums passed for payment we find that the sums actually paid were those given in the plaint.

The plaintiff's cashier, P. W. No. 4, speaking from the plaintiff's account books, states that he himself made the payments and that they were as follows:

	Rs.	a.	p.
23-3-32	1,830	2	0
25-5-32	4,209	13	9
11-7-32	4,009	6	0
26-7-32	2,487	9	3
27-8-32	4,000	0	0

These add up to the plaintiff's figure. The defendants have not shown us any accounts on their side, nor have they called for any receipts, consequently we see no reason to disbelieve P. W. No. 4 and the plaintiff's books, especially as the lower Court has accepted the plaintiff's figure. We, therefore, hold that the sums actually paid to the contractor totalled Rs. 17,037-3-6.

The next dispute is about Rs. 424-11-0 the cost of materials supplied. The defendant's case is that only Rs. 85-8-0 is properly chargeable to this head and he complains that the plaintiff has included an item of Rs. 339-3-0 twice over in the schedule to his plaint.

The schedule shows that on March 23, 1932 Rs. 2,122-5-0 was actually due to the contractor but he was only paid Rs. 1,830-2-0 because a sum of Rs. 80-3-0 was deducted on account of materials supplied. A similar deduction was made on May 25, 1932, in respect of a sum of Rs. 259. The two together total the Rs. 339-3-0.

We do not think there is anything in this connection. Had we been considering the sum properly payable to the contractor on the basis of sound work of course he would have been right. The plaintiff would not have been entitled to charge this over again. But we are not now considering what the contractor ought to get but what damages the two defendants should pay to the plaintiff. We cannot arrive at that figure without knowing how much the plaintiff has actually put into this building: not what he would have had to pay if it had been properly constructed, but how much he has actually spent. This sum totals up to the Rs. 17,461-10-0 which the lower Court has accepted.

We have next to see how much of this went into blocks A and C. The figure given by the plaintiff in his plaint is Rs. 4,149-10-9. The contractor's figure is Rs. 7,345-14-0. We have to choose between the two.

The lower Court has accepted the contractor's figure and the cross-objection and the revision which we have dismissed relate to Rs. 1,000 out of this. The balance was apparently not questioned in either of these two proceedings. But, however that may be, the lower Court points out that when the contractor questioned the plaintiff's figure and gave one of his own the plaintiff chose to reply, and though he questioned other portions of the paragraph in the written statement (namely para. 9) he did not question the accuracy of the contractor's figures on this point. Had he not replied the question would have been in issue but as he chose to file long and elaborate replies to practically every statement made, the matter assumes a different aspect. In these circumstances, and bearing in mind that the cross-objection and the revision have already been dismissed, we think it right, as the lower Court did, to adhere to the contractor's figure of Rs. 7,345-14-0. When we deduct this from the total of Rs. 17,461-10-0 we find that Rs. 10,115-12-0 is the sum expended over block B. The question now is how much of this should be returned to the plaintiff.

We have already decided that rectification would not be the right remedy in this case. We agree with the plaintiff's expert Ditchburn that the building will have to be pulled down, but we are of opinion that the foundations will still be serviceable—in fact they will be all the better for having an opportunity to settle. Nobody has made any complaint about them, either as regards the quality of the materials used or the manner in which they have been laid. The reinforced concrete coping with which these foundations are finished off will of course have to be removed in order to enable the under neath to be properly levelled but up to that point we think the building must be regarded as sound and serviceable.

Exhibit P-6, which contains particulars of the first running bill, shows that it was paid for work upto the plinth stage. The total of the work done up to that stage was Rs. 2,122-5-0, and deducting Rs. 80-3-0, the value of the materials supplied by the plaintiff, we get a figure of Rs. 2,042-2-0 chargeable to that head. But out of this will have to be deducted the value of the materials which were used for the reinforced coping on top of the foundations. We have not been shown any evidence about this by either side and the matter is not of much importance any way, but as far as we can make out from the first running bill, Items Nos. 6 and 7 relate to this head, and the amount of referable to these items is the difference between Rs. 1,852-5-0 which seems to be a running total at the end of Item No. 7 and the Rs. 1,675-8-0 which heads column 6. That is to say the total is Rs. 176-13-0. That makes the total properly debitible to the foundations as Rs. 1,865-5-0 (that is to say, Rs. 2,042-2-0 less Rs. 176-13-0). This figure must be deducted from the Rs. 10,115-12-3 awarded by the lower Court. That leaves a sum of Rs. 8,250-7-3.

The next question is whether any of the material used in other parts of the building will still be serviceable to the plaintiff for a new building. Ditchburn says that it will not be fair to saddle him with these used materials. We agree that so far as the bulk of them is concerned that would not be right, but no complaint has been made about either the quality or the workmanship of the woodwork and it seems to us that most of it will still be serviceable. We think, therefore, that the door frames and shutters and the window frames and the sky light frames as also the wooden beams and trusses which support the roof of the upper storey should be re-used and their cost as charged in these bills' less 20 per cent. for deterioration and the rough state in which they will now necessarily be, should be deducted. We also think that the iron girders can be used again and that in their case also their cost as charged to the plaintiff less 20 per cent. should be deducted. That means that the decree of the lower Court will be modified by substituting for the figure of Rs. 10,378-10-0 the figure which will now be obtained by deducting from Rs. 8,250-7-3 the value as charged in the running bills of the door frames and shutters, the window frames and sky light frames and the iron girders, as also the wooden beams and trusses which support the roof of the upper storey, less 20 per cent. There will also be added to the decree a clause directing the defendant No. 1 to restore to the plaintiff within the two months allowed the door frames, shutters, girders etc., which we have mentioned above, and of which a list will be given later, in good and serviceable condition for re-use, with a right to the plaintiff to apply to this Court to amend the decree in respect of any such material as is returned in an unserviceable condition.

This latter part of the case was not argued before us as we cut Counsel short on the extent of the damages to be allowed until we had decided the principle along which they should be awarded. The parties will therefore now file an agreed list, if that is possible, of the materials we have specified above and the cost debitible to them in accordance with the running bills. If they are unable to agree each will file his own list and we will determine the point. The 20 per cent. will be deducted by us and this list or these lists should not show the deduction :

The costs of this appeal and those in the Court below will be according to success and failure. A fresh period of two months from the date of the decree will now be fixed.

The following clause in the lower Court's decree will also be modified.

"and restore the ground to the same position in which it was before the construction of the building" will now read as :

"and restores the ground to the same position in which it was before the construction of the building with the exception of the foundations after removal of the reinforced cement coping. That will remain."

We add that we have not overlooked the fact that ordinarily the plaintiff would also be entitled, after all these matters have been taken into account, to the difference between the price which he would have had to pay if the building had been properly constructed and that which he will be obliged to pay for the reconstruction if the latter exceeds the former. But here the plaintiff's own case is that the prices agreed were high and that the market rates were much lower. It follows the plaintiff will not, on his own showing, now have to pay as much for the reconstruction as he would have had to pay under the original agreement. Consequently, he is not entitled to anything along these lines and so we need not consider exactly what it will cost him to rebuild.

We also add that we have not overlooked the fact that the 20 per cent. rebate which we have allowed to the plaintiff on the price of such of the materials as in our opinion will still be serviceable, hits the contractor; also that he gets the benefit of whatever materials he removes; and that at the first blush this would appear to overlook the supervising engineer. But really it does not.

The liability, as we have pointed out, is joint and several and the measure of compensation is the loss which the plaintiff will suffer in erecting a structure of the kind for which he had contracted. This is a matter which is independent of personalities and so whoever is responsible in law for this loss must suffer a decree to be passed against him for the full amount. If there is inequality as between the defendants inter se that is a matter which they will have to settle between themselves. So far as the plaintiff is concerned there is only one standard.

We may add that at first we had thought of directing that the decree be executed in the first instance against the contractor and then against the supervising engineer only for such balance as was irrecoverable from his co-defendant. But in view of the unfounded attacks made on the plaintiff by the second defendant, which were persisted in in this Court in spite of warning; we see no reason why we should, in the exercise of our discretion, discriminate between the two. In the eye of the law they are both jointly and severally liable and we think that the law should be allowed to follow its normal course.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (xi) (cc)—Tenant refusing to vacate after notice to quit—Ejectment suit falls under s. 7 (xi) (cc).

Even though a notice of ejectment is served on a tenant, he does not cease to be a tenant "holding over" for the purposes of s. 7 (xi) (cc), Court Fees Act. Consequently a suit to eject him falls under s. 7 (xi) (cc) and cannot be treated as a suit against a trespasser. 99 Ind. Cas. 438 (3), followed, 74 Ind. Cas. 93 (1), 116 Ind. Cas. 374 (2) and 84 Ind. Cas. 202 (4), not approved.

S. A. from a decree of the District Judge, Dera Ghazi Khan, dated October 26, 1939.

Mr. Achhru Ram, for the Appellant.

Mr. Jivan Lal Kapur, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This was a suit for ejectment of a tenant and for recovery of Rs. 18-4-9 on account of arrears of rent and cost of notice. The suit was decreed by the trial Court but on appeal the learned District Judge has held that the plaint was not properly stamped and that court-fee should have been paid ad valorem on the property as the suit was really against the defendant as a trespasser. Permission was asked for amendment of the plaint but the prayer was not granted and the plaintiff's suit was dismissed. From this decision the plaintiff has preferred a second appeal. The Counsel for the appellant has urged that the position of the defendant was that of a 'tenant holding over', that the court-fee was sufficient as the suit properly fell under s. 7 cl. (xi) (cc), Court-Fees Act, and lastly that in any case the District Judge, was not justified in dismissing the suit so far as the recovery of rent was concerned.

The main point for decision in the appeal is whether the plaint was properly stamped. The plaintiff sued the defendant on the footing that he was a tenant. The learned District Judge has himself found that the defendant was at first a tenant of the plaintiff. He has, however, held that after the notice of ejectment was served on the defendant, he became a trespasser and, therefore, ad valorem court-fee was payable. In support of this view, the learned District Judge has relied on Narayan v. Tukaram (1) and Govinda Ram v. Dulu Pade Dutta (2). The learned Counsel for the appellant has urged that these rulings do not lay down correct law. In every suit for ejectment of a tenant notice has to be served on the defendant and if the service of such notice by itself is sufficient to alter the status of the defendant into that of a trespasser, the provision of s. 7, cl. (xi) (cc) would be rendered nugatory. He has relied on Vithaldas v. Gulam Ahmad (3), in support of his contention that the suit was properly stamped under s. 7 cl. (xi) (cc). The learned Counsel for the respondent relied on Champat v. Balakdas (4), but it appears that this ruling was overruled by Vithaldas v. Gulam Ahmad (3). It was held in Vithaldas v. Gulam Ahmad (3) by a Division Bench of the Judicial Commissioners' Court that even though a notice of ejectment is served on a tenant, he does not cease to be a tenant "holding over" for the purposes of s. 7 (xi), (cc), Court Fees Act, as the cause of action accrues from the date on which the tenant refuses to quit in compliance with the notice. The learned Counsel for the respondent urged that the plaintiff had taken up the position that no notice was necessary. This position was apparently taken in the alternative if notice was held to be not proved. It seems to me that in view of the principle laid down in Vithaldas v. Gulam Ahmad (3), the present suit could not be treated as one against a 'trespasser'. In my opinion, the true principle governing a case of this description has been laid down in the Division Bench ruling reported in Vithaldas v. Gulam Ahmad (3). Following that principle I accept the appeal and setting aside the decree of the learned District Judge remand the case to him for decision of the other points arising in the case. Costs will follow final decision. Parties are directed to appear before the learned District Judge on November 18, 1940.

Tort—Malicious prosecution—Suit for damages—

Some of defendants Police Officers—Cause of action against them, based on their acts done purported to be official Acts—Notice under s. 80, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), if necessary—Question whether acts were done in good or bad faith, if material—Bar of s. 80, Civil Procedure Code applying as against some of defendants—Whole suit is unsustainable.

The question of the good faith or the bad faith of the public officer either as regards his belief in the legality or propriety of his act or the limit of his powers or the existence of facts justifying the exercise of such powers is irrelevant in the consideration of the question whether the officer is entitled to notice under s. 80 of the Civil P. C. The section does not require that the act should have been done in good faith; it merely requires that it should purport to be done by the officer in his official capacity. If the act was one such as is ordinarily done by the officer in the course of his official duties, and he considered himself to be acting as a public officer and desired other persons to consider that he was so acting, the act clearly purports to be done in his official capacity within the ordinary meaning of the term 'purport'. The motives with which the act was done do not enter into the question at all. 46 Ind. Cas. 86 (2) and 80 Ind. Cas. 72 (3), relied on.

The plaintiff brought a suit for damages for malicious prosecution against a number of defendants out of whom defendants Nos. 4 and 5 were Police Officers. The act on which the plaintiff rested his cause of action against the Police Officers was that they arrested the plaintiff and led him to the Police Station as a person accused of theft.

Held, that it was as Police Officers that defendants Nos. 4 and 5 took the plaintiff to the Police Station and although there may be a discrepancy as to whether one of them was in uniform or not that was an irrelevant matter because it was known to all parties concerned that they were Police Officers and it was perfectly clear that they purported to act as such whether in good or bad faith. Thus it was essential that notice under s. 80, Civil P. C., should be served on these defendants before instituting the suit;

Held, further that the bar of s. 80, Civil P. C., applied to the suit as a whole and not only to the claim for relief against those two defendants. The suit was therefore unsustainable in limine. Raghubans Puri v. Jyotis Swarupa (4), 132 Ind. Cas. 634 (5) and 104 Ind. Cas. 257 (6), referred to.

Judgment.—This appeal by the first defendant of the original suit arises out of a suit for damages for false and malicious prosecution. The plaintiff has been given by the concurrent decision of both Courts a decree for Rs. 124-11-0 damages and his costs. The suit was brought against five defendants of whom the fourth and fifth were Police Officers. Defendant No. 4 raised the plea inter alia that the institution of the suit was barred by the provisions of s. 80 of the Civil P. C. because no notice under that section had been served on himself or defendant No. 5 though the acts on which the plaintiff rested his cause of action against them were acts done in their official capacity as Police Officers.

The main point of law in this case is whether in the face of s. 80 of the Civil P. C. the suit could proceed. I may here state briefly the facts on which the plaintiff relied.

On January 19, 1937 Noor Mohammad defendant No. 1 procured the arrest of the plaintiff Khub Lal Muchi in the house of Amir Buksh an uncle of Noor Mohammad. The plaintiff was taken to the Police Station by defendant No. 4 Ram Chander Singh Haveldar and defendant No. 5 Bishundeo Sukul constable. Defendant No. 1 Noor Muhammad going with them and at the Police Station Noor Muhammad laid a first information report of theft against the plaintiff Khub Lal. The Sub-Inspector investigated the case and sent up charge-sheet. The plaintiff was put on his trial and was acquitted. All the defendants figured as witnesses for the prosecution. After his acquittal the plaintiff moved the trying Magistrate to order the prosecution of the informant under s. 211 of the I. P. C. for having wilfully brought a false case against him. The Magistrate refused to order such a prosecution and the plaintiff then went to the Civil Court and brought this suit. The Courts below have not been very clear as to what exactly were the admitted facts and what were the facts in issue which the plaintiff had to prove. It was common ground that the plaintiff was arrested at Amir Buksh's house : the fact in issue was whether he had gone there for theft or under circumstances suggesting a criminal intent, or had gone there on an invitation from defendant No. 1. Neither Court has stated what is the evidence for and against the plaintiff's version or has noticed that the plaintiff himself is the only witness to support it. The judgments are not altogether satisfactory for neither Court seems to have observed that there is no direct evidence of conspiracy and they have recorded a finding of conspiracy without apparently realizing that they were doing so on conjecture. The conjecture is based on the fact that antecedent events had happened which might be supposed to constitute a motive for such a conspiracy; but a criminal conspiracy of this kind ought to be proved and not presumed. On the point of law the view taken by the Subordinate Judge is that s. 80 Civil P. C. does not apply to the suit unless it is proved that defendants Nos. 4 and 5 acted in their official capacities and not in collusion and conspiracy with the other defendants. The view was at one time expressed in certain decisions of the Calcutta High Court that s. 80 did not apply unless not only the act complained of was an act which the defendant might have done in exercise of functions belonging to his official capacity, but also he showed that he was acting in good faith within the powers entrusted to him by law; but these decisions must be held to have been overruled so far as the Calcutta High Court is concerned in Dakshina Ranjan Ghosh v. Omar Chand Oswal (1). It was held that to read into the section words which would limit its application to cases in which an officer acted bona fide in the exercise of his powers would not be legitimate, and that the duty of the Courts was to give effect to the natural meaning of the language used in the sections of the Code. The same view was arrived at in the Madras High Court in Koti Reddi v. Subbiah (2). Sadasiva Ayyar, J. puts the matter clearly in saying that

"the question of the good faith or the bad faith of the public officer either as regards his belief in the legality or propriety of his act or the limit of his powers or the existence of facts justifying the exercise of such powers is irrelevant in the consideration of the question whether the officer is entitled to notice under s. 80 of the Civil P. C."

The Allahabad High Court has taken a similar view in Abdul Rahim v. Abdul Rahman (3) observing that :

"On the language of the section the question seems to us to admit of no doubt. The section does not require that the act should have been done in good faith; it merely requires that it should purport to be done by the officer in his official capacity. If the act was one such as is ordinarily done by the officer in the course of his official duties, and he considered himself to be acting as a public officer and desired other persons to consider that he was so acting, the act clearly purports to be done in his official capacity within the ordinary meaning of the term 'purport'. The motives with which the act was done do not enter into the question at all."

Therefore the grounds on which the Courts below have held that s. 80 of the Civil P. C. did not come into effect, so as to require that the plaintiff should before bringing his suit give notice to defendants Nos. 4 and 5 are not sustainable. We have simply to see what act was done by these defendants and whether it purported to be an official act. The act done was that they arrested the plaintiff and led him to the Police Station as a person accused of theft. That was an act which every Police Officer has a statutory power to do under s. 54 firstly of the Criminal P. C. It was as Police Officers that defendants Nos. 4 and 5 took the plaintiff to the Police Station and although there may be a discrepancy as to whether one of them was in uniform or not that is an irrelevant matter because it was known to all parties concerned that they were Police Officers and it is perfectly clear that they purported to act as such whether in good or bad faith. Thus it was essential that notice should be served on these defendants before instituting the suit.

The question then arises whether the bar of s. 80 applies to the suit as a whole or only to the claim for relief against these two defendants. The operative portion of s. 80 is "no suit shall be instituted against" etc. and the consequence of instituting a suit in face of a statutory prohibition is that under O. VII, r. 11, Civil P. C. the plaint should be rejected. It has been held in the Allahabad High Court in Raghubans Puri v. Jyotis Swarupa (4) that a Court cannot reject a plaint in part. It has also been held in the Calcutta High Court in Jagadish Chandra Deo v. Debendra Prasad Bahadur (5), that the proper course in a case like the present is to reject the plaint. The Privy Council decision in Bhagchand Dagadusa v. Secretary of State for India in Council (6) makes it quite clear that the requirements of s. 80 cannot be evaded or explained away and that a suit instituted in contravention of s. 80 is "unsustainable in limine."

In the result the decisions of both the Courts must be set aside. In lieu thereof it must be ordered that the plaint be rejected and that the appellant shall have his costs throughout from the plaintiff.

Leave to appeal under the Letters Patent is refused.

PULIN BEHARI DAS AND ANOTHER—

JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—APPELLANTS

versus

Syed REASAT ALI AND OTHERS—DECREE-HOLDERS—RESPONDENTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI r. 17 (1), (4), ss. 151, 47, 145—Execution application—Correct number of suit and decretal amount not mentioned—Defect, if can be remedied—Execution application duly registered—Judgment-debtor taking no steps to have order for registration set aside—Order, if legal and valid—Dismissal of execution application as time-barred—On decree-holder's application under s. 151, Court reconsidering previous order and reviving execution case—Order under s. 151 held, not illegal—Remedy of aggrieved judgment-debtor—Assam Debt Conciliation Act (X of 1936), ss. 7, 8 (3), 16 (4), 21—Debt Settlement Board, whether has inherent final jurisdiction to determine existence and amount of debt—Finality under s. 8 (3), nature of—Decision by Board that debt does not subsist as it is time-barred amounts to decision that it has no jurisdiction to deal with the debt—Jurisdiction of Civil Court, if ousted under s. 8 (3) or s. 16 (4) to deal with it—Application under s. 4—Board holding particular debt to be time-barred—Civil Court, if should suspend proceedings in respect of such debt though application may be pending before Board.

Where in the form of an execution application the correct number of the suit had not been mentioned and the amount for which the decree was passed was incorrectly given the defects are not material and can easily be remedied under O. XXI, r. 17 (1), Civil P. C. [p. 266, col. 2.]

Where an application for execution is duly registered under O. XXI, r. 17 (4) and the judgment-debtors take no steps to have this order for registration set aside the order must be regarded as a legal and valid order.

Where on an application of the decree-holder under s. 151, Civil P. C., the executing Court reconsiders its previous order dismissing the decree-holder's execution application as time-barred and revives the execution case, the order under s. 151 cannot be said to be illegal. The remedy of the aggrieved judgment-debtor is by way of revision under s. 115.

Decision of the Debt Conciliation Board on the question of jurisdiction is final under s. 8 (3), Assam Debt Conciliation Act, but the finality only attaches to the actual decision with regard to jurisdiction and not to any incidental finding on which that decision may be based.

A Board in Assam has no inherent final jurisdiction to determine questions relating to the existence and amount of a debt though the Board might have to consider such questions incidentally, for example, under s. 4 of the Act, in order to enable it to decide whether or not it had jurisdiction to deal with a particular application.

Where the Board holds that a particular debt was not subsisting as it was time-barred, the order amounts to an order that it has no jurisdiction to deal with the particular debt as it was time-barred, and therefore, finality only attaches to the order in so far as it purports to decide that the Board had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter, but, in so far as the order may have purported to decide whether the alleged debt was in existence or its amount, no finality would attach thereto and therefore it would not oust under s. 8 (3) or

s. 16 (4) the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to deal with the debtor. 184 Ind. Cas. 118 (1), referred to.

Where an application under s. 4 is made to the Board for the settlement of debts, and the Board holds that a particular debt mentioned in the application is time-barred the Civil Court is under no obligation to suspend the execution proceedings before it in connection with that decree even though the application under s. 4 may be pending before the Board.

A. from the appellate order of the District Judge, Sylhet, dated March 10, 1939.

Messrs. Priyanath Dutt and Himanshu Chandra Choudhury, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Jatindra Nath Lahiry and Paresh Lal Shome, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal is directed against the order of the learned District Judge of Sylhet, dated March 10, 1939, under which he dismissed an appeal against the decision of the trial Court, in which the learned Munsif directed that certain proceedings taken in Execution Case No. 362 of 1938 should proceed.

The main points urged on behalf of the appellants in this case are (1) that the application for execution was barred by limitation and (2) that the Courts below should have suspended all proceedings in execution on account of the fact that the appellants had approached the Debt Conciliation Board at Sylhet for the settlement of their debts, including the debt covered by the decree which was the subject-matter of the above-mentioned execution proceedings. The admitted facts of the case are briefly as follows: On February 7, 1934, the decree-holders obtained a decree against the appellants for the sum of Rs. 666. Thereafter, on February 8, 1937, the decree-holders put this decree into execution in Execution Case No. 91 of 1937. On February 27, 1937, an order was recorded by the Court to the effect that the application for execution was time-barred, but on the same day the decree-holders filed a petition for the reconsideration of this order under s. 151, Civil P. C. On March 1, 1937, the execution case was revived and the application for execution was duly registered, but two days later, this execution case was dismissed for default. On February 7, 1938, the judgment-debtors applied to the Debt Conciliation Board at Sylhet for the settlement of the debts due from them to all their creditors and their application apparently included the debt due to the respondents under the decree in Money Suit No. 1569 of 1933. On April 11, 1938 it appears that the judgment-debtors produced before the Board a certified copy of the order, dated February 27, 1937, under which the decree-holders' application for execution had been rejected as being time-barred, but they did not disclose the fact that a few days later this application had been restored on the decree-holders' petition under s. 151, Civil P. C. After perusal of the order of the learned Munsif, dated February 27, 1937, the Debt Conciliation Board held that the debt due on the decree in Money Suit No. 1569 of 1933 was not subsisting as it was time-barred. On May 5, 1938 the decree-holders applied to the Board for a review of this order under s. 19, Assam Debt Conciliation Act but their application was rejected. On September 13, 1938, the decree-holders again applied to the Court for the execution of this decree and it was in connection with this application for execution that the judgment-debtors raised two objections: (1) to the effect that the application for execution was barred by limitation and (2) that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter in view of the orders which had been passed with reference thereto by the Debt Conciliation Board.

As regards the question of limitation the main argument of the learned Advocate for the appellants in this case is that the previous application for execution, which was filed on February 8, 1937, cannot be regarded as an application in accordance with law within the meaning of Art. 182 (5), Lim. Act, and he relies on certain irregularities connected with the filing of the application for execution, to which reference has been made in the judgment of the learned District Judge. For instance, it would appear that the correct number of the suit had not been mentioned and the amount for which the decree was passed was incorrectly given. The defects in the form of the application, such as they were, were not material and might easily have been remedied if the Court had followed the provisions of O. XXI, r. 17 (1) of the Code, which it failed to observe. Moreover, the Court wrongly assumed that the application was time-barred, and in my view the order rejecting it which was made on February 27, 1937 was obviously illegal.

I am in entire agreement with the learned Judge in the opinion which he records to the effect that the execution proceedings in connection with this matter were inefficiently conducted by the Court and the ministerial officers concerned. It would appear that, in connection with this matter, no large measure of blame can be attached to the decree-holder and, in any case, the record shows that, on March 1, 1937, the application for execution was duly registered under the provisions of O. XXI, r. 17 (4), Civil P. C. The judgment-debtors took no steps to have this order for registration set aside and, this being the case, it must be regarded as a legal and valid order. In this connection, it has been argued that the executing Court had no jurisdiction to revive the execution case on March 1, 1937, under the provisions of s. 151, Civil P. C. Having regard to the special circumstances of the case, I am not prepared to say that in this particular case the executing Court acted illegally in making the order under s. 151 of the Code, but in any event, if the judgment-debtors felt themselves aggrieved by this order, they should have moved this Court in revision under s. 115, Civil P. C., for its modification. This they failed to do. In view of the circumstances set forth above, I am of opinion that the proceedings in Execution Case No. 91 of 1937 were taken in accordance with law. The latter case was dismissed on March 3, 1937 and, as the application in the present case was filed on September 13, 1938, it is clear that the present execution proceedings were taken in proper time.

As regards the second objection which has been urged on behalf of the appellants, the trial Court held that the order recorded by the Debt Conciliation Board on April 11, 1938, was made without jurisdiction and the learned District Judge was of the opinion that, as regards the debt which was the subject-matter of the execution proceedings, there had been no final adjudication by the Debt Conciliation Board and, therefore, it could not be said that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter. From the provisions of the Assam Debt Conciliation Act, 1936, it would appear that, under s. 8 (1) of the Act, if the Board after examining the debtor considers it desirable to effect a settlement between him and his creditors, it is enjoined to call upon every creditor of the debtor to submit a statement of debts owed to such creditor by the debtor. Sub-section (2) goes on to say that :

"Every debt of which a statement is not submitted to the Board in compliance with the provisions of sub-s. (1) shall be deemed for all purposes and all occasions to have been duly discharged."

On behalf of the judgment-debtors in this case it was suggested during the course of the argument that the order, dated April 11, 1938, had the effect of discharging the debt within the meaning of s. 8 (2) of the Act and, in this view, it was urged that the jurisdiction of the Civil Court would be barred by the provisions of s. 16 (4) of the Act. I am not prepared to accept this contention.

The above-mentioned order indicates that the creditors had in fact submitted a statement of their debts but that they had failed to file any document in support of their claim as contemplated by the provisions of s. 9 of the Act. It, therefore, follows that the order cannot be regarded as falling within the purview of s. 8 (2) of the Act. In effect, the order in question merely amounted to a decision on the part of the Board that they had no jurisdiction to deal with this particular debt as it was barred by limitation. As regards the question of the jurisdiction, it is provided by s. 7 of the Act that the Board may at any stage dismiss an application for want of jurisdiction and there is a further provision in sub-s. (3) of r. 8 to the effect that the decision of the Board with regard to jurisdiction under s. 7 or s. 8 shall be final and shall not be questioned in any Civil Court. Having regard to the terms of the order which was recorded on April 11, 1938, I must hold that it merely amounted to a decision that the Board had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter. In this view of the case I consider that the Civil Court would be competent to deal with any application for the execution of the decree, which might thereafter be filed in such Court, and to decide for itself in those proceedings whether the debt was in fact time-barred.

In this connection, it has been suggested by the learned Advocate for the appellants that the order, dated April 11, 1938, should be taken as a final determination of the Board to the effect that the debt did not exist, which would prevent the question of the existence of such debt being again raised directly or indirectly in the Civil Court. In other words, it is contended that a Debt Conciliation Board in Assam would have an inherent final jurisdiction to determine questions relating to the existence and amount of a debt such as has been expressly conferred upon Debt Settlement Boards in Bengal under the provisions of s. 18, Ben. Agri. Debtors Act. I am not prepared to accept this argument. Of course, a question relating to the amount or existence of a debt might have to be considered incidentally (e. g., under s. 4 of the Act) in order to enable a Board to decide whether or not it had jurisdiction to deal with a particular application. The Board's decision on the question of jurisdiction would be final under s. 8 (3) of the Act. At the same time, under this sub-section, finality only attaches to the actual decision with regard to jurisdiction and not to any incidental finding on which that decision may be based. The general principles which regulate the scope of the authority of the Civil Court with regard to Debt Settlement. Boards in Bengal have been summarized by Ghose, J. as follows in Nur Miya v. Noakhali Nath Bank Ltd. (1).

"In some of the reported cases, this Court has pointed out that the Act has set up its own tribunal and has laid down the principle that where the Act has expressly provided that certain matters are to be decided by that tribunal the Civil Court must refrain from going into those matters, but where there is no express provision in respect of the tribunal under the Act, the ordinary Court must act in the exercise of its powers."

If the principle formulated above be applied in respect of the order of the Board, dated April 11, 1938, it appears that finality only attaches to the order in so far as it purports to decide that the Board had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter, but, in so far as the order may have purported to decide whether the alleged debt was in existence or its amount, no finality would attach thereto. If it had been the intention of the Legislature to confer exclusive jurisdiction upon Debt Conciliation Boards to decide questions of fact with regard to the existence or amount of debts, some provision on the lines of s. 18, Ben. Agri. Debtors Act, would have been inserted in the statute but this has not been done. In my judgment therefore even if the decision of the Board, dated April 11, 1938, could be regarded as a determination to the effect that the alleged debt did not exist, this would not have the effect of ousting the jurisdiction of the Civil Court under s. 8 (3) of the Act. Further, the matter clearly does not come within the purview of s. 16 of the Act. This contention must accordingly be overruled. Finally, it has been argued by the learned Advocate for the appellants in this case that the Civil Court should have suspended all further proceedings in the matter under the provisions of s. 21 (1), Assam Debt Conciliation Act, which is in the following terms :

"When an application has been made to a Board under s. 4, any suit or other proceedings then pending before a Civil Court in respect of any debt for the settlement of which application has been made shall be suspended until the disposal of the application."

It is true that the debt in respect of the decree for Rs. 666 which was obtained on February 7, 1934, was included in the original application to the Debt Conciliation Board, but the order of the Board which was recorded on April 11, 1938, must be regarded as disposing of the application in respect of that particular debt inasmuch as it amounted to a decision that the Board had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter. It therefore follows that the Civil Court was under no obligation to suspend the execution proceedings in connection with that decree after the order of April 11, 1938 had been recorded by the Board. In my view the decision of the lower Appellate Court is correct. I consider that the appellants have failed to show that the application, dated September 13, 1938, was time-barred and it is also clear that the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to deal with this matter has not been curtailed by anything contained in the provisions of the Assam Debt Conciliation Act of 1936. The judgment of the lower Appellate Court is therefore affirmed and this appeal is dismissed with costs. The hearing fee is assessed at 3 gold mohurs.

Civil Revision No. 591 of 1940

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 10, 151, 115—Order under s. 10 refusing stay of subsequent suit pending previous one — Order though not open to revision held could be interfered with under s. 151.

The defendant B did not object to the valuation put by plaintiff A of the suit at Rs. 300 but later on when apparently he thought that he had not raised a defence which might have been of benefit to him he approached another Court over the same subject-matter, put a valuation of Rs. 1,200 and virtually created a situation in which conflicting decisions may be given by two different Courts. The Court in which the subsequent suit was filed by B, refused to stay it under s. 10, Civil P. C., pending the previous suit on the ground that the Court in which the suit was previously instituted by A had no pecuniary jurisdiction to try it :

Held, that the order of the Court under s. 10 refusing to stay subsequent suit was an interlocutory one and it could not be subject of revision. The powers conferred by s. 151, Civil P. C., should not be exercised lightly but the case was eminently one in which they should be exercised in order to avoid "an idle multiplicity of suit" by ordering the subsequent suit to be stayed pending the decision of the previous suit: 93 Ind. Cas. 285 (1), 182 Ind. Cas. 234 (2) and 113 Ind. Cas. 783 (3), referred to.

C. R. from an order of the Sub-Judge, First Class, Peshawar, dated October 26, 1940.

Order.—This is an application for revision of the order of the Sub-Judge, First Class, Peshawar, refusing to stay under s. 10, Civil P. C., a suit pending in his Court. The prayer in revision is that I should make an order staying the suit under the provisions of ss. 10 and 151, Civil P. C. The facts of this case are as follows: On July 5, 1939, Waqf Masjid and Hujra through Ghulam Sarwar Khan brought a suit against Sardar for possession of a house. He alleged that he was the mutwalli of a certain waqf which owned 300 jaribs of land, that in order to arrange for the cultivation of this land he had built the house in suit in 1933-34 and had put the defendant, Sardar, who was cultivating some of the waqf land in possession of the house on condition of his paying Khakshora, Tora and other customary dues, that as Sardar did not cultivate the land in accordance with the plaintiff's wishes, he ejected him from the land in 1937, that he now required possession of the house which Sardar refused to give denying the ownership of the plaintiff. He therefore prayed for possession of the house and for Rs. 100 on account of Khakshora and Tora. He valued the suit at Rs. 300, i. e., Rs. 200 value of the house and Rs. 100 value of the other relief claimed. This case was pending in the Court of the Sub-Judge, Fourth Class, Charsadda. On July 18, 1939, Sardar put in his written statement in which he denied the allegations of the plaintiff and alleged that he had been in possession of the site on which the house is built for more than 12 years, that he had spent a considerable amount of money in filling and levelling the site and had then built a house upon it. He denied that the plaintiff was the owner of the house. He further alleged that he was entitled to improvements and that the suit was time-barred. As regards the valuation of the suit he merely said that the matter was a question of law.

The suit proceeded in that Court and had not yet been decided when on January 15, 1940, Sardar brought a suit against Waqf Masjid and Hujra through Ghulam Sarwar Khan and, secondly, Abdul Hinan. This suit was transferred to the Court of the Sub-Judge, First Class, Peshawar. Sardar sued for a declaration that the house which is admittedly the subject of the first suit was situated in Khasra No. 130 and not in No. 129, that the plaintiff was the owner in possession for 14 years and that defendant No. 1 had no connection with the house. He valued the suit for purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 1,200. In his plaint he alleged that the house in dispute was situated in Khasra No. 130 which he had acquired from defendant No. 2, Abdul Hinan, by an oral exchange more than 12 years ago, that he had subsequently built on the site, that he had spent much money on levelling the site, that as a precaution against any dispute arising between his heirs and Abdul Hinan an exchange deed was written on November 15, 1937 to give effect to this exchange and that a mutation was attested thereon on May 1, 1939. He then referred in paras. 5 and 6 to the suit pending in Charsadda and alleged that defendant No. 1, i. e., Ghulam Sarwar Khan had brought a suit and was trying to prove in that suit that the house was situated in Khasra No. 129 and not in No. 130, that Ghulam Sarwar Khan was making an entirely unjust attempt to get a decree against him and therefore the necessity for a declaratory suit had arisen. The declaration which he asked for was that the house in dispute was situated in Khasra No. 130 and not in Khasra No. 129 and that defendant No. 1 had no connection with it.

In his written statement, the defendant Ghulam Sarwar Khan reiterated the case which he had set up as plaintiff in the Charsadda Court and said that the exchange deed of November 15, 1937, was not really an exchange deed at all but it had been drafted as an exchange deed in order to defeat pre-emptors and that he himself had brought a suit for pre-emption of the land mentioned in that document. He further alleged that the land referred to in that document was not the same as the one which was covered by the house which was in dispute between him and the defendant. He asked that the suit should be stayed under s. 10, Civil P. C. Abdul Hinan was proceeded against ex parte. The Subordinate Judge of the first class, Peshawar issued a commission for the valuation of the house and came to the conclusion in spite of the report of the Commissioner that it was worth Rs. 1,200. He therefore held that he could not stay the suit under s. 10, Civil P. C., as the Court at Charsadda being empowered to hear cases only up to Rs. 1,000 was not a Court which had jurisdiction to grant the relief claimed by Sardar.

In the revision application before me learned Counsel for respondent Sardar has argued that as the order of the trial Court is an interlocutory one, it cannot be subject of revision in view of many rulings of this Court. That contention is undoubtedly correct as it has frequently been held in this Court that no revision application can lie against an interlocutory order. The question is therefore whether I should interfere under the provisions of s. 151, Civil P. C. That course has been taken in circumstances somewhat similar to those of the present case in three cases to which I have been referred by learned Counsel for the petitioner. They are, Harnand Lal v. Chaturbhuj (1), Mehtab Shah v. Ali Haider Shah (2) and Kodu Mal Jethanand v. Tilakram (3). In the first of these cases it was held that the High Court had inherent powers to make an order under s. 151, Civil P. C. In the second case it was held that the High Court could make the order under s. 115, and in the last case reference was merely made to the inherent powers of the Court and its power of superintendence. In my opinion, the present case is clearly one in which the powers conferred by s. 151 should be employed. The subject-matter in the two suits is obviously identical. In the case which was instituted in the first instance Sardar did not object to the valuation of the suit put upon it by Ghulam Sarwar Khan but later when apparently he thought that he had not raised a defence which might have been of benefit to him he approached another Court over the same subject-matter, put a valuation of Rs. 1,000 on to the suit and virtually creates a situation in which conflicting decisions may be given by two different Courts. The powers conferred by s. 151, Civil P. C., should not be exercised lightly but I think the present case is eminently one in which they should be exercised in order to avoid what has been described as "an idle multiplicity of suits." For these reasons I accept this application and under the provisions of s. 151, Civil P. C., direct that the proceedings in the Court of the Sub-Judge, Peshawar, be stayed pending the decision of the suit in the Charsadda Court. The petitioner will have his costs of his application in this Court and Pleader's fee is fixed at Rs. 16.

RANGOON HIGH COURT

First Appeal No. 99 of 1939

April 4, 1940

MYA BU AND MOSELY, JJ.

CHAN WAN HONG TONG—APPELLANT

versus

A. K. A. C. T. V. CHETTYAR—

RESPONDENT

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53—Suit under, impeaching mortgage or sale—Burden to show that they are colourable transactions is on plaintiff—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 101, 114—All evidence on record—Onus is immaterial—Party in possession of important documentary evidence, withholding it—Presumption.

Where a suit is brought under s. 53, T. P. Act, impeaching a mortgage or sale, the burden is on the plaintiff to show that the transaction was only a colourable transaction by proving inadequacy or absence of consideration and other circumstances suggesting that the sale or the mortgage was not meant to be acted upon. 105 Ind. Cas. 788 (1) and 137 Ind. Cas. 879 (2), relied on. [p. 271, col. 2.]

It is academic to argue the question of burden of proof at a stage when all the evidence is on record. [p. 272, col. 1.]

Even if the burden to prove something does not lie on a party, the Court can draw an adverse inference if such party having important documentary evidence in his possession throwing light on the fact withholds it from Court. 39 Ind. Cas. 659 (3), 50 Ind. Cas. 775 (4) and 114 Ind. Cas. 592 (5), relied on.

Mr. Cowasjee, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Clark and P. K. Basu, for the Respondent.

Mosely, J.—In Suit No. 8 of 1934 of the District Court of Pyapon the A. K. A. C. T. V. Chettyar Firm sued Chan Wan Hong Tong, a Chinese merchant, under O. XXI, r. 63, and under s. 53, T. P. Act, for a declaration that certain properties which Maung Sein Done alias Chan Cheing Tong, a Chinaman, purported to have first mortgaged and then sold to Chan Wan Hong Tong were liable to attachment and sale in satisfaction of the Chettyar firm's decree. In Civil Regular Suit No. 10 of 1935 of the same Court Chan Wan Hong Tong sued the Chettyar firm and Maung Sein Done, under s. 77, Regis. Act, to have a sale deed registered. The suits were consolidated and tried together in the suit brought by Chan Wan Hong Tong, who is referred to in the judgment briefly as "the plaintiff." On the date fixed for hearing, Chan Wan Hong Tong's witnesses were ready, but not those for the Chettyar firm, and by consent Chan Wan Hong Tong produced his evidence on all the matters in issue in both suits, though it was for the Chettyar firm in their suit to prove that the transactions which they impugned were, as they alleged, sham or fraudulent or collusive. The attachments made by the Chettyar firm had previously been removed in Civil Miscellaneous No. 19 of 1934 of the District Court. The learned Judge found in the course of detailed and careful judgment that the transactions between Chan Wan Hong Tong and Maung Sein Done were not genuine but only colourable, benami and fraudulent, and that they were void against the creditors of Maung Sein Done. For this reason he refused to direct that the sale deed be registered, thinking it unnecessary to discuss other questions raised in the suit for registration of the sale deed. Civil Regular Suit No. 10 of 1935, was, therefore, dismissed.

Chan Wan Hong Tong has filed two separate appeals against this decree. We are here considering Civil First Appeal No. 99 of 1939, an appeal brought by Chan Wan Hong Tong against the decree in Civil Regular Suit No. 8 of 1934 declaring that the sale was a sham and fraudulent transaction. The properties in question, a house in Pyapon and a single holding measuring 289 odd acres in Pyapon township, were attached by the Chettyar firm on November 29, and December 2, 1933 in Civil Execution Case No. 64 of 1933. One application for removal of the attachment (Civil Miscellaneous No. 58 of 1933) was dismissed as it was not filed by an authorized agent. The Judge's reasons are summed up at pp. 35 and 36 of his judgment. The consideration for the sale deed of May 6, 1932, said to be Rs. 66,255, is said to have been the principal and interest on the deed of mortgage for Rs. 50,000, a duly registered deed of February 27, 1930. The consideration for the mortgage is said to have been the amount due on Ex. W, promissory note for Rs. 50,000 at Re. 1-4-0 per cent, executed on August 1, 1928. Exhibit W again is said to have been the consolidation of the amounts due on two promissory notes, Ex. B of March 5, 1927, for Rs. 30,000 in favour of Shaung Ah Wan Ma which is said to be the Burmese equivalent of Seong Wan, and Ex. C of December 9, 1927 for Rs. 20,000. These again are said to have been renewals of old promissory notes. Exhibit C is said to have been a renewal of Ex. V, promissory notes for Rs. 20,000 at Re. 1-4-0 per cent. of December 12, 1924. It is said that the promissory note of which Ex. B was a renewal is lost.

The main contention in this appeal is that the Judge wrongly put the burden of proof on Chan Wan Hong Tong, and that the evidence on the record did not show that the transaction was a fraudulent or colourable one. The learned Judge found that Ex. V could not have been executed on the date which it bears. The Judge did not believe the evidence as to the execution of Exs. B and C promissory notes, nor the evidence as to their being the consideration for the mortgage deed. The Judge gave reasons for holding that the mortgage deed itself was a sham transaction, and that therefore there was no consideration for the sale. In my opinion, the Judge came to the only possible conclusion on the evidence. I shall therefore review the evidence on those transactions as briefly as possible, but dwell a little on the evidence as to possession after the sale on which less has been said. (After reviewing the evidence His Lordship proceeded.) It has been contended in argument that the Judge constantly referred to Chan Wan Hong Tong as "the plaintiff" throughout the course of his judgment, and it is suggested that the Judge wrongly cast the burden of proof on Chan Wan Hong Tong.

As regards the genuineness of the transactions in question there is nothing to support this line of argument. Chan Wan Hong Tong was referred to as "the plaintiff" merely because he started both cases. The Judge did not say in so many words on what side the burden of proof lay, but he clearly indicated his opinion that the evidence did not merely show that it was not proved that the transactions were genuine. The Judge came to the further conclusion that the evidence was sufficient to show that the transactions were not genuine. The Judge did not have the advantage of hearing the evidence, but I entirely agree with the conclusions which he drew. They were not conjectures founded on mere suspicion; they were reasoned conclusions arising from the evidence in the case. The burden of proof was, of course, initially on the Chettyar firm to show that these transactions were not genuine. It is true that the sale deed had not been properly registered. But when Chan Wan Hong Tong relied on s. 53-A, T. P. Act, to cure that defect it was again for the Chettyar firm to show that the registered mortgage deed was not good consideration for the sale. It was for the Chettyar firm to show that the mortgage was only a colourable transaction by proving inadequacy or absence of consideration and other circumstances suggesting that the sale was not meant to be acted upon: see V. E. A. R. M. Firm v. Maung Ba Kyin (1), at p. 855, a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council. If the defendants put forward a substantial case it was then for the plaintiff to rebut it by proof of the genuine character of the sale. I agree with what was said in Appathurai Chettiar v. Vellayan Chettiar (2), as to the meaning of the above ruling.

In this case the substantive evidence for the defendants showed that Maung Sein Done was heavily embarrassed at the time of the mortgage sued upon, and that he was being pressed for repayment by respondent No. 1 Chettyar, and it also showed that part of the plaintiff's evidence relied upon (Ex. V) was a fabrication. It showed that Ex. W could not have been the consideration for the mortgage deed. The rest of the evidence for the defence consisted of admissions elicited from the plaintiff and his witnesses in cross-examination. It is academic to argue the question of burden of proof at this stage when all the evidence is on record and the plaintiff's evidence itself has shown that the plaintiff's case was a false one.

Much argument has been adduced in an endeavour to say that no presumptions should be drawn from the gaps in the evidence for Chan Wan Hong Tong because the burden was not upon him, and that it was for the defence to show substantively that his case was false. On this I would like to quote some observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Murugesam Pillai v. M. D. Gnana Sambandha Pandara Sanadhi (3) at p. 408 viz. :

"A practice has grown up in Indian procedure of those in possession of important documents or information lying by, trusting to the abstract doctrine of the onus of proof, and failing accordingly to furnish to the Courts the best material for its decision. With regard to third parties, this may be right enough; they have no responsibility for the conduct of the suit; but with regard to the parties to the suit it is, in their Lordships' opinion, an inversion of sound practice for those desiring to rely upon a certain state of facts to withhold from the Court the written evidence in their possession which would throw light upon the proposition. The present is a good instance of this bad practice. It is proved in the case by the first witness that 'the mutt has regular fair day-books; they are not now before the Court; ledgers are also maintained in the mutt.' These ledgers and day-books were in the possession of the defendants or those of them who were heads of the institution, and they are not put in evidence."

This was followed in Guruswami Nadar v. Gopalasami Odayar (4) where the head-note reads :

"Held, that, assuming that the onus of proving the binding nature of the debt lay on the plaintiffs even in the case of a trade carried on as joint family business, it was shifted to the defendants on account of the presumption arising against them by their omission to produce their accounts called for by the plaintiffs, a presumption which arises against them whether the plaintiffs have any evidence or not."

Then in Rameshwar Singh v. Bajit Lal Pathak (5) at p. 99 their Lordships made the following remarks :

"In the change of attitude on the part of the defence and in its failure to produce documents presumably available and probably decisive one way or another if examined, the learned Judges saw a design on the part of the defendant to take advantage of the abstract doctrine of the burden of proof upon a plaintiff in ejectment.

Their Lordships, in agreement with the High Court, consider that the excuses made by the defendant for the non-production of those documents are unsatisfactory, and unreliable, and, like the learned Judges of the High Court, they consider that their non-production is due to the fear that, if produced, they would either establish the plaintiff's claim, or in view of the defendant's admission as to the existence somewhere within the village of three jotes of the plaintiff of the area assigned would lead to a successful claim, albeit in another suit, which would be more serious for the defendant than that made in this suit. Their Lordships would refer to the views of the Board on this subject expressed by Lord Shaw when delivering the judgment of the Board in Murugesam Pillai v. M. D. Gnana Sambandha Pandara Sanadhi (3) and would again endorse them. In their Lordships' judgment the learned Judges of the High Court were well warranted in finding further confirmation of the plaintiff's evidence in the defendant's reticence and inconsistency."

In the present case, Chan Wan Hong Tong failed to produce the accounts of his firm for 1924-32, to show any payments made by him on the promissory notes in question and any repayments towards them. The practice of Chinese firms of keeping and preserving books of account carefully is well known and has been recognized in a pronouncement in a recent case of their Lordships of the Privy Council on appeal from this Court. As their Lordships remarked in another case, Robins v. National Trust Co., Ltd. (6) at p. 520 :

"Onus as a determining factor of the whole case can only arise if the tribunal finds the evidence pro and con so evenly balanced that it can come to no such conclusion. Then the onus will determine the matter. But if the tribunal, after hearing and weighing the evidence, comes to a determinate con-

I have no doubt that the learned Judge of the trial Court came to the proper conclusion when he found that the transactions between Chan Wan Hong Tong's firm and Sein Done were merely sham and collusive. This appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Press (Emergency Powers) Act (XXIII of 1931), s. 4 (1) (a) and (d)—Common sense interpretation must be given to document complained of — Poem entitled "Labourers, the mainstay of the world", urging labourers not to tolerate exploitation of their masters and inciting bloody revolution and destruction of present social order by force—Poem held fell under s. 4 (1), cl. (a) and not under cl. (d).

A common sense interpretation must be given to the document complained of namely, the impression it gives to a man of ordinary common sense. 172 Ind. Cas. 906 (3), relied on. [p. 276, col. 1.]

In order to show that certain words come under s. 4 (1) (a) of the Press (Emergency Powers) Act, it is unnecessary to show that the words tend to incite to, or to encourage the commission of a particular offence or offences. It is sufficient if they tend to incite to or to encourage the commission of cognizable offences of violence in general. [p. 275, col. 2.]

A poem in Hindi was entitled "Labourers—the mainstay of the world." It began emphasising that labourers are the mainstay of the present world and then proceeded to describe their unfortunate and pitiful lot. The author subsequently pointed out that though speechless today, when organized they would be as powerful as millions and this portion of the poem ended with these words: "Why are you helplessly tolerating the exploitation of your masters". The remaining lines were as follows:

"Labourers. Raise now the cry of Revolution.
The heavens will tremble, the Universe
Will shake and the flames of revolution
Will burst forth from land and water. You who have been the object of exploitation,
Now dance the fearful dance of destruction on this earth.

Truly, labourers. Only total destruction will create a new world order and that will bring happiness to the whole world":

Held, that the words "masters or exploiters" are too wide and vague to denote a definite or ascertainable class so as to come within cl. (d) of s. 4 (1) of the Act. 141 Ind. Cas. 780 (1), relied on. [p. 274, col. 2.]

Held, further that the poem contained words tending to incite to or to encourage bloody revolution, and the destruction of the present social order by bloodshed and force and clearly came within s. 4 (1) (a) of the Act. 151 Ind. Cas. 943 (2), distinguished. 172 Ind. Cas. 906 (3), explained. [p. 275, col. 2.]

Messrs. Sarjoo Prasad and Basanta Chandra Ghosh, for the Petitioner.

The Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Harries, C. J.—This is an application under s. 23, Press Act, (Act XXIII of 1931); by: Kumar Badri Narain Singh, the keeper of the Hazara Memorial Press, Gaya, to set aside an order of the Provincial Govt. demanding security of Rs. 1,000 from the applicant as keeper of the said Press. The Provincial Govt. has appeared by the Advocate-General who opposes the application. As required by s. 24, Press Act, this Special Bench has been constituted to hear the application. The applicant was served with a notice under sub-s. (3) of s. 3, Press Act, on December 15, 1939, calling upon him to deposit with the District Magistrate of Gaya on or before January 13, 1940, security to the amount of Rs. 1,000 in money or in Govt. securities. This notice alleges that the Hazara Memorial Press was used for the purpose of printing matter set out in the schedule which was of the nature described in cls. (a) and (d) of sub-s. (1), of s. (4), Press Act. The schedule sets out poems in Hindi published in the "Chingari" dated November 6, November 13, and November 20, 1939, and in the issue of December 4, 1939. It is now conceded that the petitioner was not responsible for the publication of the articles in the month of November 1939, but it is admitted that he was responsible for the publication of the poem in the issue of the "Chingari" of December 4, 1939. The case is, therefore, confined to the poem published in the "Chingari" on December 4, 1939. Section 3 (3), Press Act, 1931, is in these terms:

"Whenever it appears to the Provincial Govt. that any printing press kept in any place in the territories under its administration, in respect of which security under the provisions of this Act has not been required, or having been required has been refunded under sub-s. (2), is used for the purpose of printing or publishing any newspaper, book or other document containing any words, signs or visible representations of the nature described in s. 4, sub-s. (1), the Provincial Govt. may, by notice in writing to the keeper of the press stating or describing such words, signs or visible representations, order the keeper to deposit with the Magistrate within whose jurisdiction the press is situated security to such an amount not being less than five hundred or more than three thousand rupees as the Provincial Govt. may think fit to require, in money or the equivalent thereof in securities of the Central Govt. as the person making the deposit may choose."

Sub-section (4) of this section requires that the notice referred to in s. 3 shall appoint a date, not being sooner than the tenth day after the date of the issue of the notice, on or before which the deposit has to be made. In the present case the petitioner was called upon to make the deposit on or before January 13, 1940. Section 4 (1) of the Act is as follows :

"Whenever it appears to the Provincial Govt. that any printing press in respect of which any security has been ordered to be deposited under s. 3 is used for the purpose of printing or publishing any newspaper, book or other document containing any words, signs or visible representations which—

(a) incite to or encourage, or tend to incite to or to encourage, the commission of any offence of murder or any cognizable offence involving violence, or

or which tend, directly or indirectly :

(d) to bring into hatred or contempt His Majesty or the Govt. established by law in British India or the administration of justice in British India or any class or section of His Majesty's subjects in British India, or to excite disaffection towards His Majesty or the said Govt...."

In the present case the notice alleges that the poem published in the issue of the "Chingari" dated December 4, 1939, contained words falling within cls. (a) and (d) of this section. Section 23 (1) of the Act is in these terms :

"The keeper of a printing press who has been ordered to deposit security under sub-s. (3) of s. 3; or the publisher of a newspaper who has been ordered to deposit security under sub-s. (3) of s. 7, or any person having an interest in any property in respect of which an order of forfeiture has been made under s. 4, s. 6, s. 8, s. 10 or s. 19, may, within two months from the date of such order, apply to the High Court for the local area in which such order was made, to set aside such order, and the High Court shall decide if the newspaper, book or other document in respect of which the order was made did or did not contain any words, signs or visible representations of the nature described in s. 4, sub-s. (1)."

Section 25 provides that if a Special Bench of the High Court constituted under s. 24 is not satisfied that the words contained in the newspaper, book or other document in respect of which the order under s. 4, sub-s. (1), was made, it shall set aside the order. From these sections, it is clear that what the Bench has to decide is whether the poem published in the issue of the "Chingari," dated December 4, 1939, contains words falling within cl. (a) or cl. (d) of s. 4 (1). The poem published on December 4, 1939 is entitled "Labourers—the mainstay of the world." It begins emphasising that labourers are the mainstay of the present world and then proceeds to describe their unfortunate and pitiful lot. When the scorching summer midday sun burns they are found toiling in the open fields and khalihans to provide food for others. They work day and night, still their children are hungry and the labourer has even no clothes to cover the body of his young wife. On the other hand, the masters are enjoying the fruits of their labour. This portion of the poem ends with the words; "O! helpless and poor labourers." The tone of the poem then suddenly changes and the author points out that so far from being helpless the labourers are all powerful and are the life and soul of the universe. Though speechless to-day, when organized they will be as powerful as millions and this portion of the poem ends with these words: "Why are you helplessly tolerating the exploitation of your masters?" Up to this, the poem contains no matter which can possibly be suggested to fall within cls. (a) and (d) of s. 4 (1), Press Act. It is, however, contended that the remainder of the poem does contain such matter. The remaining lines are as follows :

"Labourers. Raise now the cry of Revolution.
The heavens will tremble, the Universe
Will shake and the flames of revolution
Will burst forth from land and water. You who have been the object of exploitation,
Now dance the fearful dance of destruction on this earth

Truly, labourers. Only total destruction will create a new world order and that will bring happiness to the whole world."

On behalf of the Provincial Govt. it has been contended that this portion of the poem does contain words which incite to or encourage, or tend to incite to or to encourage, the commission of murder or cognizable offence involving violence. It is further contended that the words tend, directly or indirectly, to bring into hatred or contempt a class or section of His Majesty's subjects in British India, namely the masters or exploiters. In my judgment, it cannot be said that these words tend to bring into hatred or contempt any class or section of His Majesty's subjects. The words "masters or exploiters" are too wide and vague to denote a definite or ascertainable class so as to come within cl. (d) of s. 4 (1) of the Act: see Maniban Liladhar Kara v. Emperor (1). The Advocate-General very properly conceded that he could not seriously contend that the poem complained of came within the mischief of s. 4 (1) (d) of the Act.

The question however remains whether the poem contains words falling within s. 4 (1) (a) of the Act.

The concluding portion of the poem begins with the words "Labourers. Raise now the cry of Revolution," and these words may in themselves well suggest violence. Mr. Sarjoo Prasad who appeared on behalf of the petitioner contended however that "revolution" does not necessarily involve either violence or bloodshed. A revolution may be a bloodless and a peaceful one, and he has contended that such is the revolution contemplated by the author of this poem. It is urged that all the words amount to is an exhortation to the labourers to bring about a change in the social order by legitimate, constitutional and peaceful means. It appears to me however that if that was the object of the author of this poem, then he had used language singularly inappropriate for his purpose. He urges the labourers to raise the cry of revolution, and the consequence of that cry would be that the heavens would tremble, the universe would shake and the flames of revolution would burst forth from land and water. Mr. Sarjoo Prasad has strenuously urged that the Court must permit considerable poetic license in poems of this kind; but it is to be observed that the imagery employed by the poet in this part of the poem is not the imagery of peace or constitutional change but the imagery of terrible violence. The revolution is likened to an earthquake causing the heavens to tremble and the universe to shake and it is then likened to an eruption causing the flames of revolution to burst forth from land and water. The revolution contemplated by the poet is clearly revolution through violence. The poet then urges the labourers who have been the object of exploitation to dance the fearful dance of destruction on this earth and then concludes by pointing out that total destruction alone would create the new world order which will bring happiness to the labourers. If the revolution contemplated was a peaceful bloodless one, why call upon the labourers to dance the fearful dance of destruction and insist that total destruction alone must precede the new world order? This is obviously an exhortation to the labourers to destroy the existing social order and to destroy it by force and violence. Then and only then will a new world order be possible and happiness for the toiling masses achieved.

Mr. Sarjoo Prasad then contended that even if this portion of the poem contained words tending to incite to or to encourage bloody revolution such would not be words within s. 4 (1) (a) of the Act. His contention was that words tending to incite to or encourage general violence were not sufficient to come within the mischief of s. 4 (1) (a). The words used must tend to incite to or to encourage the commission of some specific crime such as murder or a particular cognizable offence involving violence. In my judgment, words tending to, incite to or to encourage bloody revolution and the destruction of the present social order by bloodshed and force clearly come within s. 4 (1) (a) of the Act. Bloody revolution and forcible and violent destruction of the present social order involve all kinds of cognizable offences involving violence and would in all probability involve murder. In my view it is unnecessary to show that the words tend to incite to, or to encourage the commission of a particular offence or offences. It is sufficient if they tend to incite to or to encourage the commission of cognizable offences of violence in general. To accept Mr. Sarjoo Prasad's contention would be to hold that the greater does not include the less. Great stress was laid by Counsel for the applicant on the case in Des Raj v. Emperor (2), in which a Bench of that Court held that a revolution did not necessarily imply violence and commission of cognizable offences involving violence. In that case Des Raj was responsible for the publication of a poster the headline of which contained the words "Long, Long live Revolution." The poster in question was a mere announcement that it was intended to publish and circulate a series of pamphlets under the headings "Thoughts of Young men, their Ideas and Aspirations" containing the views of young men on all topics of the day, the movements in the country and the forces working behind them. It was contended that the use of the words "Long long live Revolution" brought the poster within the mischief of s. 4 (1) (a), Press Act, 1931. The Bench, however, held that there was nothing in the poster to bring it within the provisions of that section. At p. 266* Agha Haider, J., observed :

"It is true that the heading itself contains the word 'revolution,' but revolution, even in political matters need not necessarily be accompanied by bloodshed. A revolution may be absolutely bloodless and peaceful and there is no reason why we should assume that in the present case the revolution intended by the maker of the leaflet was a sanguinary or a violent revolution."

At p. 268* Tek Chand, J., observed :

"The headline of the poster however contains the words 'Long Long Live Revolution' and the learned Sessions Judge has held that this heading 'can be regarded as tending to incite to, or encourage, the commission of a cognizable offence involving violence.' It is however a matter of common notoriety that this slogan, whatever its original significance might have been, has now come to be used indiscriminately by all those who aim at bringing about a marked change in the Govt. of the country, by any means whatever, violent or non-violent, constitutional or otherwise. The mere use of these words, without more cannot therefore lead to the conclusion that it was intended to produce literature advocating violence. Moreover in this case such an assumption is clearly negatived by the contents of the poster itself which says that the pamphlets, which it is proposed to publish and circulate, will contain the views of young men on 'all topics of the day and the movements in the country and the forces behind them'."

In my judgment this Lahore case is clearly distinguishable from the case which I have to consider. There was nothing in the poster beyond the heading which tended to incite to, or encourage any form of revolution, and there was nothing to suggest that the "revolution" there referred to was anything more than a peaceful bloodless one. In fact, the contents of the poster strongly suggested that the publisher had in mind only peaceful bloodless change. In the present case however the "revolution" referred to is clearly a violent and terrible one, and those who are urged to bring it about are urged to dance the fearful dance of destruction and cause total destruction of the existing order. The readers are not urged to bring about a change but destroy the existing order so that a new order may arise from the ashes of the old world. Reliance was also placed by Counsel for the petitioner on the case in Kamal Sirkar (Ajit Ghose) v. Emperor (3), but in my view that case can be of no assistance to the petitioner. The point at issue in that case was whether a certain poster fell within mischief of cls. (d) and (f) of s. 4 (1), Press Act, 1931. Biswas, J., held that in dealing with such a poster containing a caricature or cartoon, the common sense interpretation of such a document, namely the impression it gives to a man of ordinary common sense must be taken. The learned Judge pointed out that "it is worse than useless to try to extract a meaning out of it by a laboured commentary." I respectfully agree with the statement of the learned Judge that a common sense interpretation must be given to the document complained of. The question to be answered always is, what impression will the document or words give to a man of ordinary common sense? That question in my view, admits only of one answer in the present case. A man of ordinary common sense reading the poem complained of in this case would be bound to conclude that bloody and fearful revolution was the only panacea for the ills of the exploited labourers. He would be bound to regard the poem as an exhortation to the labourers to arise and to destroy the existing order by force and by the commission of violent crime. That being so, the Provincial Govt. were entitled to call upon the applicant as keeper of the Hazara Memorial Press, Gaya, to furnish security under s. 3 (3), Press Act, and that being so, this application must fail. I would therefore dismiss the application.

Dhavlé, J.—I agree. How little the last stanza with the flames of revolution that are to burst forth from land and water, and the terrible dance (karal tandab) that is to be danced upon the glory of this world (is jaga bhaibhab par) is meant to inculcate peaceful operations is clear from the summing up in the concluding lines in which it is emphatically asserted that total destruction alone will introduce a new order which will be full of happiness; and it is noticeable that sarbanas, the expression for "total destruction," is so simple that nobody who knows the language will have the smallest difficulty in understanding it.

Manohar Lall, J.—I agree with the exhaustive analysis made by my Lord, the Chief Justice, of the poem in the 'Chingari' and would dismiss this application.

The Legislature, added the word "passed" in the new s. 73 in order to make it clear that the words "against the same judgment-debtor" had reference to the decrees themselves, and not to the various applications for execution contemplated by the section. [p. 284, col. 1.]

Per Iqbal Ahmed and Verma, JJ., Bajpai, J. dissenting.—The expression "passed against the same judgment-debtor" in s. 73 must be liberally construed. The object of s. 73 being to provide for rateable distribution of assets upon which two or more decree-holders have equal claims, the words "passed against the same judgment-debtor" must, be interpreted as referring more to the property which a judgment-debtor represents "than to the person against whom execution has been sought. [p. 284, col. 2.]

Where therefore, a decree for certain amount has been obtained by X against Y on a pro-note executed by Y and on the death of Y one A obtains a money decree against Y's son Z personally and against the assets of Y in the hands of Z and C the sons of Y on the basis of a promissory note executed by Y and Z, the decrees obtained by X and A are against the same judgment-debtor and s. 73 applies. 184 Ind. Cas. 589 (10), Overruled.

[Case-law discussed.]

Per Bajpai, J.—The personality, the character and the capacity of the judgment-debtor should not be ignored and undue preference should not be given to the property from which the assets are realized. The decree-holders must have obtained their decrees against the same persons and it may become a matter of no importance that by reason of the death of the judgment-debtor in one decree the property that can be seized in execution in both the decrees happens to be the same. If the two decrees are not against the same person s. 73 would not be applicable. [p. 290, col. 1.]

The object underlying the enactment of s. 73, Civil P. C., was to prevent multiplicity of execution proceedings while at the same time ensuring equitable distribution of assets between various decree-holders who had the right to have their decrees satisfied out of these assets. Bithal Das v. Nand Kishore (1), relied on. [p. 278, col. 2.]

Section 73 enacts a mere rule of procedure and not a rule of substantive law. It merely enacts a rule by which decree-holders, in specified cases, can resort to a cheap and speedy procedure for the realization of their decrees. It does not, however, clothe a decree-holder with a right which he does not possess. It does not enlarge the rights given to a decree-holder by his decree, nor does it cut down the rights to which a decree-holder may be entitled by the decree in his favour. Section 73 cannot therefore be invoked to entitle a decree-holder to satisfy his decree from assets which he could not touch if s. 73 was not on the statute book. Conversely the provisions of s. 73 cannot be utilized to deprive a decree-holder from satisfying his decree from assets which he would have been otherwise entitled to follow in execution. [p. 282, col. 1.]

When the phraseology of an enactment is clear and unambiguous and capable of one and only one interpretation, it is not open to the Courts to give a go-by to that interpretation simply with a view to carry out what is supposed to be the intention of the Legislature. But if the phraseology used is capable of two interpretations, that interpretation which is consistent with the object of the enactment is to be preferred to the interpretation that would nullify that object. Observations of Walsh, J. in 84 Ind. Cas. 749, relied on. [p. 278, col. 2.]

S. A. from the decision of the Civil Judge, Aligarh, dated July 29, 1937.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Appellant.

Messrs. P. L. Banerji and S. B. L. Gour, for the Respondents.

Iqbal Ahmad, J.—The question for consideration in the present appeal is as to what is the true interpretation of the words "decrees for the payment of money passed against the same judgment-debtor" in s. 73 (1), Civil P. C., and on the answer to that question depends the fate of this appeal. The facts that have given rise to the question are undisputed and are as follows: Hoti Lal plaintiff-appellant obtained a simple money decree (No. 59 of 1930) against one Bishambhar Sahai on the basis of a promissory note executed by Bishambhar Sahai. Bishambhar Sahai died after the passing of the decree and, then, his sons Navin Chandra and Abinash Chandra were brought upon the record as his legal representatives, and certain properties of Bishambhar Sahai were attached in execution of the decree. Makhan Lal, the ancestor of the contesting defendant-respondents, also held a promissory note executed by Bishambhar Sahai and Navin Chandra and, after the death of Bishambhar Sahai, he put that promissory note into suit impleading Navin Chandra and Abinash Chandra as defendants. Makhan Lal's suit was decreed and a decree (No. 620 of 1931) was passed in his favour against Navin Chandra personally and against the assets of Bishambhar Sahai in the hands of Navin Chandra and Abinash Chandra. Makhan Lal put his decree in execution and got some of the properties already attached by Hoti Lal sold. One of the items of the attached properties was sold and purchased by one Reoti Prasad for Rs. 1,325 and another item of the attached properties was sold and purchased by Makhan Lal himself for Rs. 1,415. It appears that Makhan Lal took the sum of Rs. 1,325 from Court on October 26, 1932, and filed a receipt for Rs. 1,415 in respect of the property purchased by him on March 29, 1932.

Hoti Lal applied for rateable distribution of the two amounts, but the execution Court disallowed his application on August 25, 1934. Hoti Lal then brought the suit giving rise to the present appeal in accordance with the provisions of s. 73 (2), Civil P. C. Both the Courts below dismissed the suit holding that, though the other requisites of s. 73 (1) were satisfied, Hoti Lal was not entitled to a decree for rateable distribution as the two decrees, viz., decrees Nos. 59 of 1930 and 620 of 1931, were not "passed against the same judgment-debtor" within the meaning of s. 73, Civil P. C. By the present appeal the decisions of the Courts below are assailed and it is maintained that, in the circumstances of the present case, Hoti Lal was entitled to a rateable share out of the amounts fetched at the auction sale. The relevant portion of s. 73 (1), Civil P. C., reads as follows :

"Where assets are held by a Court and more persons than one have, before the receipt of such assets, made application to the Court for the execution of the decrees for the payment of money passed against the same judgment-debtor and have not obtained satisfaction thereof, the assets, after deducting the costs of realization, shall be rateably distributed among all such persons."

Section 73 (1) of the present Code corresponds to s. 295 of the Code of 1882 and the relevant portion of s. 295 was as follows :

"Wherever assets are realized by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree, and more persons than one have, prior to the realization, applied to the Court (by which such assets are held) for execution of decrees for money against the same judgment-debtor, and have not obtained satisfaction thereof, the assets, after deducting the costs of (the) realization, shall be divided rateably among all such persons".

It would be noted that the word "passed" that has been introduced in the present Code between the words "for the payment of money" and the words "against the same judgment-debtor" did not find a place in the former Code, and it has to be considered as to what is the effect of the addition of the word "passed" in s. 73 of the present Code. There is sharp conflict of judicial opinion about the interpretation of the words "the same judgment-debtor" and, broadly speaking, one view is that a strict literal construction ought to be put on these words, whereas the other view is that these words ought to be liberally construed keeping in view the object with which the section was enacted. While it may be conceded that much can be said in favour of either view, I, for reasons to be presently stated, prefer the latter view. By ss. 270 and 271 of the Code of 1859, which corresponded to the present s. 73, the decree-holder who first attached the property had the right to have his decree satisfied in full out of the sale proceeds to the exclusion of the other decree-holders and the surplus that remained was to be rateably distributed "amongst any other persons who prior to the order for such distribution may have taken out execution of decree against the same defendant and not obtained satisfaction thereof."

This statutory priority given to the first attaching creditor led to scrambles among attaching decree-holders and, with a view to put an end to the same, these sections were changed by the Codes of 1877 and 1882 so as to place all decree-holders on an equal footing regardless of any priority in attachment or of the application for rateable distribution. These legislative changes demonstrate that the object underlying the enactment of s. 73 was to prevent multiplicity of execution proceedings while at the same time ensuring equitable distribution of assets between various decree-holders who had the right to have their decrees satisfied out of these assets. The objects of s. 73 were thus summarized by Strachey, C. J., in Bithal Das v. Nand Kishore (1) at p. 110 :

"Now the object of the section is two-fold. The first object is to prevent unnecessary multiplicity of execution proceedings, to obviate in a case where there are many decree-holders, each competent to execute his decree by attachment and sale of a particular property, the necessity of each and every one separately attaching and separately selling that property. The other object is to secure an equitable administration of the property by placing all the decree-holders in the position I have described upon the same footing and making the property rateably divisible among them, instead of allowing one to exclude all the others merely because he happened to be the first who had attached and sold the property."

While it is a recognized canon of construction that the words used in a statute should be given their natural and ordinary meaning, it is also well settled that

"unless it is very clear that violence would be done to the language of the Act by adopting any other construction, any great inconvenience which might result from that suggested may certainly afford fair ground for supposing that it could not be what was contemplated by the Legislature, and will warrant the Court in looking for some other interpretation."

vide Broom's Legal Maxims, Edn. 8, pp. 150 and 151. In the construction of statutes one must therefore primarily adhere to the strict literal interpretation of the words used but if such adherence is destructive of the object of the enactment and leads to anomalies and absurdities, it is fair to assume that the Legislature did not intend to use the words in that sense, and in such a case a liberal interpretation that is consistent with the object of the enactment is to be preferred, provided no violence is done to the words used by the Legislature. In other words, when the phraseology of an enactment is clear and unambiguous and capable of one and only one interpretation, it is not open to the Courts to give a go-by to that interpretation simply with a view to carry out what is supposed to be the intention of the Legislature. But if the phraseology used is capable of two interpretations, that interpretation which is consistent with the object of the enactment is to be preferred to the interpretation that would nullify that object. As was observed by Walsh, J. in the Full Bench decision in Mubarak Husain v. Ahmad (2) :

"Where a section, or an Act, is capable of two renderings or is said to mean less, or more than it says, it is a maxim of interpretation that one must look at the scope and object of the enactment. For this purpose it is helpful to recall the history."

In short though a Court cannot, while interpreting a statute, assume the functions of the Legislature to legislate, it is nevertheless its duty to put a common sense interpretation on statutory enactments in preference to a literal interpretation that is destructive of the object of the enactment. In the light of the principles formulated above, I proceed with the discussion of the question under consideration. To begin with it would be convenient to notice the cases in which a strict literal construction, or what has been characterized as the "eo nomine construction," has been put on the expression "the same judgment-debtor." In Hart v. Tara Prasanna (3) it was argued that decrees against a defendant personally, and against the same defendant in a representative capacity, were not decrees "against the same judgment-debtor" within the meaning of s. 295 of the Code of 1882, and the learned Judge, while pointing out that the question did not arise for decision in the case, observed that, if they had to decide the point, they would have held that the decrees were "against the same judgment-debtor".

The facts in Govind Abaji v. Mohoniraj Vinayak (4) were identical with the facts of the present case. In that case M obtained a money decree against B. B died after the passing of the decree and B's son K was brought on the record as B's legal representative and the property of B was then attached and sold in execution. In the meantime one G had obtained a decree against "B, deceased, by his son K and against the estate of B deceased"; and G applied under s. 295 to share rateably in the proceeds of the sale in execution of the other decree. The application of G was refused on the ground that the two decrees were not "against the same judgment-debtor." Jenkins, C. J. observed that "it is useless to speculate as to any other test than that which the section itself provides, and that test is stated in the plainest terms. So far as the present case goes, it is enough to say that the money decrees must be against the same judgment-debtor. Here, however, one decree is against B and the other decree is against his son K."

It is true that the second decree is expressed to be against B, deceased, by his son K; but this incorrect mode of expression can make no difference..... It is so obvious that one hesitates to make the remark, but it is the fact that a dead man cannot be a party to a suit. It cannot too, in this case, make any difference that the decree is expressed further to be 'against the deceased's estate': that does not make B a judgmentdebtor in respect of a decree in a suit commenced after his death."

Chandavarkar, J. also, after pointing out that as one decree was against B and the other was against B's legal representative, held that "it cannot be said, therefore, looking to the names of the parties, that the two decrees are against the same judgment-debtor."

He further observed that :

"It is true that the estate that is liable in the case of both the decrees is the estate of the deceased B, but s. 295 does not make the nature of the liability under the decrees contemplated by it one of the essential conditions for the application of the section."

In short, he decided that a decree against B while he is alive and a decree against K after B's death as B's legal representative, are not against one and the same judgment-debtor. The decision in Govind Abaji v. Mohoniraj Vinayak (4), was followed in Sirinivasa Aiyangar v. Kanthimathi Ammal (5). In the Madras case A obtained a decree against one M and after M's death B obtained a decree against the legal representatives of M and his estate in their hands. B applied under s. 295, Civil P. C., to share rateably in the proceeds of property sold in execution of A's decree. B's application was rejected on the ground that the two decrees were not "against the same judgment-debtor" and it was observed that the fact that the two decrees are to be realized out of the property of M, "is not decisive of the question against whom the decrees are made." The decision proceeded on the ground that whereas one decree was against M the other decree was against M's legal representatives, and, as such, there was not identity of judgment-debtors in the two decrees. It would be noted that the facts of this case were also on all fours with the facts of the case before us. The decision in Govind Abaji v. Mohoniraj Vinayak (4) was further followed by Rankin, C. J. in Jahar Lal v. Lalita Sundari (6), and it was held that the undoubted requirement of s. 73, a requirement which must be satisfied before a person is entitled to a rateable distribution, is that the two decrees must have been passed against the same judgment-debtor. The last mentioned decision was followed in Hemlata Dasi v. Bengal Coal Co. Ltd. (7), and it was held that "for purposes of rateable distribution the executing Court must take the decrees as they are," and that if in the decrees the judgment-debtors are not identical rateable distribution cannot be allowed. To the same effect is the decision in Hemendra Nath v. East Bengal Commercial Bank (8). In that case one decree was against "A, B, C and D" in their capacity as the legal representatives of their father and the other decree was against A, B, C and D personally and it was held by Nasim Ali and Henderson, JJ. that the decrees were against the same judgment-debtors and rateable distribution should be ordered. The argument, that if one decree is against a man as legal representative of a deceased person and the other decree is against him in his personal capacity, the two decrees are not "against the same judgment-debtor" within the meaning of s. 73, was repelled by the learned Judges and they observed that the introduction of the word "passed" in s. 73 puts it beyond doubt that the decree should have been passed "against the same judgment-debtor" and held that this test was satisfied in the case before them.

The matter was again considered by the Bombay High Court in Chunilal Rai Chand v. Broach Urban Co-operative Bank Ltd. (9), and the earlier decision of the same Court in Govind Abaji v. Mohoniraj Vinayak (4), was followed, and a recent Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court, to be referred to hereafter, was dissented from. The learned Judges held that where one decree is against a certain person and another decree is against his legal representative on such person's death, the two decrees cannot be said to be "against the same judgment-debtor," notwithstanding the fact that both the decrees are ultimately founded on a liability resting upon the deceased. In this case also the facts were identical with the facts of the case before us, and the identity of the names of the judgment-debtors was held to be the decisive factor in the decision of the question as to whether the decrees were or were not "against the same judgment-debtor" within the meaning of s. 73, Civil P. C. Lastly there is the decision in Lal Singh Nayal v. Jiwanand (10), by a learned Judge of this Court. It was held in this case that a money decree obtained against the father of a joint family and a decree obtained after his death against his sons upon a promissory note executed by them in respect of a debt due from their father are not decrees passed against the same judgment-debtor. The facts of this case were also very similar to the facts of the case before us, and the learned Judge, who decided the case, was of the opinion that, as the names of the judgment-debtors as they appeared in the two decrees were not identical, the decrees were not "passed against the same judgment-debtor" and, as such, s. 73 had no application to the case.

It will be observed that in all the cases referred to above, it was held that, in order to decide whether the decrees were "against the same judgment-debtor," one has to look only to the names of the judgment-debtors, as they appear in the decree. In other words, identity of names was held to be the decisive test, irrespective of the capacity in which decrees were passed against a particular individual and, irrespective of the property which could be proceeded against in execution of one decree or the other. A diametrically opposite view was, however, taken by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Rama Krishna Chettiar v. Kasi Vishwanathan Chettiar (11). In that case V obtained a simple money decree against P and after P's death, his two sons were brought on the record as his legal representatives, and the family properties were sold in execution, and the sale proceeds were in the custody of the executing Court. In the meantime, after P's death, R had obtained a decree against P's sons as against P's estate in respect of debts contracted by P and had applied for execution of the decree. After the execution sale, R applied for rateable distribution and his application was ultimately allowed by the High Court. Pandrang Row, J., who delivered the main judgment in the case, after noticing some of the cases referred to above observed as follows:

"It would therefore seem that the eo nomine construction cannot be the right one, and that the expression 'the same judgment-debtor' is not so simple and clear in its meaning as to dispense with any reference to the general intention of the section in which it is found. About that intention there can be no doubt; and a construction which defeats that intention no less than the ends of justice should be avoided if the provisions of law are to be interpreted in a reasonable manner. The weight of authority appears to be in favour of the more liberal construction of the expression, the same judgment-debtor, and I would therefore accept that construction and hold that the petitioners in these petitions are entitled to rateable distribution."

Cornish, J., who delivered a separate but concurring judgment made the observation:

"There is, in my judgment, nothing illogical in describing as 'the same judgment-debtor' the legal representative against whom a decree has been passed in respect of a claim against the deceased and the deceased person against whom a decree was passed in his lifetime but which is sought to be executed against his legal representative."

Beasley, C. J. agreed with the conclusions arrived at by the two learned Judges. It would be observed that the facts of this case were identical with the facts of the case before us. This Full Bench decision was followed in Swaminatha Aiyar v. Saivu Rowathan (12) and Palaniappa Chettiar v. Palani Goundan (13). In the three cases just mentioned, a liberal construction, as opposed to a literal one, was put on the expression "the same judgment-debtor," and rateable distribution was allowed mainly because the decrees were executable "against the same properties," even though the names of the judgment-debtors as they appeared in the decrees were not identical. In other words, the identity of the properties which could be proceeded against in execution of the decrees, and not the identity of the names of the judgment-debtors, was held to be the criterion for the application of s. 73 (1) of the Code. In these cases the Courts did not stop short of at a mere ascertainment of the names of the defendants as they appeared in the decrees, but proceeded further with the enquiry as to the capacity in which the decrees were passed against those defendants. This enquiry was solely with the object of determining as to whether the decrees could or could not be realized by attachment and sale of identical properties. If they could, the decrees were held to be "against the same judgment-debtor." If they could not, s. 73 was held to be inapplicable.

There are numerous judicial decisions in which the capacity in which a defendant was sued, or the capacity in which execution was levied against him, was held to be an infallible guide for the determination of the applicability or otherwise of s. 73. In Bhola Nath v. Maqbul-un-nissa (14), a Muhammadan widow obtained against the other heir of her deceased husband a decree for her dower payable out of the estate of the deceased, and in execution thereof attached certain property of the deceased in the hands of the heir. A creditor of the heir, having obtained a money decree against the heir for his personal debt, subsequently attached the same property in execution of that decree, and the question arose whether the creditor of the heir was entitled to the benefit of the provisions of s. 295 of the Code of 1882. This question was answered in the negative. It was held that as the decree obtained by the widow was against the heir as representative of her deceased husband, while the decree obtained by the creditor was against the heir in his personal capacity, the two decrees were not "in fact" obtained against "the same judgment-debtor". The fact that the property attached by the widow was an asset of the deceased husband, and, as such was primarily liable to satisfy the claims against the deceased in preference to a claim against the heir personally was emphasized to support the conclusion noted above.

To the same effect is the decision of the Lower Burma Chief Court in Toola Ram v. Abdul Ghafoor, 24 Ind. Cas. 476 (15). It was held in that case that s. 73 of the Code cannot be invoked unless the judgment-debtor occupies the same character in each decree. The same is an authority for the proposition that where there is a decree against a judgment-debtor personally and another against him as heir, he is not the same judgment-debtor in the two decrees within the meaning of s. 73. In Balmer Lawrie & Co. v. Jadunath Banerji (16), the contest was between two decree-holders one of whom had obtained a money decree personally against M and the other had obtained a money decree against a firm of which M was a partner. It was held that s. 73 was not applicable as the decree against the firm was not capable of execution against M "individually". Again, in Nilmoni Dey v. Hira Lal Das (17) the capacity in which the decrees were obtained against the defendants and the estate that could be proceeded against in execution of those decrees was held to be the test for the decision of the question under consideration. In that case a testator appointed A, B and C as executors to his will. X, a creditor, instituted a suit against A and B only for recovery of his dues from the estate of the deceased testator and obtained a decree. A, one of the executants, who was himself a creditor of the estate, also obtained a decree against B and C for recovery of his dues. A put his decree in execution and certain assets came to be held by the Court. X applied for rateable distribution and his application was allowed, notwithstanding the fact that one decree was against A and B and the other decree was against B and C. It was held that, as each decree was prima facie capable of execution against the estate of the deceased testator :

"the two decrees may without unduly straining the language of s. 73, be regarded as passed against the same judgment-debtor, namely, they are both decrees against the estate of the testator, in one case represented by A and B, in the other case by B and C."

The learned Judges further observed in that case that they were "not disposed to put a narrow construction upon the terms of s. 73, so as to defeat the ends of justice."

Similar view prevailed in Munshi Lal v. Amir Mirza Beg (18). In that case the fact that one decree was against an heir in his representative capacity and the other decree was against that heir in his personal capacity was held sufficient to preclude the application of s. 73, as the two decrees could not be said to be against "the same judgment-debtor". Now, apart from the question as to whether a literal or liberal interpretation is to be put on the expression "passed against the same judgment-debtor," it cannot be disputed that s. 73 enacts a mere rule of procedure and not a rule of substantive law. It merely enacts a rule by which decree-holders, in specified cases, can resort to a cheap and speedy procedure for the realization of their decrees. It does not, however, clothe a decree-holder with a right which he does not possess. It does not enlarge the rights given to a decree-holder by his decree, nor does it cut down the rights to which a decree-holder may be entitled by the decree in his favour. It follows that s. 73 cannot be invoked to entitle a decree-holder to satisfy his decree from assets which he could not touch if s. 73 was not on the statute book. Conversely the provisions of s. 73 cannot be utilized to deprive a decree-holder from satisfying his decree from assets which he would have been otherwise entitled to follow in execution.

If the strict literal interpretation that was accepted in the cases noticed in the earlier portion of this judgment is to be adopted, the inevitable result, in most cases, would be to entitle decree-holders to realize their decrees from properties against which, but for s. 73, they could not have proceeded in execution, or to disentitle them to realize their decrees from properties from which, but for s. 73, they could have satisfied their decrees. That this is so, may be illustrated by a few examples. Take the following case: A obtains a money decree against X, (a Muslim) for X's personal debts. B also obtains a money decree against X in his capacity as legal representative of his (X's) father as against the assets of the father in respect of a loan advanced to the father. A executes his decree by attaching and selling the personal properties of X and not the properties inherited by him from his father. According to the eo nomine construction of s. 73, B would be entitled to claim rateable distribution as X was the judgment-debtor in both the decrees. Such a result could not, however, have been in the contemplation of the Legislature, for the simple reason that B's decree against X could be realized only from the assets of the father in X's hands and not from properties that X had not inherited from his father. Or take the converse case. B puts his decree in execution by selling the property of the father in X's hands and the amount fetched at the auction sale is just sufficient to satisfy B's decree. According to the eo nomine construction, A would be entitled to claim rateable distribution with the necessary result that B's decree will remain unsatisfied in part. It is manifest that, apart from the provisions of s. 73, A, in the given case, would not have been entitled to realize his decree from the properties of the father when the value of those properties did not exceed the liabilities of the father.

Again take another case. A files a money suit against X. B also filed a money suit against X. A obtains a decree against X in his lifetime. X, however, dies before the decision of B's suit, and Y, the son of X, is brought on the record as the legal representative of X, B's suit is then decreed against Y, the decree being realizable from the assets of X in Y's hands. Thereafter, A executes his decree by attaching X's properties in Y's hands. According to the strict literal interpretation of s. 73, B would not be entitled to claim rateable distribution as the names of the judgment-debtors as they appeared in the two decrees were not identical. It is needless to observe that nothing would have been farther from the intention of the Legislature than to enact a rule of procedure that was calculated to lead to such startling results. Both A and B were the creditors of X and had therefore the right to realize their debts from X's properties, and the mere accident of X dying before the decision of B's suit could not nullify the right of B to realize the debts due to him from X's properties.

Take a third case; A, a Hindu, is indebted to B and C. A dies leaving a son X. B sues X for the recovery of the debt due to him and obtains a decree against the assets of A in X's hands. Then X also dies leaving a son Y. C brings a suit against Y and obtains a decree against the assets of A in Y's hands.

B thereafter puts his decree in execution by attaching and selling all the properties left by A and the amount realized at the auction sale is just enough to satisfy B's decree. According to the eo nomine construction, C will not be entitled to claim rateable distribution, and thus the entire assets of A will be realized by B and his decree will be satisfied in full, whereas C will be deprived of the fruits of his decree in its entirety. It is manifest that, but for s. 73, C would have been entitled to share with B the assets of A, and I find it impossible to hold that the Legislature could have intended to adversely affect this manifest right of C by enacting s. 73.

When, in the course of arguments, I put these illustrations to Mr. P. L. Banerji, the learned Counsel for the respondents, he conceded that departure from strict literal interpretation of the words "passed against the same judgment-debtor" may be permissible in certain cases to avoid these anomalies. But in this connection he advocated the following propositions: (1) In the case of identity of names of the judgment-debts in the decree, it is open to interpret the decrees in order to find out whether they are in fact not against the same judgment-debtor, but (2) when the names of the judgment-debtors are not identical, it is not open to interpret the decrees to find out whether in fact the decrees were against the same person. In short, it is not controverted that, though the same defendant may, by name, figure as a judgment-debtor in two decrees, it is open to the Court to enquire into the capacities in which that defendant was sued with a view to find out whether the decrees are not in fact "against the same judgment-debtor." In other words, in such cases, it is not the mere form but the substance of the decrees that is decisive of the question whether they are or are not against the same judgment-debtor. That being so, it passed my comprehension as to why, in cases where the names of the judgment-debtors are not identical, the Court is precluded from looking into the real nature of the decrees with a view to ascertain whether, in fact and in substance, those decrees are against the same judgment-debtor.

To put the matter in another way. It is admitted on all hands that in the case of the identity of names of the judgment-debtors it is open to the Courts to interpret the decrees with a view to discover whether they are not against the same judgment-debtor. In such a case it is admitted that departure from a strict literal interpretation of the words used is permissible. Why then, in the converse case, viz., in a case in which there is not the identity of names of defendants in the decrees, an examination of the substance of the decrees with a view to ascertain their real character should be barred is not explained. I am alive to the fact that the validity of a proposition does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that the converse of that proposition must also be valid. It is, for instance, correct to say that gold glitters. But it is equally manifest that it is incorrect to say that all that glitters is gold. In the question under discussion, however, it is not the validity of two propositions, one converse to the other; that is under consideration. On the other hand the sole question for decision is whether the words "against the same judgment-debtor" are or are not to be literally construed. If they are to be so constructed in one set of cases they must be similarly construed in another, even though diametrically opposite, set of cases.

It cannot be denied that a strict literal construction of the expression "the same judgment-debtor" has not been adopted in at least two classes of cases. In a series of cases it has been held that it is not necessary that all the judgment-debtors in each of the several decrees should be identically the same, and that it is sufficient if there is one judgment-debtor common to all the decrees. Thus, where a decree is against A and another decree is against A and B, it has been held that the decrees are against the same judgment-debtor within the meaning of s. 73. The cases on the point are noted in Chitaley's Civil P. C., Vol. I, p. 647. Similarly, in another class of cases, it has been held that even though the person against whom the decrees were passed is the same in name, s. 73 will not apply unless that person occupied the same character in all the decrees. If resort can be had in this class of cases to a liberal construction consistent with the object of s. 73, there is no justification to give a go-by to such an interpretation and to construe the words literally in those cases in which there is not the identity of names of the judgment-debtors in the decrees. Again it was argued on behalf of the respondents that the Legislature introduced the word "passed" in s. 73 of the present Code with a view to bar the consideration of the consequences that might happen in execution proceedings. The argument is that, in view of the addition of the word "passed," the only relevant consideration in the determination of the question under consideration is to see whether the decrees were against the same judgment-debtor and not whether the same judgment-debtor could be reached in execution. There are two answers.

to this contention. In the first place, in my judgment, the addition of the word "passed" was not with the object contended for by the Counsel for the respondents. In Abadi Begam v. Shah Ara Begam (19), it was laid down that the test of the application of s. 295 is not whether the decrees have been passed against the same judgment-debtor, but whether the applicants for a rateable share have applied for execution against the same judgment-debtor. In accordance with this decision rateable distribution of assets could be claimed under s. 295 of the former Code if there was identity of judgment-debtors in the course of execution proceedings, even though one decree was against the judgment-debtor in his personal capacity and the other was against him in a representative capacity. This was, if I may say so with respect, another extreme view calculated to result in the anomalies of the description referred to in the illustrations given above. The Legislature, in my judgment, added the word "passed" in the new section in order to make it clear that the words "against the same judgment-debtor" had reference to the decrees themselves, and not to the various applications for execution contemplated by the section.

In the second place, as already stated, it is conceded that notwithstanding the addition of the word "passed" one cannot stop short at mere identity of names of judgment-debtors, but has to ascertain the capacity in which the decrees were passed against those judgment-debtors. The use of the word "passed" does not therefore make it obligatory to adopt a strict literal interpretation of the words used. Lastly reliance was placed on behalf of the respondents on the definition of "judgment-debtor" contained in the Code. By s. 2 (10) "judgment-debtor" is defined as meaning "any person against whom a decree . . . has been made." It is contended that in view of this definition the word "judgment-debtor" in s. 73 must be deemed to refer only to the person against whom the decree was actually made. Again there are two answers to this contention.

In view of the opening words of s. 2, the meaning given to the expression 'judgment-debtor' by the Code is to hold good only if there is nothing "repugnant in the subject or context." The subject dealt with by s. 73 is that of rateable distribution of assets among decree-holders. If the expression "judgment-debtor" in s. 73 is interpreted in the light of the definition of that expression, a repugnancy will be created in the subject dealt with (19) 8 O C 86.

by s. 73, as one would be up against the anomalies of the description indicated above. The word "judgment-debtor" in that section must, therefore, be construed in a more extended sense than that given to it by s. 2 (10) so as to avoid repugnancy in the subject. It must be so construed as not to result either in the enlargement or in the nullification of the rights given to various decree-holders by the decrees held by them. In other words, it ought to be so interpreted as to entitle on the one hand, all decree-holders who have the right to satisfy their decrees from particular assets to share in rateable distribution thereof and, on the other, to exclude from the benefit of s. 73 such decree-holders as have not the right to realize their decrees from those assets. This is possible only if a liberal and not a literal interpretation is put on that expression.

The second answer to the contention noted above is furnished by the definition of the expression "legal representative." Section 2 (11) defines "legal representative" as meaning "a person who in law represents the estate of a deceased person" If the expression "judgment-debtor" is interpreted in the light of its definition the relevant portion of s. 73 will read as follows: ". . . decrees for the payment of money passed against the same person against whom a decree has been made," As a "legal representative" represents the estate of a deceased person, it will not be doing any violence to the language of s. 73, if the above rendering of s. 73, the legal representative of the person against whom the decree was made is substituted for that person. For the reasons that I have given I have come to the conclusion that the expression "passed against the same judgment-debtor" must be liberally construed and, accordingly, I, with all respect, dissent from the decisions in which the eo nomine construction was adopted. The object of s. 73 being to provide for rateable distribution of assets upon which two or more decree-holders have equal claims, the words "passed against the same judgment-debtor" must, as observed in Abadi Begam v. Shah Ara Begam (19) be interpreted as referring more to the property which a judgment-debtor represents "than to the person against whom execution has been sought."

In the present case Hoti Lal undoubtedly had the right to seek satisfaction of his decree from the assets of Bishambhar Sahai in the hands of his sons. Similarly, Makhan Lal had also the right to realize his decree from the same assets of Bishambhar Sahai. Both Hoti Lal and Makhan Lal were, therefore, entitled to proceed in execution against identical properties, viz., the properties of Bishambhar Sahai. In the view that I have taken, s. 73 must govern the present case, even though Hoti Lal's decree was against Bishambhar Sahai and Makhan Lal's decree was against his sons. The sons though not nominally judgment-debtors in Hoti Lal's decree must, in view of the definition of "legal representative" in the Code, be deemed to be judgment-debtors in that decree. I have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the decisions of the Courts below are erroneous and that this appeal must be allowed. One of the issues, viz., issue No. 8, raised in the trial Court was in the following terms: "To what amount, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?" No finding was recorded on this issue either by the trial Court or by the lower Appellate Court. Further the lower Appellate Court did not record any finding on the question of limitation raised by the contesting defendant. The dispute between the parties cannot be decided without an adjudication on the points just mentioned. Accordingly, I would allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and send the case back to that Court with directions to decide the point of limitation and issue No. 8 and then pass such decree in favour of the plaintiff-appellant as he may be entitled to. I would further direct that the costs here and hitherto should be costs in the cause and should abide the result.

Bajpai, J.—The facts of this case before the Full Bench are stated at length in the referring order, but they might be re-stated briefly. Seth Hoti Lal, the appellant before us, was the plaintiff in the Court below. He obtained a decree for a certain sum of money against Bishambhar Sahai upon the basis of a promissory note executed by Bishambhar Sahai. This is decree No. 59 of 1930. Makhan Lal obtained a decree for money against Navin Chandra personally and against the assets of Bishambhar Sahai in the hands of Navin Chandra and Abinash Chandra, sons of Bishambhar Sahai. The promissory note upon the basis of which this decree was obtained, was executed by Bishambhar Sahai and Navin Chandra. This is decree No. 620 of 1931. After the death of Bishambhar Sahai his two sons, Navin Chandra and Abinash Chandra, were brought on the record as his legal representatives at the execution stage and then certain properties were attached in execution of decree No. 59 of 1930. In the decree of Makhan Lal also certain properties were attached and then in execution of Makhan Lal's decree one property was sold and purchased by one Reoti Prasad for Rs. 1,325 and another property was sold and purchased by Makhan Lal, the decree-holder, for Rs. 1,415. Some assets thus came to be held by the Court and as Hoti Lal and Makhan Lal had made applications to the Court for the execution of their decrees for the payment of money, Hoti Lal applied for rateable distribution of the assets that were held by the Court.

Hoti Lal's application was disallowed by the Court on August 25, 1934, and the entire assets were declared to be available to Makhan Lal alone, and we are informed that Makhan Lal withdrew the entire money from Court. The present suit was then filed by Hoti Lal on October 19, 1935, in accordance with the provisions of s. 73 sub-s. 2, Civil P. C. The Courts below have dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that the two decrees mentioned above, that is, decree No. 59 of 1930 and decree No. 620 of 1931, were not passed against the same judgment-debtor and therefore although many of the requirements of s. 73 were satisfied one such requirement had not been satisfied. All the other points taken in defence were repelled by the trial Court, and in appeal before the lower Appellate Court the only point that was taken by the plaintiff was the point, whether the trial Court was right in dismissing the plaintiff's suit on the ground that the two decrees were not passed against the same judgment-debtor. The lower Appellate Court also agreed with the trial Court on the said point and if the appeal of the plaintiff-appellant has to be allowed it would be necessary to remand the case to the lower Appellate Court for the decision of the other points taken in defence as learned Counsel for the defendants-respondents has pressed before us that he does not propose to give up the other pleas taken in defence by him. Coming to the main question involved in this appeal, it is necessary to state the provision of law which falls for discussion. Section 73, Civil P. C. of 1908 corresponds with s. 295, Civil P. C. of 1882. The material portion of s. 295 ran as follows :

"Whenever assets are realized by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree and more persons than one have prior to the realization, applied to the Court by which such assets are held for execution of decrees for money against the same judgment-debtor and have not obtained satisfaction thereof, the assets, after deducting the costs of the realization shall be divided rateably among all such persons."

Section 73 of the Code of 1908 runs as follows :

"Where assets are held by a Court and more persons than one have, before the receipt of such assets, made application to the Court for the execution of decrees.

for the payment of money passed against the same judgment-debtor and have not obtained satisfaction thereof, the assets, after deducting the costs of realization, shall be rateably distributed among all such persons."

The phraseology of the section has been changed. I am of the opinion that the change has some significance, although some learned Judges have held the view that the alteration contained in the words underlined above (here in italics) has no importance. It was possible to hold under the old enactment that the crucial point was whether applications for execution of decrees for money were against the same judgment-debtor and not that the decrees were passed against the same judgment-debtor. In Abadi Begum v. Shah Ara Begam (19) Chamier, A. J. C. was of the view that s. 295, Civil P. C., was applicable when applications for execution were made against the same judgment-debtor, whereas there could be no doubt that on the present language of s. 73, Civil P. C. the decrees must be decrees passed against the same judgment-debtor. To my mind the alteration in the phraseology has emphasised the fact that the execution stage has not to be looked into but attention has to be concentrated on the time when the decrees were passed.

The authorities, as was pointed out in the order of reference are not reconcilable, and I shall at first proceed to discuss the question without any reference to the authorities. The word 'judgment-debtor' has been defined in s. 2 (10), Civil P. C., as "any person against whom a decree has been passed or an order capable of execution has been made." For purposes of s. 73, judgment-debtor therefore means any person against whom a decree has been passed, and we are not concerned with any order capable of execution. Bearing that definition in view and bearing also in mind what I have said before that the wordings of the present s. 73 emphasize the stage when the decrees are passed and have no relation to the execution stage, it would be fairly obvious that the two decrees, namely decree No. 59 of 1930 and decree No. 620 of 1931, have not been passed against the same judgment-debtor. Decree No. 59 of 1930 has been passed against Bishambhar Sahai, decree No. 620 of 1931 has been passed against Navin Chandra personally and against the assets of Bishambhar Sahai in the hands of Navin Chandra and Abinash Chandra. It is true that at the execution stage decree No. 59 of 1930 became a decree against the assets of Bishambhar Sahai in the hands of Navin Chandra and Abinash Chandra, but that to my mind is of no importance.

Looking at decree No. 620 of 1931, it cannot be said that Bishambhar Sahai is the judgment-debtor for, it is not possible to hold that Bishambhar Sahai was on the record in this suit as he was dead when the decree was passed. It is possible to say that when a person is sued in a representative capacity, he represents some other persons also; for instance, a Hindu father may be sued in a representative capacity and then it may be held that his sons in existence were also sued through him and although the sons may not be on the record as judgment-debtors by name they may also be considered as judgment-debtors but no principle of representation or legal fiction can be invoked in aid to resuscitate a dead man and I cannot hold that Bishambhar Sahai was a judgment-debtor in decree No. 620 of 1931. Looking at decree No. 59 of 1930 it is not possible to say that the assets of Bishambhar Sahai in the hands of Navin Chandra and Abinash Chandra is the judgment-debtor there or that Navin Chandra and Abinash Chandra to the extent of the assets in their hands are judgment-debtors in decree No. 59 of 1930.

I am prepared to concede that all the judgment-debtors in each of the several decrees need not identically be the same and it is sufficient if there is one judgment-debtor common to all the decrees and thus where Y gets a decree against A and B and X gets a decree against B and C the two decree-holders are against the same judgment-debtor B and rateable distribution can be claimed with respect to the assets of B held by the Court, but this concession is not by reason of any strain on the language of s. 73. Nor do I in any way strain the language when I agree with what has been held in some cases that a decree against A personally and a decree against A as the trustee of X are not decrees against the same judgment-debtor. In the illustration that I have given above I have paid due regard to the fact that a judgment-debtor has been defined as a person and s. 73 requires an identity of judgment-debtors or persons. In one case the identity so far as one of the judgment-debtors is concerned is the same and the section does not say that the identity of the group of judgment-debtors should be the same, in the other case where the decrees are by name against the same judgment-debtor their responsibility, their capacity (paying no regard whatsoever to the property that can be seized in execution) is not really the same. Further when I apply principle of representation as in the case of a Hindu father I am not in any way straining the language of s. 73. I now propose to discuss the authorities cited before us. The case in Bithal Das v. Nand Kishore (1) is of importance only to this extent that in it Streehey, C. J., attempts to state the objects of s. 295. He says:

"The first object is to prevent unnecessary multiplicity of execution proceedings, to obviate, in a case where there are many decree-holders, each competent to execute his decree by attachment and sale of a particular property, the necessity of each and every one separately attaching and separately selling that property. The other object is to secure an equitable administration of the property by placing all the decree-holders in the position I have described upon the same footing and making the property rateably divisible among them, instead of allowing one to exclude all the others merely because he happened to be the first who had attached and sold the property."

I have no doubt whatsoever that these were the objects of s. 295, Civil P. C. of 1882 and are also the objects of s. 73, Civil P. C. of 1908 but these objects when we are considering a particular case must be attainable on a fair interpretation of the language employed in s. 73 and not by means of altering or enlarging it. When the words are capable of only one meaning a Court of Law is not at liberty to speculate on the object of the Legislature and to construe the words according to its own ideas of what ought to have been enacted. Nothing would be more dangerous than to make the object of the Legislature a ground for construing an enactment which in itself is unambiguous. "I cannot doubt" says Lord Campbell in Coa v. Lawrence (20).

"What the intention of the Legislature was but that intention has not been carried into effect by the language used.....It is far better that we should abide by the words of a statute then seek to reform it according to the supposed intention....."

The language of a statute should not be strained to make it applicable to a case to which it does not on its terms apply by invoking considerations of the supposed intention of the Legislature. The objects of s. 73, were truly stated in Bithal Das v. Nand Kishore (1), but it is of great importance to note that before we reach the stage of attachment and sale of a particular property and make it rateably divisible among several decree-holders the essential condition is that the decree-holders must have obtained their decrees against the same persons and it may become a matter of no importance that by reason of the death of the judgment-debtor in one decree the property that can be seized in execution in both the decrees happens to be the same. If the two decrees (20) (1853) 22 L J Q B 140; 1 El. & Bl. 516; 17 Jur. 1115; 1 W R 146.

were not against the same person s. 73, Civil P. C., would not be applicable. In Bhola Nath v. Maq-bul-unnessa (14), the learned Judges refused to apply the provisions of s. 295, Civil P. C., in the case of two decrees obtained not against the same judgment-debtor occupying the same capacity. Stanley, C. J., observed:

"The decree obtained by the respondent is a decree against Yakub Husain as representative of her deceased husband whilst the decree obtained by the appellant is against Yakub Husain in his personal capacity."

In Lal Singh Nayal v. Jiwanand (10), Collister, J., held that a decree obtained against the father of a joint family and a decree obtained after his death against his sons upon a promissory note executed by them in respect of a debt of their father are not decrees passed against the same judgment-debtor and holder of decree against the son is not entitled to get rateable distribution under s. 73 in the sale proceeds of the family estate in execution of the decree against the father and the Court cannot invoke any inherent powers outside the provisions of that section. The facts of this case are very similar to the facts of the case before us, and I am in general agreement with the views expressed by the learned Judge. The decisions of the Allahabad High Court, therefore, to my mind, support the view taken by the Courts below. Coming to the Calcutta cases, the first one that has been cited before us is the case in Hart v. Tara (3), where the learned Judges at p. 728* make certain observations which might seem to enlarge the scope of s. 295, Civil P. C. The observations are;

"The decree in the plaintiff's suit on his mortgage was against Harish Chunder Ghose and Brajendrabala Dasi 'personally' and the decree in the defendant's suit directed Harish Chunder Ghose personally and Brajendrabala Dasi out of the estate of Panchanan Ghosh to pay the amount decreed and it is argued that decrees against a defendant personally and against the same defendant in a representative capacity are not decrees against the same judgment-debtor and that, therefore, the plaintiff is not entitled to ask for a rateable distribution of assets between himself and the defendant. As we are of opinion that the suit must be dismissed as premature, it is not necessary to decide this point but if it was necessary we should decide it in favour of the plaintiff."

Their Lordships were considering the cases of the judgment-debtor Brajendrabala Dasi personally and 'Brajendrabala Dasi out of the estate of Panchanan Ghose' and they seemed to be inclined to the view that the two judgment debtors were the same. Later cases have doubted the correctness of what might be considered to be the inclination of the learned Judges, but this case does not in any way help the appellant inasmuch as the names of the two judgment-debtors in the two decrees were the same namely Brajendrabala Dasi and, if anything, these observations attached very great importance to the name of the judgment-debtor and not to his capacity. In Balmer Lawrie & Co. v. Jadunath Banerji (16), Mookerji and Beachcroft, JJ. held that :

"It is essential for the application of s. 73, Civil P. C., that the decrees should have been passed against the same judgment-debtor. This has been made clear beyond any possibility of dispute by the introduction of the word 'passed' which did not find a place in s. 295 of the Code of 1882."

Section 73 of the Code of 1908 was held to be inapplicable in the case where one of the decrees was passed against Dasarathi Mukerji personally and the other decree was passed against a firm of which Dasarathi Mukerji was a partner. In Jahar Lal v. Lalita Sundari Dasi (6), Rankin, C. J., was of the opinion that the undoubted requirement of s. 73, a requirement which must be satisfied before a person is entitled to a rateable distribution, is that the two decrees must have been passed against the same judgment-debtor, and where A obtained a money decree against N in respect of money which he had lent to N's husband in his lifetime and where after the death of N, L was substituted as her legal representative and later when R got a rent decree against L in respect of certain lands and R's decree was enforced first by sale, it was held that A could not apply for rateable distribution because the principal requirement of s. 73 was not satisfied. The cases in Govind Abaji v. Mohaniraj Vinayak (4) and Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Kanthimathi Ammal (5) were quoted with approval and followed. In Hemlata Dasi v. Bengal Coal Co. Ltd. (7) a decree was obtained by one person against R and the other decree was against the sons of R. Nasim Ali and Henderson, JJ., held that s. 73 was not applicable. Nasim, Ali, J. said that :

"Section 73, Civil P. C., permits rateable distribution only when the decrees are against the same judgment-debtor. Section 146 cannot enlarge the scope of s. 73 as it is expressly made subject to the other provisions of the Code. By reason of s. 146 the words 'passed against the same judgment-debtor' in s. 73 cannot be read as 'passed against the same judgment-debtor or the legal representatives of the same judgment-debtor.' An executing Court cannot go behind the decree and by invoking s. 146 it cannot change a decree passed against Rasraj into a decree against his legal representative."

Section 146, Civil P. C., undoubtedly prescribes that where any proceeding may be taken or application made by or against any person then the proceeding may be taken or the application may be made by or against any person claiming under him but it is prefaced by the words "save as otherwise provided by this Code or by any law for the time being in force," and the condition in s. 73 of the Code itself that the decrees must be passed against the same judgment-debtor is a provision which stands in the way of the application of s. 146, Civil P. C. Section 146, Civil P. C., may be invoked in aid by the representatives of decree-holders or judgment-debtors when any proceeding is to be taken or any application is to be made but when we are considering s. 73 we have got to be satisfied that the condition precedent which is not a matter of procedure has been complied with. Applying this reasoning it is clear that the decree against Bishambhar Sahai in the case before us cannot be changed into a decree against Navin Chandra and Abinash Chandra to the extent of the assets of Bishambhar Sahai. In Hemendra Nath v. East Bengal Commercial Bank (8), Nasim Ali and Henderson, JJ., held :

"Where in one decree the judgment-debtors are described as on the death of X his sons and heirs A, B, C and D and in the other decree they are merely described as A, B, C and D, all the decrees are against the same judgment-debtors and rateable distribution should be ordered."

Their Lordships quoted with approval the cases in Gobind Abaji v. Mohoniraj Vinayak (4), Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Kanthimathi Ammal (5) and Balmer Lawrie & Co. v. Jadunath Banerji (16) and after discussing these cases came to the conclusion that both the decrees were against the same judgment-debtor and there can be no doubt that the decrees were passed against the same judgment-debtor. In one suit X had died during the pendency of suit and his sons and heirs A, B, C and D were brought on the record during the pendency of the suit and the decree was passed against A, B, C and D. The other decree was of course passed against A, B, C and D. The Calcutta view, therefore, is also in favour of the respondents. I omitted, however, to mention the case in Nilmoni Dey v. Hira Lal Das (17) where it appears that Mookerji and Beachcroft, JJ., held that when two decrees were obtained against the estate of a deceased testator each obtained against two out of three executors and where one of these two executors was common to the two suits the decree-holders were entitled to rateable distribution of the assets of the deceased testator under s. 73, Civil P. C. They were of the opinion that a narrow construction should not be put upon the terms of s. 73 so as to defeat the ends of justice. It is of some importance to note that the executors were not personally liable under the two decrees in any manner and it might have been permissible under those circumstances to look to the estate of the deceased testator whose executors they were and thus arrive at the conclusion that the decrees were against the same judgment-debtor, but there can also be no doubt that one of the executors was common in both the decrees. With the exception of this case, which might be said to support the appellant to a certain extent all the other cases help the respondents.

I now come to the Bombay case. In Govind Abaji v. Mohoniraj Vinayak (4) the facts were that one Mohoniraj obtained a money decree against one Bhau Babaji who died shortly afterwards. His son Kashi Nath, as his legal representatives, was then placed on the record and the property of the deceased judgment-debtor Bhau Babaji was attached and sold in execution. Meantime the applicant Govind Abaji had obtained a decree against Bhau Babaji deceased by his son Kashi Nath and against the estate of Bhau Babaji deceased, and he applied under s. 295, Civil P. C., to share rateably in the proceeds of the sale held in execution of the other decree. Jenkins, C. J. and Chandavarkar, J. by separate judgments held that the application should be refused. Jenkins, C. J. pointed out that the fact that one of the decrees was expressed to be against Bhau Babaji Jangam deceased by his son Kashi Nath made no difference and this was due to the erroneous practice which prevailed in the Mofussil Courts according to which a dead man was expressed to be a party to the suit by his heirs. He said:

"It is useless to speculate as to any other test than that which the section itself provides and that test is stated in the plainest terms. So far as the present case goes it is enough to say that the money decrees must be against the same judgment-debtor. Here, however, one decree is against Bhau Babaji Jangam and the other is against his son Kashi Nath.....The interpretation of judgment-debtor in s. 2 and the phraseology of s. 234, Civil P. C., leave no doubt on the point."

Chandavarkar, J. laid emphasis on the definition of the term judgment-debtor and pointed out that a decree against A while he is alive and a decree against B after A's death as A's legal representative are not against one and the same judgment-debtor. Section 234 provides for the execution of a decree where that execution is sought after the judgment-debtor's death. It is the deceased who is, according to the terms of that section, the judgment-debtor, and where on the other hand a person is sued from the beginning as the legal representative of a deceased person the person so sued is the defendant and is therefore the judgment-debtor. He laid stress on the fact that :

"Section 295 does not make the nature of the liability under the decrees contemplated by it one of the essential conditions for the application of the section."

There is then the case in Chunilal Rai Chand v. Broach Urban Co-operative Bank Ltd. (9). The facts of this case were that the petitioner Chunilal obtained a money decree against one Jorbbhai and later another person obtained a decree against the widows of Jorbbhai to recover money owed by Jorbbhai, and in execution of this latter decree Jorbbhai's property was sold by the Court, and before the assets were realized the petitioner applied to the Court for rateable distribution. It was held that the petitioner could not be allowed rateable distribution under the provisions of s. 73, Civil P. C. For the petitioner the Full Bench case of the Madras High Court in Rama Krishna Chettiar v. Kasi Vishwanathan Chettiar (11) was cited, but their Lordships were of the view that the Madras interpretation was not justified by the words of the section. These are the only two cases that were cited before us from Bombay and both of them support the respondents.

I now come to the Madras cases and there the decisions are not uniform. The facts in Ram Nathan v. Subramania (21), were that there was a decree of judgment-creditor No. 2 against the father, and another decree of judgment-creditor No. 1 against the father and son, and it was admitted that the property from which the assets were realized by sale was the ancestral property of the family of which the father and the son were undivided members. It was held that the decrees were against the same judgment-debtor for the purposes of s. 295. If the facts are as I have stated above the father is the common judgment-debtor in both the decrees and the decrees would therefore be against the same judgment-debtor under s. 295, Civil P. C. 1882 or s. 73, Civil P. C., 1908 and, rateable distribution could be allowed.

In Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Kanthimathi Ammal (5) the facts were that A obtained a decree against one Maruthamuthu Pillai and subsequently B obtained a decree against the legal representatives of Maruthamuthu Pillai and his estate in their hands. B applied under s. 295, Civil P. C., to share rateably in the proceeds of property sold in execution of A's decree and it was held that B was not entitled to do so. It is true that the earlier case in Ram Nathan v. Subramania (21) 26 M 179.

(21) was not cited before their Lordships, but as I have explained above that case does not, to my mind, help the appellant. In Rama Krishna Chettiar v. Kasi Vishwanathan Chettiar (11) a Full Bench of the Madras High Court held a view which supports the appellant. Pandrang Row, J., who delivered the principal judgment, was of the opinion that a strict literal construction of the expression "the same judgment-debtor" in s. 73, Civil P. C., in the sense that the decrees must be against the same persons eo nomine, should not be adopted, and the decrees that were capable of execution against the same estate may without unduly straining the language of s. 73, Civil P. C., be regarded as passed against the same persons.

This case was followed in Swaminatha Aiyar v. Saivu Rowthan (12) and Palaniappa Chettiar v. Palani Goundan (13) by a learned Single Judge but he obviously had to follow the decision of the Full Bench. Pandrang Row, J., was of the opinion that in certain cases a literal construction of s. 73 has not been adopted because it has been held that although the person against whom the decrees were passed is the same in name s. 73 did not apply unless that person occupied the same character in all the decrees and it has also been held in other cases that all the judgment-debtors in each of the several decrees need not be identically the same and that it is sufficient if there is one judgment-debtor common to all the decrees; but, as I have pointed out in an earlier portion of my judgment, the decisions in these two classes of cases have not been obtained by straining the language in any manner and afford no justification therefore, for holding the view that the plain meaning of the section ought to be ignored and the personality, the character and the capacity of the judgment-debtor is to be ignored and undue preference is to be given to the property from which the assets are realized. The Full Bench case of the Madras High Court was, however, considered by the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court in Chunilal Rai Chand v. Broach Urban Co-operative Bank Ltd. (9), and not followed. It was also not followed by Collister, J. of this Court in Lal Singh Nayal v. Jivnand (10), I hold the view that if the law, as laid down in s. 73, Civil P. C., is to be interpreted, and if we pay due regard to the restricted language used therein, the decision arrived at by the Court below is the correct decision and the weight of authority, as I have pointed out, is entirely in favour of the respondent. I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal.

Verma, J.—The principal question involved in this case is one relating to the proper construction of s. 73, Civil P. C. The case has been referred to a Bench of three Judges as the Division Bench before whom it originally came up for hearing found that there was a wide divergence of judicial opinion with regard to the proper interpretation of the language employed by the Legislature in that section and in the corresponding section of the Code of 1882, viz., s. 295. The essential facts are these. One Bishambhar Sahai, a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara, executed a pronote in favour of the plaintiff-appellant and borrowed a certain sum of money. The appellant instituted suit No. 59 of 1930 against Bishambhar Sahai in respect of that transaction and a decree was passed in his favour for the recovery of Rs. 10,561. Before the decree could be executed, Bishambhar Sahai died. The appellant then took out execution of the decree against the sons of Bishambhar Sahai, namely Navin Chandra and Abinash Chandra, in accordance with the provisions of s. 50 read with s. 53 of the Code, and prayed for the attachment and sale of certain family property which was in the possession of the sons, and the attachment was made on May 7, 1931.

Shortly afterwards a suit being suit No. 620 of 1931 was filed by one Makhan Lal against Navin Chandra and Abinash Chandra for the recovery of a certain sum of money on the basis of a pro-note executed by Bishambhar Sahai deceased and his elder son Navin Chandra. This suit was decreed as against Navin Chandra personally and as against both Navin Chandra and Abinash Chandra to the extent of the family property in their hands. Makhan Lal applied for execution of his decree to the same Court in which the execution of the appellant's decree was pending and had the same properties attached as had been attached on the application of the appellant. The attachments in execution of Makhan Lal's decree were made on December 2, 3, 1931. Sales were held in execution of Makhan Lal's decree on March 18, 1932, when one Babu Lal purchased a portion of the property for Rs. 1,325 and on March 29, 1932, when Makhan Lal himself purchased the remaining property in lieu of Rs. 1,415. Babu Lal having deposited in Court the sum of Rs. 1,325 in accordance with the provisions of the Code, Makhan Lal applied that the same be paid over to him and obtained payment on October 26, 1932.

So far as the purchase made by Makhan Lal himself was concerned, the purchase money, namely, the sum of Rs. 1,415, was set off against the amount due to him on the decree and satisfaction of the decree was entered up to that extent. This also took place in 1932. Makhan Lal thus received a total sum of Rs. 2,740 in execution of his decree. On October 6, 1933, the appellant applied for rateable distribution under the provisions of s. 73, of the Code. The execution Court disallowed his application in August 1934. The appellant thereupon, in October 1935, instituted, under sub-s. (2) of s. 73, the suit which has given rise to this appeal. His claim was that he was entitled to a sum of Rs. 2,061 and Rs. 493-8-0 as interest, from October 6, 1933, to the date of the institution of the suit and at 1 per cent. per mensem, total Rs. 2,554-8-0 as his rateable share out of the amount realised by Makhan Lal. As Makhan Lal had died before the institution of the suit, the appellant impleaded his sons and grandsons as defendants Nos. 1 to 13, and claimed that he was entitled to a decree for the realisation of the sum of Rs. 2,554-8-0 from the estate of Makhan Lal deceased which, he alleged, was in the possession of defendants Nos. 1 to 10. He averred that, as far as he knew, defendants Nos. 11 to 13 were not in possession of any portion of the estate of Makhan Lal, and that they were, therefore, impleaded as defendants pro forma. He also impleaded Nayin Chandra and Abinash Chandra, the sons of Bishambhar Sahai, as defendants Nos. 14 and 15, pro forma.

The suit was contested by defendants Nos. 1, 5, 8 and 10 who raised questions of jurisdiction, limitation, estoppel and acquiescence. They further pleaded that the plaintiff was not entitled to rateable distribution for certain reasons, one of which was that the decrees of the plaintiff and of Makhan Lal had not been 'passed against the same judgment-debtor'. It was also alleged that, in any event, the plaintiff was not entitled to the amount claimed and that he should in no case be allowed any interest. The pleadings gave rise to a number of issues. The learned Munsif who tried the suit decided the issues of jurisdiction, limitation, estoppel and acquiescence in favour of the plaintiff. He further held that if the plaintiff was entitled to rateable distribution, he was entitled to the amount he would have got on the date on which the assets realised in execution of Makhan Lal's decree should have been distributed and that subsequent events could not be taken into account. He also held that two of the three grounds on which the defendants based their plea that the plaintiff was not entitled to rateable distribution were untenable. He held, however, that the decrees of the plaintiff and of Makhan Lal were not passed against the same judgment-debtor and that, therefore, the plaintiff had no right to claim a share by rateable distribution in the assets realised by execution of Makhan Lal's decree.

Having arrived at that conclusion, the learned Munsif did not decide the question whether the plaintiff was entitled to any interest. In the result, the suit was dismissed. The plaintiff appealed and the lower Appellate Court agreed with the trial Court in holding that the two decrees in question had not been passed against the same judgment-debtor within the meaning of s. 73 of the Code. The appeal was accordingly dismissed without any expression of opinion on the part of the lower Appellate Court on the other questions that had been raised. The plaintiff has filed this second appeal and the only question that arises for consideration is whether the decision that the plaintiff was not entitled to claim rateable distribution, for the reason that the two decrees had not been 'passed against the same judgment-debtor' within the meaning of s. 73 is correct.

The answer to the question thus raised depends on the construction to be placed on s. 73. Questions relating to the proper construction of that section, as well as of the corresponding section of the Code of 1882, have occupied the attention of several High Courts in India in a number of cases, many of which have been cited at the Bar. As my brother Iqbal Ahmad and Bajpai are going to deal exhaustively with these cases, I do not propose to discuss them in detail. On the specific questions that arise before us there is a sharp conflict of opinions between the High Courts of Bombay and Madras. The Bombay view is to be found in Govind Abaji v. Mohoniraj Vinayak (4) and Chunilal Rai Chand v. Broach Urban Co-operative Bank Ltd. (9), and the Madras view in the Full Bench case in Rama Krishna Chettiar v. Kasi Vishwanathan Chettiar (11). Broadly speaking, the view of the Bombay High Court is that the words of the section should be taken literally and that the moment you find that the suits, in which the two decrees were obtained, were not filed against the same individual or individuals as defendant or defendants, you must hold that the decrees were not against 'the same judgment-debtor.'

The facts in Govind Abaji v. Mohoniraj Vinayak (4), were identical with those of the case before us, the only difference being that in that case the assets had been realized in execution of the decree of the person whose position corresponded with that of the appellant before us, and the applicant for rateable distribution was the person whose position corresponded with that of Makhan Lal in this case. That difference can have no effect on the decision of the question of law. Jenkins, C. J. considered it "enough to say that the money must be against the same judgment-debtor" and that in the case before him one decree was against the father and the other was against the son. The circumstances that the debts of both the creditors had been incurred by the father, that one of the creditors had to bring his suit against the son because the father had died before the institution of the suit, leaving property which was in the possession of the son, and that the decree against the son was that the amount be realized from the assets of the father in the hands of the son, were not considered to be of any importance. Chandavarkar, J. delivered a longer judgment, agreeing with the conclusion arrived at by the learned Chief Justice. He referred to certain provisions of the Code and held that the test laid down by the learned Chief Justice was the true test. The real basis of the decision is to be found in the following sentences which occur in the judgment of Chandavarkar, J. :

"The decree obtained by the present applicant is against Bhau Babaji Jangam, deceased, by his son and heir Kashinath. Can it be said to be a decree against Bhau Babaji? It is a decree against Bhau's legal representative, whereas the decree obtained by the opponent Mohoniraj was against Bhau himself. It cannot be said, therefore, looking to the names of the parties, that the two decrees are against the same judgment-debtor. It is true that the estate that is liable in the case of both the decrees is the estate of the deceased Bhau, but s. 295 does not make the nature of the liability under the decrees contemplated by it one of the essential conditions for the application of the section."

(The italics are mine.) After considering certain sections of the Code, the learned Judge makes these observations in the concluding paraphrase of his judgment :

"Applying these considerations to this case before us, it is obvious that the decree obtained by the present applicant was against Bhau's son and heir, Kashinath who must be regarded as his 'judgment-debtor' whereas the decree obtained by the opponent was against Bhau as his judgment-debtor. The opponent by bringing Kashinath as the legal representative of Bhau on the record in his execution proceedings and obtaining an order for execution as against Kashinath as such representative, has no doubt made him his 'judgment-debtor', according to the definition of that term in the Code. But though that order obtained by the opponent and the decree obtained by the present applicant are against the same 'judgment-debtor', (i. e., Kashinath), yet the decree of the former is against Bhau whereas the decree of the latter is against Kashinath, and it is the decrees and not the orders passed in execution which form the test for a rateable distribution under s. 295 of the Code."

It seems to me that Pandrang Row, J., is perfectly correct, if I may say so with respect, in describing this, in his judgment in the Full Bench case in Rama Krishna Chettiar v. Kasi Vishwanathan Chettiar (11) as the eo nomine construction of the section. In Chunilal Rai Chand v. Broach Urban Co-operative Bank Ltd. (9) the facts are absolutely identical with those of the case before us. The learned Judges who decided that case preferred the view expressed by their own Court in Govind Abaji v. Mohoniraj Vinayak (4) to the view of the Full Bench of the Madras Court in Rama Krishna Chettiar v. Kasi Vishwanathan Chettiar (11) Barlee, J. observes :

"In the present case the petitioner obtained a decree against one Jorbbhai and after his death defendant No. 4, the Broach Urban Co-operative Bank, obtained a decree against the widows of Jorbbhai to recover money due to the Bank by Jorbbhai. Therefore, the two decrees were not passed against the same judgment-debtor and the position is exactly the same as that in Govind Abaji v. Mohoniraj Vinayak (4)."

The learned Judge then quotes two passages from the judgment of Pandrang Row, J. in the Madras Full Bench case, one in which it is said that in neither of the two cases Govind Abaji v. Mohoniraj Vinayak (4) and Srinivasa Aiyanger v. Kanthimathi Ammal (5) was any reference made to the objects of s. 73 of the Code, and the other in which a reference is made to Nilmoni Dey v. Hira Lal Das (17) and it is observed that in that case the fact that both the decrees were capable of execution against the same estate was held to be a sufficient reason for concluding that the decrees may without unduly straining the language of s. 73 of the Code be regarded as passed against the same judgment-debtor, and says : "This view had been considered but discarded in our Court." Having thus disposed of the judgment of Pandrang Row, J., and rejected his view, not on the ground that there was any inherent unsoundness in it, but on the ground that it had been considered and discarded by the High Court of Bombay, Barlee, J., proceeds to consider the judgment of Cornish, J., in the Madras Full Bench case. He quotes a passage from the judgment of Cornish, J., where it is stated that the liability of the legal representative under the decree, whether he has been brought on record before decree or whether execution is made after the judgment-debtor's death, is limited to the extent of the deceased's assets which have come into his hands and which have not been duly distributed by him, and that the notion underlying these principles is that the legal representative takes the place of the deceased and is under the obligation which lay upon the deceased of paying lawful claims against the deceased out of the deceased's assets. Barlee, J., observes that this is no doubt correct, but hardly relevant, and proceeds:

"It explains why the Legislature should have provided for a case of this sort. But the fact remains that s. 295, Civil P. C., did not provide for a case of this nature. It provided for one case only where there are two or more decrees passed against the same judgment-debtor; and though after that decision, which was delivered in 1901, the Civil P. C., of 1882, was repealed and re-enacted and Sir Lawrence Jenkins himself was a member of the Special Committee on the Bill, the Legislature neglected to take the opportunity of changing the words of the section."

But that is the whole question. Did the Legislature, when it enacted s. 295 of the Code of 1882, deliberately intend to exclude from its operation a case in which, owing to the person who had incurred the debt dying before the institution of the suit, the creditor has to file it against the legal representative, or in which, owing to the judgment-debtor dying after the passing of the decree but before the decree being executed, the creditor decree-holder was to take proceedings in execution against the legal representative? I should also like to observe; with great respect to the learned Judges who decided the case in Chunilal Rai Chand v. Broach Urban Co-operative Bank Ltd. (9) that the fact that Sir Lawrence Jenkins, who had delivered a short judgment in the year 1901 expressing a certain opinion with regard to the interpretation of s. 295 of the Code of 1882, was a member of the Special Committee on the Bill which ultimately emerged as Act V of 1908, is not a relevant consideration in construing s. 73 of the Code of 1908. Barlee, J. concludes his judgment in these words:

"In my opinion the Madras interpretation is not justified by the words of the section, and since the Legislature has not agreed to amend it, we must accept it as it is unamended, and must follow the case in Govind Abaji v. Mohoniraj Vinayak (4)."

Thus, the basis of Barlee, J.'s decision is that the High Court of Bombay had taken a certain view as to the interpretation of s. 295 of the Code of 1882, that in spite of the expression of that view the section had not been amended when the Code of 1908 was enacted in place of the Code of 1882, and that therefore the view expressed by the Bombay Court in Govind Abaji v. Mohoniraj Vinayak (4) was binding on that Court. The question thus remains whether the view expressed in Govind Abaji v. Mohoniraj Vinayak (4) on the interpretation of s. 295 of the Code of 1882 was correct. The fact that the language of the section was not altered when the Code of 1908 was enacted does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that that view is correct. There is no justification for the assumptions underlying such a conclusion. Tyabji, J., who was the other member of the Bench which decided the case in Chunilal Rai Chand v. Broach Urban Co-operative Bank Ltd. (9), discards the reasoning of the Full Bench of the Madras High Court on the ground that, in his opinion, it amounted to an unjustifiable expansion of s. 73 and that "the Courts have no jurisdiction to expand in this manner a Legislative provision such as s. 73." He accepts the view expressed in the earlier Bombay case, Govind Abaji v. Mohoniraj Vinayak (4), as correct.

The question, which we have to consider, thus, resolves itself into this. Should we accept the Bombay view, namely that a strict literal construction should be placed on the expression "the same judgment-debtor" in the sense that the decrees must be against the same person eo nomine, or should that construction be rejected as too narrow? Now, it is beyond question that the view that a strict literal construction should be placed on the section has not been accepted in a number of cases arising out of a variety of circumstances. The very expression "the same judgment-debtor" was the subject of interpretation in the Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court in Gonesh Das Bagria v. Shiva Lakshman (22). The question that arose in that case was whether two decrees, one of which was against X, Y and Z, and the other was against X and Y only, could be said to be against "the same judgment-debtor" within the meaning of the section. The answer given by a Full Bench of five Judges was in the affirmative. The case had been referred to a Full Bench by a Division Bench consisting of Maclean, C. J., and Banerjee, J. and the learned Chief Justice in his referring order mentioned the case in Deboki Nunden Sen v. Hart (23) as a case in which a contrary view had been taken and observed:

"If the language of the section be absolutely clear, the circumstance that such a construction as was put upon it in that case may lead to injustice or to anomaly or to hardship, could not prevent us from putting such construction upon it. But looking at the whole of s. 295, and especially to that portion of it which deals with the distribution of the assets, where it speaks of 'the judgment-debtor' not using the expression 'the same judgment-debtor' and to the equitable distribution which is aimed at by the section, I am disposed to think that the construction put upon it by the case in Deboki Nunden Sen v. Hart (23) is too narrow."

The learned Chief Justice is referring to (22) 30 C 583; 7 C W N 414 (F B), (23) 12 C 294.

para. 4 under cl. (c) of the proviso to the section. Banerjee, J. in his referring order states:

"That it is not necessary that the decrees should be against identically the same judgment-debtors as is clear from the cases in Shumbhoo Nath Poddar v. Luckynath Dey (24) and in Sarat Chandra v. Doyal Chand (25), and I do not think that the language of s. 295 requires that the judgment-debtors in the two decrees should be identically the same."

Banerjee, J. was not a member of the Full Bench, but the learned Chief Justice was and the principal judgment of the Full Bench was delivered by him. In that judgment he observes as follows :

"I was a member of the Court which referred the case, and for the reasons which I gave in my judgment, which it is unnecessary to repeat, and also for those which are very clearly stated by my colleague, Banerjee, J., I consider that the question ought to be answered, as we then answered it, in the affirmative."

Prinsep, Sale, Stevens, and Geidt, JJ. concurred in this view. The facts of the case were no doubt slightly different from those of the case before us, but the principle accepted by six learned Judges was that a strictly literal construction should not be placed upon the section, and that in construing it, its main object, namely an equitable distribution, should not be lost sight of. It will be convenient at this stage to quote a passage from the judgment of Sir Arthur Strachey in Bithal Das v. Nand Kishore (1) in which the learned Chief Justice explains the object of the section :

".....the object of the section is twofold. The first object is to prevent unnecessary multiplicity of execution proceedings, to obviate, in a case where there are many decree-holders each competent to execute his decree by attachment and sale of a particular property, the necessity of each and every one separately attaching and separately selling that property. The other object is to secure an equitable administration of the property by placing all the decree-holders in the position I have described upon the same footing, and making the property rateably divisible among them instead of allowing one to exclude all the others merely because he happened to be the first who had attached and sold the property."

I am not losing sight of the fact that the question which arose for decision in that case and the facts out of which it arose were different. But the remarks of the learned Chief Justice as to the objects with which the section has been enacted are perfectly general and if I may say so with respect are in my opinion perfectly correct. Another case in which the strict literal construction of the expression 'the same judgment-debtor' was not adopted is that in Bhola Nath v. Maqbul-Unnissa (14). It is converse case to the one before us. The plaintiff-respondent in that case had, on the death of her husband Said-ud-din, obtained a decree for her dower against Said-ud-din's son and heir, Yaqub Hussain, and had, in execution of that decree, attached certain property which had belonged to Said-ud-din, and which had been inherited by and was in the possession of Yaqub Hussain. The defendant-appellant had obtained a money decree against Yaqub Hussain in respect of a debt incurred by Yaqub Hussain, and had in execution of that decree attached the same property. The plaintiff was granted a decree by the High Court for a declaration that she had priority in respect of the amount of her decree over the decree obtained by the defendant and that the defendant could only bring the property in suit to sale in execution of his decree subject to the plaintiff's rights under the decree obtained by her. The competition thus was between two decree-holders holding decrees against the same individual, but one of them was entitled to proceed, and to proceed only against the property of the deceased which had descended to the individual against whom the decree had been obtained, and the other of them was entitled to proceed against the person and the property of the individual against whom he had obtained the decree. It was held that the decree-holder who was entitled to have her decree satisfied out of the assets of the deceased in the hands of the judgment-debtor was entitled to priority over the other decree holder. At p. 34* of the report the learned Chief Justice makes these observations :

"I am not disposed to think that s. 295, Civil P. C., which directs in certain events rateable distribution of assets realized by sale in execution of a decree, if it were applicable, opposes any obstacle to the granting of the relief which the plaintiff seeks. The decree obtained by the respondent is a decree against Yaqub Hussain as a representative of her deceased husband, whilst the decree obtained by the appellant is against Yaqub Hussain in his personal capacity. The two decrees have not, in fact, been obtained against 'the same judgment-debtor.'"

Thus, although the two decrees were eo nomine against the same individual, they were held to be not against 'the same judgment-debtor' for the reason that the judgment-debtor held different capacities in the cases in which the decrees had been obtained. It has been conceded before us that this is settled and sound law. Another instructive case is that in Nilmoni Dey v. Hiralal Das (17). In that case the learned Judges observe as follows :

"What has happened in substance is that there are now two decrees against the estate, each obtained against two out of three executors. One of these two executors is common to the two suits. Each decree is prima facie capable of execution against the estate of the deceased testator. In these circumstances, we are of opinion that the two decrees may, without unduly straining the language of s. 73 be regarded as passed against the same judgment-debtor, namely, they are both decrees against the estate of Bhuvan Chunder Bhar, in one case represented by A and B, in the other case by B and C. We may add that we are not disposed to put a narrow construction upon the terms, of s. 73, so as to defeat the ends of justice."

(24) 9 C 920.

(The italics are mine). The object of the section being as stated above, and it having been held in a number of cases arising out of a variety of facts that a strict literal construction should not be placed upon the expression 'the same judgment-debtor; it seems to me that the reasoning of the learned Judges of the Madras High Court who decided the case in Rama Krishna Chettiar v. Kasi Vishwanathan (11), must be accepted. The only other case to which I propose to refer is that in Lal Singh Nayal v. Jiwanand (10), in which on similar facts my brother Collister preferred the Bombay view to that expressed in the Full Bench decision of Madras. For the reasons indicated above I am unable to agree with my learned brother. In my opinion, the decision of the lower Appellate Court on the only point which it has decided should be reversed. I would, therefore allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case to that Court for decision of the points which remain to be decided.

By the Court.—The appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the case is remanded to that Court for decision of the remaining issues arising in the case. No additional evidence will be allowed. After deciding the remaining issues that were pressed in the trial Court and were decided by that Court, the lower Appellate Court will, if it finds that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree, pass a decree in the plaintiff's favour for such amount as he may be entitled to. Costs here and hitherto will be costs in the cause and will abide the result. The court-fee paid by the appellant in this appeal will be refunded to him.

PATNA HIGH COURT

Criminal Revision No. 258 of 1941

May 6, 1941

MANOHAR LALL, J.

LAKHMAN KURMI—PETITIONER

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 109
(a) (b)—S. 109 (a) applicability of—Held on facts that s. 109 (a) did not apply—Criminal trial—Evidence—Admissibility—Evidence of Sub-Inspector not on personal knowledge, but based on inquiries made in course of duty—Admissibility.

The cl. (a) of s. 109, Criminal P. C., should be applied with proper discretion. It cannot be applied to a person who was merely found talking at night time with bad characters in a place open to the public or to one who merely shows a disinclination for the society of the Police and endeavours to avoid them by running away on their approach. There must be some definite attempt at concealment by taking precautions with that object in view, whether it be by disguise or otherwise, indicating a desire to hide the fact that the person is present within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction. 97 Ind. Cas. 648 (1) and 155 Ind. Cas. 729 (2), relied on.

Held, having regard to the entire circumstances that it was a matter of common experience that a person in the position of the petitioner would ordinarily try to run away when challenged at night from the Police or the choukidars, and that there was no sufficient evidence which would justify the inference that the petitioner had been found to be taking precautions to hide his presence, far less that he was taking such precautions in order to commit an offence.

Evidence of a Police Sub-Inspector not on his personal knowledge but as a result of some enquiries which he has made in the course of his official duties is wholly inadmissible. Similarly the evidence that the petitioner was on the active picketing list of the thana and that "this list is maintained for the criminals who are suspected to be most active" is wholly inadmissible. The Courts have to decide matters judicially and not upon a suspicion which led the Police authorities, however correctly, to place a person upon the suspicion list.

Or. R. from an order of the Sessions Judge of Saran, dated January 20, 1941.

Syed Safdar Imam, for the Petitioner.

The Assistant Govt. Advocate, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This is an application in revision on behalf of Lakhman Kurmi who has been ordered under s. 109 read with s. 118 of the Criminal P. C., to execute a bond of Rs. 100 with two sureties of the like amount to be of good behaviour for a period of one year or in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one year by an order passed by the First Class Deputy Magistrate of Gopalganj dated June 29, 1940, an appeal against which order was dismissed by the learned Sessions Judge of Saran on January 20, 1941.

The facts found are these. On the night of March 9, 1940, at about 2 A. M. the petitioner along with two others, untraced, were seen standing on the District Board Road about 10 bighas east of village Isyapur by three choukidars who were on their rounds. On being challenged they all ran away. The petitioner hid himself in a big sugar-cane field immediately to the east of that road. The choukidars surrounded the field and at dawn they took the help of one Feku Missir who was seen approaching with some labourers to cut sugar-cane crops from the neighbouring field. The party then entered the sugar-cane field where they found the petitioner sitting almost in the middle of the sugar-cane field under a bar tree with his face covered; a bundle of sarso, about four seers in weight, was kept by his side. The petitioner was questioned and gave his name as Sobran Kanu and resident of village Daibhata. But one of the choukidars was able to identify him to be Lakhman Kurmi. This roused the suspicion of the party who searched the person of the petitioner and they found a big knife, a torch in working order and a bunch of keys. The petitioner was then taken to the thana and a Station Diary Entry was lodged. Upon these facts the petitioner has been ordered to execute a bond in the terms already stated.

The petitioner's defence was that he was in ill health, was suffering from enlarged spleen, and on that date started from his house at village Ekdarwa at about 7 or 8 A.M. in order to go to another village for treatment and that he took a bundle of sarso so that he may sell it and meet the costs of treatment. But on the way, he says, he got an attack of fever and lay down on a culvert on the District Board road where he was arrested owing to enmity. He denied that he was arrested inside the sugar-cane field.

I have read the evidence and I am satisfied that the petitioner on being challenged hid himself in the sugar-cane field, but I am also satisfied that the petitioner was in ill health as was testified to by the Assistant Surgeon of Gopalgunj, defence witness No. 4. The doctor stated in his evidence that the petitioner was suffering from enlarged spleen, probably kalazar, and that he was suffering from this disease from February last, that is to say, from before the date of his arrest. I must say that I am not satisfied from the evidence that the petitioner was covering his face when he was discovered under the bar tree. In the Sanha entry dated March 10, 1941, while every other detail is given the story that the petitioner was sitting with his face covered is not to be found. Further, it must be observed that the knife was recovered from the person of the petitioner. The evidence of P. W. No. 3 is clear that the torch and the knife of the petitioner were found in the kurta of the petitioner. The knife, therefore, although it is stated in the judgment of the Courts below to be a big knife, could not have been very big as it could easily be kept in the pocket of his shirt.

Upon these facts can it be held that the petitioner was taking precautions to conceal his presence within the local limits of a Magistrate's jurisdiction and that there is reason to believe that he was taking such precautions with a view to committing any offence as provided by s. 109 (a) of the Criminal P. C.?

It was pointed out by the learned Chief Justice, Foster, J., concurring, in the case of Rambirich Ahir v. The King-Emperor (1), that s. 109 (a) cannot be applied to a person who was merely found talking at night time with bad characters in a place open to the public or to one who merely shows a disinclination for the society of the Police and endeavours to avoid them by running away on their approach. It was also pointed out that in order to apply s. 109 (a) there must be some definite attempt at concealment by taking precautions with that object in view, whether it be by disguise or otherwise indicating a desire to hide the fact that the person is present within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction and that the clause should be applied with proper discretion.

Mohammad Noor, J., in a later case in the King-Emperor v. Bishi Sahara (2), took a similar view.

The only suspicious circumstance against the petitioner is that he gave a wrong name and address; but the Sub-Inspector of Police himself, who was witness No. 6 for the prosecution, stated in his evidence that the petitioner gave his address both as Daibhata and Ekdarwa and that enquiry from the Police Officers showed that the petitioner was originally a resident of Daibhata and that he had left it 12 years ago. Having regard to the entire circumstances and specially when it is a matter of common experience that a person in the position of the petitioner would ordinarily try to run away when challenged at night from the Police or the choukidars, I am not satisfied that there is sufficient evidence which would justify the inference that the petitioner has been found to be taking precautions to hide his presence, far less that he was taking such precautions in order to commit an offence. The precaution which the petitioner has been found to have taken was not with a view to committing any offence but with a view to his avoiding being caught by the choukidars.

But the petitioner has also been found to be of no ostensible means of subsistence, and, therefore, it was argued that s. 109 (b) of the Criminal P. C., justified the passing of the order complained against.

Now, strange as it may seem, the only evidence on this point is the evidence of Babu Chandrika Prasad Sinhā, Sub-Inspector of Police, who received a slip, Ex. 1, for verification and as a result of his enquiry and on consulting the record he reported that Lakhman Kurmi was at present residing at Ekdarwa, that he was untraced since long from Ekdarwa and that "he has no land and no ostensible means of subsistence". It is obvious that the Sub-Inspector is deposing not on his personal knowledge but as a result of some enquiries which he has made in the course of his official duties. Such evidence was wholly inadmissible. I should also like to point out that the evidence that the petitioner was on the active picketing list of the thana and that "this list is maintained for the criminals who are suspected to be most active" is wholly inadmissible and it is unfortunate that the learned Magistrate allowed this evidence to be brought on the record. The Courts have to decide matters judicially and not upon a suspicion which led the Police authorities, however correctly to place a person upon the suspicion list.

Against the hearsay evidence given by this witness the petitioner has been able to produce some witnesses to support him that he has some land and works as a labourer. D. W. No. 1 stated in cross-examination that the petitioner worked as a labourer for him. No suggestion is made that this statement was untrue. Similarly D. W. No. 2 stated in cross-examination that the petitioner sometime worked in the witness's field. For these reasons I am unable to hold that "there is not an iota of evidence on the record to show that the accused had any honest means of livelihood". It may be remarked that the learned trial Court gave no reason for taking that view. All that he says towards the end of his judgment at p. 13 is: "He has no means of subsistence". The learned Sessions Judge discussed the evidence of the defence witnesses in these terms: "I should add in conclusion that though the three defence witnesses are interested in the accused and though D. W. No. 1 spoke of Money Orders having been regularly remitted by the accused to his wife when he was employed in Calcutta, until sometime before the occurrence, there is not an iota of evidence on the record to show that the accused had any honest means of livelihood in village Ekdarwa. The learned Sessions Judge has not considered the statement made by these witnesses in cross-examination which I have referred to above that the petitioner works as a labourer in the fields of these witness. Having regard to the position of the petitioner it is difficult to see how he would be able to produce witnesses who are not interested in him. It is only those who are interested in him who will be able to show, if believed, that the petitioner is or is not a man who lives by honest means.

For these reasons I set aside the order of the learned Magistrate under s. 109, read with s. 118 of the Criminal P. C. The petitioner was ordered to be released on bail to the satisfaction of the District Magistrate. If he is on bail the bail bond will be discharged, if he is not on bail he must be set at liberty at once.

Order set aside.

SHAM LAL AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS

versus

CHHAJU RAM—DECREE-HOLDER AND ANOTHER—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—DEFENDANTS—

RESPONDENTS

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 92—Applicability to Punjab—Principle of subrogation as embodied in amended s. 92, applies to Punjab.

If a principle is to be imported from a statute and acted upon in a province where the statute does not apply it is not fair to pick and choose for that would always lead to arbitrary results. The principle of subrogation as it stands is now embodied in s. 92, T. P. Act, and must be applied in the Punjab on the lines indicated there. Consequently where the mortgagor executes a third mortgage of his property without disclosing the second mortgage and pays off the original mortgagee from out of the consideration received from the third mortgagee, the third mortgagee does not become subrogated to the rights of the original mortgagee. No question of keeping the original mortgage alive can arise inasmuch as the third mortgagee had no knowledge of the intermediary mortgage.

[Case-law referred to.]

S. A. from the decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Hissar, dated November 15, 1939.

Mr. F. C. Mittal, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. L. Aggarwal, for Respondent No. 1.

Judgment.—The facts bearing on the question of law involved in this case are these. Some time before 1924, one Nasir Beg mortgaged a house to Banwari Lal for Rs. 600. In 1924, he mortgaged the equity of redemption of the same house along with another house to Chhaju Ram. In 1927, he mortgaged with possession for Rs. 1,000 to Sham Lal and his brother the house which had already been mortgaged to Banwari Lal. It was stated in the mortgage deed that the house was free from encumbrance and that the entire consideration would be received by the mortgagor before the Sub-Registrar in order to pay off Banwari Lal. This document was executed on April 22 and on 23, Nasir Beg appeared before the Sub-Registrar, admitted the execution of the deed and received in currency notes Rs. 1,000 out of which he paid Rs. 925 to Banwari Lal and retained Rs. 75 for himself. In 1938, Chhaju Ram brought a suit against Nasir Beg and obtained a decree against him without impleading Sham Lal. In execution of his decree, the entire house was ordered to be sold. Sham Lal's objections having been dismissed by the executing Court, he instituted the suit out of which the present appeal has arisen for the usual relief. The Honorary Subordinate Judge who tried the suit dismissed it and the Senior Subordinate Judge on appeal affirmed that decision.

Counsel for the appellants contends that Sham Lal by paying off Banwari Lal was subrogated to the rights of Banwari Lal and inasmuch as Banwari Lal was a prior mortgagee, Sham Lal was entitled to precedence on that account. In support of his contention, Counsel relies on Shyam Lal v. Bashiruddin (1), Dinobundo Shaw v. Jogmoya Dasi (2), Tangya Falla v. Trimbak Daga (3) and Karam Chand v. Ram Singh (4). In Shyam Lal v. Bashiruddin (1), it was held that where a mortgage debt, for the payment of which a sale had been ordered, was satisfied by a third party, who obtained a security for the advance made by him, such security was not extinguished by s. 89, T. P. Act, and the encumbrance in respect of which the sale was ordered enured for the benefit of the party making the payment. In Dinobundo Shaw v. Jogmoya Dasi (2), the question that arose for decision was whether a purchase of property by the appellant at a Sherri's sale was subject to or free from a prior lien claimed by the respondent. Their Lordships of the Privy Council following a previous judgment of their own held that the mortgagor in paying off his own debts did so, for the benefit of the mortgagee and in performance of the agreement with him and that the intention of the parties was to give to mortgagee a first charge on the property represented to be unencumbered and the appellant was aware of it. In Tangya Falla v. Trimbak Daga (3), it was remarked that the plaintiff being a stranger, in paying off a subsisting mortgage was entitled to be subrogated to the position of the mortgagee. It may be observed that all these judgments are prior to 1929, the significance of which will appear later on. In Karam Chand v. Ram Singh (4) reliance was mainly placed on two judgments of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported in Gokal Dass v. Purammal (5), and Malireddi Ayyareddi v. Gopala Kishnayya (6), and it was held that the principle enunciated in Malireddi Ayyareddi v. Gopala Kishnayya (6), applied to the case of a vendee from the mortgagor of a property which was sold to him as being subject only to one mortgage (which was paid off out of the purchase money) while in reality there was another subsequent mortgage.

Counsel for the respondent on the other hand urges that whatever the state of law may have been before 1929, it has undergone a substantial change on its amendment in that year. Prior to 1929, there were three different ss. 74, 75 and 101 in the T. P. Act, which dealt with the subject of subrogation in one way or another. By s. 74, any second or other subsequent mortgagee was authorised to tender the mortgage money due on the next prior mortgage and that prior mortgagee was bound to accept such tender and to give a receipt for such amount and on obtaining such receipt the subsequent mortgagee acquired all the rights and powers of the mortgagee to whom he had made such tender. By s. 75, every second or other subsequent mortgagee had, so far as regards redemption, foreclosure and sale of the mortgaged property, the same rights against the prior mortgagee or mortgagees as his mortgagor had against such prior mortgagee or mortgagees, and the same rights against the subsequently mortgagees (if any) as he had against his mortgagor. By s. 101, where the owner of a charge or other incumbrance on immovable property became absolutely entitled to that property, the charge or incumbrance was extinguished, unless he declared by express words or necessary implication, that it should continue to subsist or such continuance would be for his benefit. In 1929, two new sections, that is, s. 91 dealing with redemption and s. 92 dealing with subrogation were enacted and s. 92 replaced the old section dealing with subrogation. Under s. 91 besides the mortgagor three classes of persons were held entitled to redeem, namely: (a) any person (other than the mortgagee of the interest sought to be redeemed) who had any interest in, or charge upon, the property mortgaged or in or upon the right to redeem the same; (b) any surety for the payment of the mortgage debt or any part thereof; or (c) any creditor of the mortgagor who had in a suit for the administration of his estate obtained a decree for sale of the mortgaged property. Under s. 92, any of the persons referred to in s. 91 (other than the mortgagor) and any co-mortgagor was empowered on redeeming property subject to the mortgage to exercise the same rights in respect of redemption, foreclosure or sale of such property as the mortgagee whose mortgage he redeemed may have had against the mortgagor or any other mortgagee. It was further provided that a person who had advanced to mortgagor money with which the mortgage had been redeemed would be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee whose mortgage had been redeemed if the mortgagor had by a registered instrument agreed that such persons shall be so subrogated. It may be remarked that the word "subrogation" was for the first time introduced in this section.

Counsel for the respondents argues that inasmuch as the law in respect of subrogation was given a new shape by s. 92, the principles now applicable should be derived from this section and from no other source and as in the present case it was the mortgagor who himself had paid off Banwari Lal, the appellants Sham Lal and his brother could not be subrogated to the rights of Banwari Lal, firstly, because the mortgagor is expressly excluded in para. 1 of s. 92 and, secondly, because the condition laid down in para. 3 has not been fulfilled. He further contends that inasmuch as the appellants were not even aware of the existence of any intermediary mortgage, there could be no occasion for them to express an intention to keep the first lien alive for their benefit. In support of his contention, he refers to Mohammad Shafiq Ullah Khan v. Mohammad Sami Ullah Khan (7), and Tulsi Ram v. Radha Kishan (8). In Mohammad Shafiq Ullah Khan v. Mohammad Sami Ullah Khan (7), it was remarked by a Division Bench composed of Sulaiman and Pullan, JJ., that s. 74, implied a tender by the subsequent mortgagee on his own account and not as an agent of the mortgagor. They further remarked that in all other cases it should be ascertained whether the parties intended that the previous mortgage debt would be kept alive for the benefit of the subsequent mortgagee as against the mortgagors and in the absence of direct evidence of intention to keep the prior mortgage debt alive, it was impossible to hold that the previous mortgage debt was not extinguished by the payment. This judgment though delivered prior to the amendment introduced in 1929, hold good with greater force even after the amendment as the amendment embodies in a way the principles enunciated therein. In Tulsi Ram v. Radha Kishan (8), a Division Bench composed of Sir Shadi Lal, C. J. and Abdul Qadir, J., remarked as follows:

"If a person purchases property subject to two prior mortgages and the bulk of the price is retained by him for their discharge, his payment of the first mortgage would not entitle him to set up that mortgage as a shield against the claim of the second mortgagee, inasmuch as payment by him was really a payment of the mortgagor."

These judgments so far as they go lend some support to the contention raised on behalf of the respondent. The question really is to what extent is the principle of subrogation applicable in the Punjab. On the one hand, it is contended that inasmuch as the T. P. Act, is not in terms in force in this Province, mere general principles should be applied denuded of all technicalities. On the other hand, it is equally forcibly contended that even if general principles of subrogation are to be made applicable in this province, the law as stated in the amended s. 92 should hold good. I am disposed to agree with the latter view mainly on the ground that if a principle is to be imported from a statute and acted upon in a province where the statute does not apply it is not fair to pick and choose for that would always lead to arbitrary results. The principle of subrogation as it stands is now embodied in s. 92 and must be applied on the lines indicated there. Applying this principle to the present case, it is obvious that the payment was made by the mortgagor himself and not by the mortgagees and it is equally clear that they could have no intention of keeping the original encumbrance alive as they did not possess any knowledge of any intermediary mortgage and consequently no occasion for expressing such intention arose. I accordingly dismiss this appeal but as the case is not free from difficulty I leave the parties to bear their own costs before me. I further grant the necessary certificate under cl. 10 of the Letters.

HARRIES, C. J. AND FAZL ALI, J.
CHINTI KAHARIN AND OTHERS—
DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

KRIPASHANKAR WARRAH AND OTHERS
—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS

Landlord and tenant—"belagan", whether means rent free holding—Record of rights—Holding shown as rent free—Court can accept evidence in rebuttal—Suit one for arrears of rent—Enquiry to ascertain what the rent was necessary—Plaintiff asking Court to settle rent and give decree—Form of suit held not bad—Adverse possession—It must be to the knowledge of landlord—Monthly tenancy—Rent, if can be mentioned as so much per year.

Without deciding what "belagan" means generally in the District of Jharia all that the Court (in Letters Patent Appeal) held was that it could not take a different view from the Courts below having regard to the materials on the record, i. e., the word "belagan" as used in this district did not necessarily mean rent-free but that it meant a holding which is not paying rent, and such may be a rent-free holding, or it may be a holding for which rent may later be assessed.

Even if the record of rights had stated that certain lands were rent-free, it would still be open to a Court of fact to accept the evidence as rebutting the entry in the record of rights.

Where the suit is really one for arrears of rent and an inquiry has to be conducted to ascertain what that rent is, it is maintainable, as a suit asking the Court to settle the rate of rent and for a decree for arrears of rent on such basis.

Even assuming the tenant can acquire an adverse title against his landlord by an assertion of title by not paying rent he can only do so if his assertion was brought to the notice of his landlord.

A tenancy may well be a monthly tenancy though the rent may be mentioned as so much per year.

L. P. A. from a decision of Mr. Justice Agarwala, dated May 7, 1940.

Mr. S. C. Mazumdar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. P. R. Das and N. N. Roy, for the Respondents.

Harries, C. J.—These are three appeals from a decision of Agarwala, J. upholding a decree of the lower Appellate Court passed in favour of the plaintiff-respondent.

The plaintiff-respondent is the successor-in-title of certain land to the Raja of Jharia. It was alleged that the Raja had thirty or thirty-five years ago settled certain homestead lands with the defendant-appellants or their predecessors-in-title, and the terms of settlement included an undertaking by the tenant to pay rent at the rates prevailing in the district from time to time. No rent had been paid, and the present suits were brought in which the plaintiff asked the Court to settle the rate of rent and for a decree for arrears of rent on such basis.

The defendants, on the contrary, alleged that these were rent-free lands and that no rent was payable in respect of them. In the alternative, they alleged a title in the lands by adverse possession. They further pleaded that the suit as framed was not maintainable.

The learned Munsif dismissed the suits, but on appeal the learned Subordinate Judge reversed his decision and decreed the suits holding that the rent applicable was a rent of Rs. 6 per katha per year for certain types of land and Rs. 2 per katha for other types of land. In second appeal to this Court Agarwala, J. upheld the decision of the lower Court and dismissed the appeals.

It has been contended by Mr. Mazumdar on behalf of the appellants in Letters Patent Appeal No. 11 of 1940 that the decision of the learned single Judge as to the nature of the settlement made with the defendants or their ancestors cannot be sustained. The land is recorded in the Record of Rights as "belagan", and it is urged that this means that the holdings were rent-free holdings. All the Courts below have come to the conclusion that the word "belagan" as used in this district does not necessarily mean rent-free. It means a holding which is not paying rent, and such may be a rent-free holding, or it may be a holding for which rent may later be assessed. The Courts below have relied upon the Settlement Report of Mr. Gokhale, and in that Report the word used for a rent-free holding is "nishkar." The expression used for a holding not paying rent but which is assessable to rent is "belagan-qabil-lagan." Mr. Gokhale gives the meaning of "belagan" standing alone as not paying rent. All the Courts have held that belagan in this particular District when standing alone means nothing more than not paying rent. In the view of the Courts, when such an expression appears in the Record of Rights there is no presumption that the land is either rent-free or assessable to rent. It may well be that Mr. Gokhale took this to be the meaning of belagan after considering a decision of the Calcutta High Court, Keshwar Bhagat v. Sheo Prasad Lal (1). I do not wish in this case to decide what "belagan" means generally in this province.

(1) 18 C L J 166; 21 Ind. Cas. 415; 18 C W N 913.

All that I can say in this Letters Patent appeal is that the Court cannot take a different view from the Courts below having regard to the materials on the record.

In any event the lower Appellate Court accepted the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff as to the origin and terms of the tenancy. An old servant of the Raja was called who stated the precise terms upon which these lands were let. Even if the Record of Rights had stated that these lands were rent-free, it would still be open to a Court of fact to accept the evidence as rebutting the entry in the Record of Rights. The learned Subordinate Judge unhesitatingly accepted the evidence as to the nature of the tenancy, and that being so, it is immaterial what the entry in the Record of Rights really means. If it meant a rent-free holding, the entry was rebutted by the evidence which the Court accepted. In my view it is impossible to assail this judgment on the ground that the record of rights establishes that the settlement was of a rent-free holding.

It was then argued that this suit as framed was not maintainable. It was suggested that it was a suit to settle a fair and equitable rent for a holding; but as pointed out by the Courts below the suit was really one for arrears of rent and an inquiry had to be conducted to ascertain what that rent was. It appears to me that such is the real nature of the suit and it is maintainable in its present form.

It was then argued that if the original settlement was not a rent-free settlement the defendants had asserted their title to hold the land rent-free for more than twelve years before this suit was brought. Whether they asserted such a right depends upon the meaning to be given to the word "belagan"; but in any event the lower Appellate Court has held that neither the plaintiff nor his predecessor-in-title had any knowledge of any such assertion of title. Even assuming the tenant can acquire an adverse title against his landlord by such an assertion he could only do so if his assertion was brought to the notice of his landlord. This assertion, if, indeed, it was an assertion of hostile title, was never brought to the notice of the landlord, and that being so, the defendants have not acquired a title by adverse possession.

It was also suggested that the tenancy which was created was one for a year or more, and as the formalities required by the T. P. Act had not been complied with and the document had not been registered the lease was void. Having entered under a void lease, it was urged that time began to run at once against the landlord and that a title was acquired after possession for the statutory period. The lower Appellate Court, however, came to the conclusion that this was really a monthly tenancy and relied upon s. 106, T. P. Act. It is impossible to say that the lower Appellate Court and the learned single Judge were wrong in coming to the conclusion that this tenancy was nothing more than a monthly tenancy. It was urged that as the rate of rent had been found to be Rs. 6 per katha per year the Courts had actually found that it was an annual tenancy. A tenancy may well be a monthly tenancy though the rent may be mentioned as so much per year. There is ample authority for this proposition without referring to the cases in detail.

It was also suggested that if there was a tenancy and a promise to pay rent at the prevailing rate that meant the rate actually prevailing at the date of the tenancy. The witness who gave evidence as to the tenancy was cross-examined about the precise terms of the agreement, and he made it clear that the agreement was not to pay the rent then prevailing but to pay a fluctuating rent. The Courts have held that such was the agreement, and that is a finding of fact which cannot be disturbed in second appeal or in this Letters Patent appeal.

It was further urged that the tenancy, if there was one, was a tenancy at will and that as the original tenant had died his successor began to acquire title by adverse possession from the moment the original tenant had died. The Courts, however, have held that this was a monthly tenancy, and that as long as the tenancy existed no question of limitation can arise.

It appears to me that we are precluded in this case from interfering with the decision of the Court below by reason of the findings of fact. They practically conclude the matter, and that being so, Letters Patent Appeal No. 11 of 1940 fails and must be dismissed with costs.

No one has appeared in Letters Patent Appeals Nos. 20 and 21 of 1940, but as the points are the same these appeals also fail and must be dismissed with costs, but there will be no hearing fee for these two appeals.

Criminal Appeal No. 242 of 1940

BROOMFIELD AND WASSOODREW, JJ.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR

versus

KUNVERJI KAVASJI KAVARANA

—ACCUSED

Bombay Abkari Act (V of 1878), s. 45 (c)—License prohibiting accused from selling liquor outside his shop—Accused taking out liquor from cask in shop, bottling it and delivering to servants in shop for transmission to customers at their houses—Sale held, completed within licensed area—Accused held could not be convicted under s. 45 (c)—Sale of Goods Act (III of 1930), ss. 21, 23—"Specific goods", meaning of—Contract to sell some liquor out of big cask containing large quantity, required quantity not being separated or bottled is not contract of sale of specific goods within meaning of s. 21—If falls under s. 23.

The accused who was a licensed vendor of country liquor was prohibited by a clause in his license from selling liquor outside the shop mentioned in the license. He took out quantity of liquor out of a big cask, bottled it and delivered it to his servants in the shop premises and the servants delivered the bottles to the customers in their houses and recovered the price there :

Held, that the servant of the accused in the circumstances could very well be treated as a bailee for the purpose of transmission to the buyer, within the meaning of s. 23 (2), Sale of Goods Act, and delivery to such servant, which admittedly took place in the licensed place, would be effective delivery to the buyer himself. As the sale therefore was completed within the licensed area the fact that the price was paid at the houses of the customers was immaterial for the completion of sale does not depend upon payment of the price of the goods sold. The accused could not therefore be convicted under s. 45 (c), Bom. Abkari Act.

A contract to sell some liquor out of a big cask containing much large quantity, the required quantity not being separated or bottled, would not be a contract of sale of specific goods within the meaning of s. 21, Sale of Goods Act. The expression 'specific goods' necessarily means goods capable of being ascertained with certainty—certum est quod certum reddi potest. A sale of some specified quantity of liquor out of a storehouse or cask would not be capable of ascertainment until it was removed or separated. The words 'specific goods' would according to their natural interpretation mean goods whose delivery can be demanded in specie. A contract of sale of a small quantity of liquor stored in bulk could more properly be regarded as a contract for sale of unascertained goods. The ownership will not pass till the quantity ordered by the purchaser is ascertained and appropriated. The bottling of the liquor would be an act of ascertainment and appropriation.

Cr. A. against an order of acquittal passed by the Sessions Judge, Surat.

Mr. R. A. Jahagirdar, Government Pleader, for the Government of Bombay.

Messrs. H. R. Pardiwala and Pochaji Jamshedji, for the Accused.

Wassoodew, J.—This is an appeal by the Govt. of Bombay against the order of acquittal passed by the Sessions Judge of Surat in an appeal by the accused. The latter, who is a licensed vendor of country liquor, was convicted and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 200 under s. 45 (c), Bom. Abkari Act, (Bom. V of 1878) by the First Class City Magistrate of Surat for contravening a term of his license. It was alleged by the prosecution that the accused sold a quantity of country liquor outside the building or shop mentioned in the license to three different persons, according to the orders placed by each of them, between April 1, and June 11, 1938, in contravention of cl. (2) of the license. That clause provides as follows:

"Under this license the licence-holder will be entitled to keep or sell country liquor in the building or premises mentioned hereunder.....that is to say, in the building or premises known as.....and situate on..... Road and numbered as.....And he will not be entitled to keep or sell the same at any place except the aforesaid place. This building or premises is henceforth regarded as the place of license."

The prosecution led evidence of the servants of the accused to show that they were asked to tout for customers and canvass orders, and that they went round the place, obtained orders and carried them to the shop, delivered the liquor to the customers at their respective places of residence and recovered there the price of the liquor sold. One of the servants examined by name Soma (Ex. 3) stated as follows :

"I would go and inform the accused about the orders given to me and then the accused would himself give the liquor, and if he was not present, his servant would fill up the bottles. Then I would give the liquor to the customers' houses and would recover the money and give it over to the accused."

The prosecution maintained that that evidence if believed would inevitably lead to the inference that the sale took place outside the licensed place and therefore in violation of cl. (2) of the license. The learned Magistrate accepted the evidence of the accused's servants as true and convicted the accused. The learned Sessions Judge in appeal took a contrary view of the facts and acquitted the accused holding that the statement of the servants that the price of liquor was not paid at the shop could not be acted upon without independent and reliable corroboration, as the servants were no better than accomplices, and the memoranda of the supposed orders received by the accused could not be regarded as sufficient corroboration. It is unnecessary in the view we take of the legal position, which was not properly appreciated in the Courts below, to examine that evidence of the prosecution. The question is whether upon the allegation in the complaint the sale could be said to have been completed outside the place of licence. The learned Govt. Pleader has argued that the sale, was completed upon delivery of liquor at the buyers' houses and not before, and upon notice given to them that the liquor was bottled from the casks and put into a deliverable state. He says that this case would be governed by the provisions of s. 21, Sale of Goods Act (III of 1930). That section provides that :

"Where there is a contract for the sale of specific goods and the seller is bound to do something to the goods for the purpose of putting them into a deliverable state the property does not pass until such thing is done and the buyer has notice thereof."

The argument of the learned Govt. Pleader assumes that a contract of sale of a quantity of liquor out of a large cask or cistern is a contract of sale of specific goods. I find the greatest difficulty in holding that a contract to sell some liquor out of a big cask containing much larger quantity, the required quantity not being separated or bottled, would be a contract of sale of specific goods within the meaning of s. 21. The expression 'specific goods' necessarily means goods capable of being ascertained with certainty—certum est quod certum reddi potest. A sale of sum specified quantity of liquor out of store house or cask would not be capable of ascertainment until it was removed or separated. The words 'specific goods' would according to their natural interpretation mean goods whose delivery can be demanded in specie. Consequently, in my opinion, s. 21 would be inapplicable. The appropriate section applicable to the facts alleged in this case would be s. 23, Sale of Goods Act. Sub-s. (1) of that section provides as follows :

"Where there is a contract for the sale of unascertained.....goods by description and goods of that description and in a deliverable state or unconditionally appropriated to the contract, either by the seller with the assent of the buyer or by the buyer with the assent of the seller, the property in the goods thereupon passes to the buyer. Such assent may be express or implied, and may be given either before or after the appropriation is made."

In my opinion a contract of sale of a small quantity of liquor stored in bulk could more properly be regarded as a contract for sale of unascertained goods. The ownership will not pass till the quantity ordered by the purchaser is ascertained and appropriated. The bottling of the liquor, would be an act of ascertainment and appropriation. That is what the evidence suggests. It is argued that it could not be said that the goods are ascertained until the appropriation by one party is assented to by the other that there is no evidence that the purchaser had assented to the appropriation, and that such assent could not be implied till the liquor was delivered to the purchaser into his house or place named. The section itself provides that the assent may be express or implied, and may be given either before or after the appropriation is made. The question whether the assent was implied must necessarily depend upon the circumstances of each case. In this particular case it appears that the customer had assented that the goods should be delivered to the shop's servants for delivery to him, That is what Soma has suggested. If the prosecution intended to prove that the contract was different it was open to them, and in fact necessary to call the best evidence on the point, namely that of the customer, who could say what the terms of the contract were. That has not been done in this case. In view of the provisions of sub-s. (2) of s. 23 of the Act it is immaterial whether the delivery of the goods took place at the house of the purchaser. Sub-section (2) of s. 23 provides that :

"Where, in pursuance of the contract, the seller delivers the goods to the buyer or to a carrier or other bailee (whether named by the buyer or not) for the purpose of transmission to the buyer, and does not reserve the right of disposal, he is deemed to have unconditionally appropriated the goods to the contract."

The servant of the seller in the circumstances could very well be treated as a bailee for the purpose of transmission to the buyer; and delivery to such servant, which admittedly took place in the licensed place, would be effective delivery to the buyer himself. Nor would it be material for the purpose of the charge to ascertain whether the price of the liquor was paid in the shop, for, the completion of sale does not depend upon payment of the price of the goods sold. It seems, according to the statement of Soma, that upon delivery of the liquor to the customers at their houses money was paid to him and he delivered the same to the accused in his shop and that in some cases money was recovered later on. It has been pointed out to us that under cl. (10) of the license, sale on credit of country liquor is prohibited. That is so provided in that clause. But assuming that there has been a transgression of that term of the license, the accused has not been charged with breach of it. All that he is charged with is that he has offended against cl. (2) of the license which relates to the sale outside the premises. In the view we take the sales in question were completed within the premises and therefore, the accused could not be convicted of the offence with which he is charged. We therefore dismiss the appeal.

Hindu Law — Partition — Specification of shares without actual division by metes and bounds, if severs joint status—Descendants mentioned in partition deed as "one party"—Whether shows that they continued to be joint—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 4—Suit on mortgage against brothers—One of brothers admitting mortgage and dying—Plaintiffs' application to bring widow as legal representative—Other defendants alleging that they formed joint Hindu family and have succeeded by survivorship—Plaintiff not pressing application—Suit decreed—Widow, if can file suit that she not being represented, was not bound by the decree and that she was still the owner of the house.

Specification of shares even without actual partition by metes and bounds is sufficient to establish severance of joint family. Balkishen v. Ram Narain (1), relied on.

The mere fact that the descendants of a person were described in the partition deed as 'one party' cannot be held to be sufficient to establish that the descendants must have continued to form a joint family.

Plaintiff instituted a suit upon a mortgage executed in his favour by three brothers, admitted the mortgage in his written statement but subsequently died during the pendency of the suit. The plaintiff applied at first for his widow being brought on the record as his legal representative but subsequently did not press the point as the two brothers stated that they were members of a joint Hindu family and had therefore succeeded to the interest of their deceased brother in the house by survivorship. The suit was eventually decreed. Thereafter, the widow instituted a suit for a declaration that she was the owner of the house in dispute and it was not liable to be sold in execution of the decree obtained by the plaintiff on the basis of the mortgage. The suit was based on the allegation that a partition had been effected between the members of the joint family prior to the execution of the mortgage and that she was therefore the legal representative of her deceased husband and that inasmuch as the plaintiff had failed to implead her as the legal representative in the previous suit, the decree obtained in that suit was not binding on her.

Held, that the deceased brother had already admitted the mortgage and his widow as his legal representative would have been bound by the admission. Her defence, if any, would have been the same as that of the co-mortgagors, who were impleaded and fought out the case. In the circumstances, the estate was effectively represented in the previous suit and the decision in the previous suit was binding on the widow. 100 Ind. Cas. 185 (5), not approved. 141 Ind. A. from a decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated July 17, 1939.

Messrs. M. C. Mahajan and Jindra Lal, for the Appellants.

Messrs. J. N. Aggarwal and J. L. Kapur, for the Respondent (Plaintiff).

Judgment.—The pedigree-table showing the relationship of the parties concerned in this case has been given in the judgment of the trial Court. One Bhondu Mal instituted a suit against Umrao Singh, Kanshi Nath and Banshi Nath on the basis of the mortgage of a house effected by them on November 16, 1927. Banshi Nath admitted the mortgage in his written statement but subsequently died during the pendency of the suit. The plaintiff applied at first for Mst. Braham Wati, his widow, being brought on the record as his legal representative but subsequently did not press the point as Umrao Singh and Kanshi Nath stated that they were members of a joint Hindu family and had, therefore, succeeded to the interest of Banshi Nath in the house by survivorship. The suit was eventually decreed. Thereafter, Mst. Braham Wati instituted the suit which has given rise to this appeal for a declaration that she was the owner of the house in dispute and it was not liable to be sold in execution of the decree obtained by Bhondu Mal on the basis of the mortgage. The suit was based on the allegation that a partition had been effected between the members of the joint family in 1921, that Mst. Braham Wati was, therefore, the legal representative of Banshi Nath and that inasmuch as Bhondu Mal had failed to implead Mst. Braham Wati as the legal representative of Banshi Nath in the previous suit, the decree obtained in that suit was not binding on her. The learned Judge of the trial Court came to the conclusion that, although a partition had been effected in the year 1921, Banshi Nath, Umrao Singh and Kanshi Nath continued to form a joint Hindu family and, therefore, Umrao Singh and Kanshi Nath had succeeded to the interest of Banshi Nath in the joint family property by survivorship. He, therefore, held that it was not necessary to implead Mst. Braham Wati in the previous suit as legal representative of her husband. The plaintiff's suit was accordingly dismissed. On appeal, the learned District Judge held that the partition deed of 1921 established that all the members of the joint family had separated although part of the joint property had not been partitioned by metes and bounds. He held, therefore, that Mst. Braham Wati was the proper legal representative of her husband Banshi Nath and that the failure on the part of Bhondu Mal to implead Mst. Braham Wati in the previous suit rendered the decree in that suit inoperative against her. The appeal was accordingly accepted and the plaintiff was granted the declaration and injunction.

prayed for. From this decision the present appeal has been preferred by the defendants.

The first point raised by the learned Counsel for the appellants was that the learned District Judge had not correctly interpreted the partition deed of 1921 and that it was not established that all the members of the joint family had separated. He drew attention specially to the fact that the partition deed refers to two 'parties'—one party being the descendants of Mehtab Rai and the other descendants of Bhagwan Das: vide pedigree-table given in the judgment of the trial Court referred to above. This point, however, does not appear to help the appellants because it was admitted that all the descendants of Mehtab Rai did not continue to form a joint family. It appears that Phul Chand and his sons separated at the time of the partition. Consequently, the mere fact that the descendants of Mehtab Rai were described in the partition deed as 'one party' cannot be held to be sufficient to establish that Umrao Singh, Kanshi Nath and Banshi Nath must have continued to form a joint family. It is true that their shares were not actually partitioned by metes and bounds but it is well established that specification of shares even without actual partition is sufficient to establish severance of joint family. The partition deed mentions separate shares of Umrao Singh, Kanshi Nath, Banshi Nath and other members of the joint family and in view of the principles laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Balkishen v. Ram Narain (1). I am not prepared to dissent from the conclusion arrived at by the learned District Judge that all the members of the joint family must be deemed to have separated in status in the year 1921.

The next point taken up by the learned Counsel for the appellants was that even if a partition had taken place, the plaintiff had acted in good faith in not impleading Mst. Braham Wati as legal representative of her husband Banshi Nath as Umrao Singh and Kanshi Nath definitely represented in Court that they still continued to form a joint family and, therefore, Mst. Braham Wati had no interest in the property in suit. In support of this contention, the learned Counsel relied on Karam Kaur v. Matwal Chand (2), Chaturbhuja Doss Kushaldoss & Sons v. Raja Manicka Mudali (3) and Jharu v. Pardhana

(4). The learned Counsel for the respondent, on the other hand, disputed the correctness of the proposition laid down in Karam Kaur v. Matwal Chand (2) and relied on Pukhraj Jeshraj v. Jamsetji Rustom (5), Manikya Nayanam v. Lakshminarasimha (6), Lasee Rai v. Udit Rai (7) and Md. Junaid v. Mst. Aulia Bibi (8), in support of his contention that it was necessary for Bhondu Mal to implead Mst. Braham Wati in the previous suit as a legal representative of Banshi Nath and that even if he had acted in good faith and there was no fraud or collusion, the previous decree cannot bind Mst. Braham Wati. Out of the authorities relied on by the learned Counsel for the respondents, Pukhraj Jeshraj v. Jamsetji Rustom (5), clearly seems to be in his favour. Manikya Nayanam v. Lakshminarasimha (6), seems to be distinguishable as the previous case therein in which the true legal representative was not joined had not been fought out on merits, but had been compromised. In Lasee Rai v. Udit Rai (7) and Md. Junaid v. Mst. Aulia Bibi (8), the special circumstances of a case wherein a wrong person has been impleaded as a legal representative in good faith, without any fraud or collusion and the estate has been represented effectively, do not appear to have been considered. This special case has been discussed at length in Chaturbhuja Doss Kushaldoss & Sons v. Raja Manicka Mudali (3) and the effect of the amendment of the provisions of the Civil P. C. in 1908, replacing the corresponding previous provision of s. 368 by O. XXII, r. 4, on which stress was laid in Pukhraj Jeshraj v. Jamsetji Rustom (5), has also been taken into consideration therein. The rule laid down in Karam Kaur v. Matwal Chand (2), is to the same effect.

In the present case there is no reason to doubt that Bhondu Mal acted in good faith in the previous suit in not insisting on impleading Mst. Braham Wati as the legal representative of Banshi Nath. He had, as a matter of fact, first applied for her being so impleaded in addition to the male members of the joint family, by way of precaution. But she failed to appear and as the male members of the family definitely asserted that the family was joint and that Mst. Braham Wati was not a necessary party he did not pursue the matter. Banshi Nath had already admitted the mortgage and Mst. Braham Wati as his legal representative would have been bound by the admission. Her defence, if any, would have been the same as that of the co-mortgagors, who were impleaded and fought out the case. In the circumstances, it seems to me that the estate was effectively represented in the previous suit and the case falls within the rule laid down in Chaturbhujia Doss Kushaldoss & Sons v. Raja Manicka Mudali (3) and Karam Kaur v. Matwal Chand (2). Following these authorities I hold that the decision in the previous suit was binding on the present plaintiff. I accept the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

RANGOON HIGH COURT

Letters Patent Appeal No. 13 of 1939

May 2, 1940

ROBERTS, C. J. AND BLAGDEN, J.

SEIN DASS—APPELLANT

versus

LAKHAJEE AND ANOTHER—

RESPONDENTS

Appeal—Parties—Held on facts that appeal was incompetent in the absence of a party which was a necessary party—Letters Patent—Case certified to be fit for appeal to Letters Patent, includes order for costs made or refused in that case—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 33—Leave to appeal to Letters Patent granted—Appellate Court, if can pass whatever decree which should have been passed by trial Court.

A person as an agent of another executed a promissory note in favour of C. C instituted a suit on the note claiming relief alternatively against the agent and the principal. The suit was decreed against the principal and dismissed against the agent. No appeal was filed against the dismissal and consequently it became barred. The principal, however, appealed against the decree against him and contended that the agent and not he, was liable on the promissory note. The agent, however, was not impleaded as necessary party to the appeal:

Held, (1) that when the right of appeal against the dismissal of the suit against the agent was barred, the agent was no longer an interested party. He was entitled to hold the decree in his favour: it was a substantive right of a very valuable kind of which he could not be lightly deprived;

(2) that the appeal by the principal was incompetent unless the agent was added by him as necessary party;

(3) that it was not necessary for C to have appealed against the agent's dismissal from the suit. It was incumbent on the principal, if he desired to appeal against the judgment in favour of the agent, to do so. 159 Ind. Cas. 931 (5), referred to.

(4) that the order of the Court would be that the decree of the trial Court against the principal would be restored.

To assume that when leave is granted the appeal and the terms of the certificate are to be regarded as a reference only, is an error and the Appellate Court has the right and duty to pass whatever decree should have been passed by the Subordinate Court in all the circumstances of the case that is in all the circumstances which gave rise to the litigation originally and to all the disputes between all the relevant parties in the matter. [p. 307, col. 2.]

When a "case" is certified to be fit for appeal to the Letters Patent the word 'case' includes an order for costs made or refused in that case, which is obviously ancillary to the substantive order made in the case. [p. 309, col. 1.]

L. P. A. from the decree of the High Court, reported in 188 Ind. Cas. 120.

Mr. F. S. Doctor, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. C. Sanyal and E. Hay, for Respondents Nos. 2 and 1, respectively.

Roberts, C. J.—This is a letters patent appeal arising out of a suit on a promissory note for Rs. 1,120 with interest at 2 per cent. per month, brought by the plaintiff-appellant against the two respondents as defendants. His plaint averred that the defendant, Lakhajee, executed a promissory note on October 1, 1932 as 'agent and for Ranglal' who was the proprietor of the Irrawaddy Rice Mill whilst Lakhajee was his manager. Alternatively, he claimed relief against Lakhajee. This relief would, of course, be in the nature of damages for breach of warranty of authority to act as Ranglal's agent if it were proved that Lakhajee was not acting as such; and the sum due as damages would be the amount due under the note. In the Sub-Divisional Court of Mogaung it was held that Ranglal was liable and though Lakhajee was not expressly dismissed from the suit he was dismissed by implication. The plaintiff therefore obtained a decree against Ranglal alone. The date of the judgment was April 30, 1938. Ranglal appealed to the District Court on June 2, and Sein Dass was served with notice of the appeal on June 25. The period of limitation running in Lakhajee's favour expired on June 29.

In his grounds of appeal to the District Court Ranglal set out the contention that the lower Court had "erroneously come to the conclusion that the appellant is responsible for a debt contracted by one Lakhajee" and had "erroneously decided that the appellant ratified the acts of Lakhajee." It is clear therefore that his sole ground of appeal was that not he but Lakhajee was liable to the plaintiff. He did not join Lakhajee as a respondent as he ought to have done if he had desired to prove Lakhajee responsible for the debt. In Pearson & Son Ltd. v. Lord Mayor, etc. of Dublin (1) at p. 357 Lord Halsbury remarked that if a case cited to him as authority were supposed to decide that the principal and agent could be so divided in responsibility that like the school-boys' game of "I did not take it: I have not got it," the united principal and agent might commit fraud with impunity, it would be quite new to our jurisprudence. It must frequently happen that a person who has contracted with some one upon the footing that the latter is an agent is in doubt whether to proceed against the principal or against the self-styled agent, and that it is reasonable to make each of them defendants in the alternative. When he obtains judgment against one and the other is dismissed from the suit, the unsuccessful defendant cannot, by omitting to join the successful defendant as a respondent in the appeal and then showing that the latter was really liable, deprive the plaintiff of his right to establish his claim. Ranglal did not appeal against the dismissal of Lakhajee from the suit.

When the right of appeal against the dismissal of Lakhajee from the suit was time barred, Lakhajee was no longer an interested party. I respectfully agree with the finding of the learned Judge in second appeal on this point and I need hardly add to his exhaustive researches into the authorities. It is enough to say that Lakhajee was entitled to hold the decree in his favour; it was, in the words employed by Sir John Wallis in Chockalingam Chetty v. Seethai Ache (2) "a substantive right of a very valuable kind of which he should not lightly be deprived." What then was the position of Ranglal? Assume, he succeeded by showing that Lakhajee was really liable (and he did not attempt to succeed by any other means) there would be in existence two inconsistent decrees, one of the District Court and another of the Sub-Divisional Court, with respect to the subject-matter of the suit. Applying the principle in Ma Thaw May v. Mohammad Eusoof (3), Ranglal's appeal ought not to have been allowed to proceed in the absence of Lakhajee as a necessary party.

In the events that have happened, the lower Appellate Court set aside the decree against Ranglal and passed a decree against Lakhajee alone. The learned Judge in second appeal has, in my respectful opinion, rightly concluded that no decree should have been passed against Lakhajee as he was improperly joined as a respondent; but he has also agreed with the lower Appellate Court that Ranglal was not liable on the promissory note and has dismissed the cross-objection of Sein Dass against Ranglal's appeal in respect of the costs in the District Court. The result of all this is that each of the respondents has escaped liability on the promissory note on which admittedly one of them was liable, and each of them is awarded costs against the person who plainly ought to be paid. The learned Judge incorporated into one judgment his decision on Lakhajee's appeal, Special Civil Second Appeal, No. 18 of 1939* and Ranglal's appeal against the order depriving him of his costs, Civil Second Appeal No. 19 of 1939 and the cross-objection filed in the later. He then certified that the case was a fit one for a further appeal under cl. 13 of the Letters Patent, because it raised the question whether Lakhajee could have been properly joined by the District Court as a respondent. It is now contended that our jurisdiction is limited to a consideration of this point alone but in view of the wide provisions of O. XLI, r. 33, I am of opinion, that we are not so fettered, but may make such further or other decree or order as the case may require.

We have had cited to us the case in Devi Charan Lal v. Mehdi Hussain (4). In that case the learned Chief Justice of the Patna High Court (Chamier, C. J.) pointed out that though ordinarily a point is not to be taken in a letters patent appeal which had not been taken before the single Judge, there may be a case in which a point must be allowed to be taken in order to remedy what appears to be a serious failure of justice. It is perfectly clear that no learned Judge would ever grant a certificate of appeal against his judgment in such circumstances that the Court could only answer one specific question; to do that the Judge proceeds by referring a particular question; to assume that when leave is granted the appeal and the terms of the certificate are to be regarded as a reference only is, in my opinion, an error and the Appellate Court has the right and duty to pass whatever decree should have been passed by the Subordinate Court in all the circumstances of the case and that means, in all the circumstances which gave rise to the litigation originally and to all the disputes between all the relevant parties in the matter. The nature of the decree which should have been passed in the plaintiff-appellant's suit against the two respondent-defendants is one which it is proper to determine in the circumstances and the conclusion at which we have arrived is that the appeal of Ranglal was incompetent unless Lakhajee was added by him as a necessary party. The whole of this question was reviewed by the learned Judge in second appeal and it cannot be said now that this Court is powerless to see that the appellant recovers the money which is due to him and in respect of which he brought a suit against each of the defendants in the alternative.

The failure on the part of Ranglal to join Lakhajee as a respondent has resulted in the latter's exonerated from liability to the plaintiff's claim and the alleged principal cannot offer a shield to one who has styled himself as his agent and then escape liability himself by proving that such self-styled agent was never his agent at all and was really all the time liable personally in damages for breach of warranty of authority, or, alternatively, upon the note. It has been contended that Sein Dass ought to have appealed against Lakhajee's dismissal from the suit. But Sein Dass had only asked for a decree against one or other of the defendants and having secured it against one had no need and indeed no right to pursue his claim against the other. It was incumbent on that other, if he desired to appeal against the judgment in Lakhajee's favour to do so : U Po Sein v. E. M. Bodi (5). The order of the Court will be that the decree of the Sub-Divisional Court against Ranglal will be restored with costs here, Advocates fee in this Court thirty gold mohurs and in all the Courts below to be paid to the appellant. We have been obliged to increase the Advocate's fee since his time as well as ours has been occupied in Court for many more hours than the comparatively simple character of the appeal demanded. The cross-objection of the appellant is allowed with costs in the Court below. The decree of the learned Judge in second appeal with regard to Lakhajee is affirmed; Sein Dass to pay his costs here and in all the Courts below, Advocate's fee in this Court fifteen gold mohurs and Sein Dass to recover from Ranglal the amount of the costs which the former shall be obliged to pay to Lakhajee.

Blagden, J.—I agree and desire only to add this. Mr. Sanyal contended, amongst (5) 13 R 189; 159 Ind. Cas. 931; 8 R Rang. 289.

other things, that even if his client was—as he denied—bound at his peril to make Lakhajee a party to his appeal to the District Court, if he wished there to contend that Lakhajee and not he was liable, the plaintiff was really to blame for Lakhajee's absence. Mr. Sanyal submitted that the plaintiff could have either (a) appealed against the order of the Sub-Divisional Court in effect dismissing Lakhajee from the suit, or (b) lodged his application to the District Court for Lakhajee to be added before that order had become unappealable, or (c) presented, if necessary, a petition under s. 5, Lim. Act. I do not agree that the first course was even open to him for the reasons given by my Lord. As to the second course (which in fact he, not unreasonably, did take within a not unreasonable time, though it was actually then too late) and the third course, it may well be that in fact here he could have taken one or other of them. But why should he have to act with feverish haste in order to preserve to himself the benefit of his original prudence in suing both defendants? Why should the time limited to him for taking the suggested steps be fixed not by any statute or rules of Court but by the whim of the unsuccessful defendant? It is quite possible, if Mr. Sanyal is right, to imagine a case in which a combination of delay by the unsuccessful defendant, error by the trial Court and (say) illness of the successful plaintiff might put the Courts in the position of having to make two inconsistent decrees and deprive the plaintiff wholly of his rights.

It being admitted that A or B is liable to C; the lower Court having decreed that A is liable and B is not, and the latter part of the decree having become unappealable, the net result, if the Appellate Court thought that B was liable, would be that C would have to pay costs to both of two persons one of whom was admittedly in this debt. This cannot be right. One and a sufficient answer to the cases cited to us on election by taking judgment against one of the persons liable in the alternative is, in my opinion, that in every one of those cases the judgment was effectual and subsisting. They do not decide that a judgment can at the option of an unsuccessful defendant be set aside on appeal in so far as it adversely affects the unsuccessful defendant and preserved in so far as it benefits a person who is admittedly liable, if he is not, and it would be absurd if such were the law. I have no doubt it is not, and therefore Lakhajee was in law a necessary party to Ranglal's appeal to the District Court, which should, in Lakhajee's absence; have been dismissed. With regard to the point that no appeal has been lodged against the decree in Civil Second Appeal No. 19 of 1939 but only against the decree in Special Civil Second Appeal No. 18 of 1939, I do not think this has any substance. This appeal is an appeal in a 'case' certified to be fit for appeal, and the word 'case' is a very wide word. A case, in my opinion, includes an order for costs made or refused in that case which is obviously ancillary to the substantive order made in the case. Neither the precise form of the certificate nor any failure by the appellant to file a document which he should have filed under O. XLI, r. 1 (and I do not decide that there was any such failure) could, I think, deprive this Court of its statutory power under O. XLI, r. 33 to pass or make such further or other decree as the case may require and I have no doubt that the present case before us does require the order which we are making.

D. Order accordingly.

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), ss. 3, 9—Association of individuals resembling Hindu undivided family falls under s. 3—Whether assessee forms association within meaning of s. 3 depends upon facts—Assessee held formed association within meaning of s. 3 and were owners of property under s. 9 and consequently could be assessed under s. 9 (1).

The words "association of individuals" appearing in s. 3, Income Tax Act, if construed on the ejusdem generis principle are to be construed with reference not merely to the word 'firm' immediately preceding them, but with reference to the other associations of individuals, namely, a Hindu undivided family and company which appear in the section. An association of individuals resembling a Hindu undivided family is an association of individuals contemplated by s. 3. The question whether the assessee formed an association of individuals within the meaning of s. 3 is a question which must depend upon the particular facts and circumstances of each case.

Held, on facts that the seven assessee formed an association within the meaning of s. 3 and that the association of individuals, formed by the seven assessee were the owners of the property within the meaning of s. 9 and that there could be no doubt that as owners they could be assessed under s. 9, part 1. 173 Ind. Ref. by the Commissioner of the Income-tax, Bombay Presidency, Sind and Baluchistan.

Mr. Partabai D. Punwani, The Advocate-General, for the Commissioner of Income-tax.

Mr. Suganlal, for the Respondents.

Weston, J.—Three questions have been referred to us under s. 66 (2), Income Tax Act, by the learned Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay Presidency, Sind and Baluchistan and these are as follows: (1) Whether in the circumstances of the case, the assessee constituted an association of individuals within the meaning of s. 3, Income Tax Act? (2) Whether the said association can be said to be the owner of the properties within the meaning of s. 9, Income Tax Act, and was rightly assessed as such? (3) Whether the assessee were in any event rightly assessed as owners of the said property under s. 9 (1)? The facts which it is necessary to state briefly are that the seven assessee are a father, four sons, two of whom are minors, and the wives of two of the sons. In the year 1928 the father separated from his sons by a partition deed, which partition was modified later by another deed executed in the year 1930. In the year 1933 the property which, was still jointly held by the members of this Hindu family, was sold and a plot of land was purchased in the names of the seven assessee. A building was constructed thereon and this building was managed jointly for the purpose of earning an income which, the assessee allege, they divided among themselves, but for the division of which the Income-tax Officer found no evidence in the accounts produced. The seven assessee made a return of income declaring their income as Rs. 6,058 from the property mentioned. The Income-tax Officer accepted this figure of income but assessed the assessee thereon as an association of individual under s. 3, Income Tax Act. The assessee appealed to the Assistant Commissioner who upheld the order of the Income-tax Officer and the assessee then petitioned to the Commissioner of income-tax to refer the case to this Court under s. 66 (2) and this is the reference which has been made.

We think there can be no doubt on the facts of the case that the Income-tax Officer and the Assistant Commissioner of income-tax were justified in holding that the assessee constituted an association of individuals within the meaning of s. 3, Income Tax Act. We are in agreement with the view taken by the Bombay High Court in Commissioner of In- come-tax, Bombay v. Laxmidas Devidas (1), and also in Commissioner of Income-tax v. Bombay v. Dwarkanath Harischandra (2), where it has been held that the words "association of individuals" appearing in s. 3, if construed on the ejusdem generis principle are to be construed with reference not merely to the word 'firm' immediately preceding them, but with reference to the other associations of individuals, namely a Hindu undivided family and company which appear in the section. The same view has been taken by the Calcutta High Court in In re B. N. Elias (3), and although Panckridge, J. in In the matter of Keshar Deo Chamaria (4), has made a reference to the point expressing a contrary opinion, he has not referred to the earlier reported decision of the Calcutta High Court and it appears that the point was not material to the case which was then before him. The view expressed by Panckridge, J. has also been expressed by the Allahabad High Court in Mufti Mahamad Khan v. Commissioner of Income-tax (5), which was discussed by the learned Chief Justice in Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Laxmidas Devidas (1), and with his remarks we are in agreement. We think therefore that an association of individuals resembling a Hindu undivided family is an association of individuals contemplated by s. 3 and in the present case the association of the seven assesseees was clearly very akin to a Hindu undivided family, for they had formed a Hindu undivided family. Even after partition their property had remained undivided and in the year 1933 they had associated themselves, some of them being minors, in the purchase and management of the property upon which they have been assessed.

The question whether the assesseees formed an association of individuals within the meaning of s. 3 is a question which must depend upon the particular facts and circumstances of each case and we have no hesitation in holding in the present case that there was material from which the Income-tax, Officer and Assistant Commissioner of income-tax were justified in holding that the present seven assesseees did form an association within the meaning of s. 3 of the Act. The two other questions referred are subsidiary.

diary to the first question and require little notice. On the facts the Income-tax Officer and the Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax also had material to hold that the association of individuals, formed by the seven assesseees were the owners of the property within the meaning of s. 9 and there can be no doubt that as owners they were rightly assessed under s. 9, Part 1. We therefore answer the questions referred to us accordingly and we direct that a copy of this judgment be sent to the Commissioner under s. 66 (5) of the Act. As to costs, we do not order the return of the Rs. 100 deposited under s. 66 (2) but we make no further order as to costs.

Second Appeal No. 708 of 1940

October 21, 1940

BECKETT, J.

SUNDAR AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—

versus

Mst. TABO AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—

RESPONDENTS

Custom (Punjab)—Non-ancestral property—Gift by widow with consent of next reversioner—Remoter collaterals, if can challenge it—Question of justification—Punjab Courts Act (VI of 1918), s. 41 (3)—Lower Court holding that plaintiff as remote reversioner is not entitled to challenge alienation by widow—Plaintiff wishing to establish custom to contrary in second appeal—Certificate, necessity of.

When the alienation of non-ancestral property by a widow is by way of gift with the consent of the next reversioner only, and is not made for charitable or religious purposes, no question of justification arises, so that the consent cannot be treated as intended for evidence of justification. The consent of the next reversioner given in such circumstances should be regarded as intended to operate as a transfer by the reversioner following on a surrender by the widow. Consequently, the remoter collaterals of the widows' husband cannot contest the gift. 50 Ind. Cas. 498 (3) and Vajranji v. Manokaronika (6), relied on. 134 Ind. Cas. 197 (1) followed. Nobokishore Sarma Roy v. Hari Nath (4), approved.

Where it has been held by the lower Court that reversioners in the position of plaintiffs would ordinarily have no right to contest an alienation made by a widow with the assent of the next reversioner, the plaintiffs wishing to establish a local custom to the contrary in second appeal must produce a certificate under s. 41 (3), Punjab Courts Act.

S. A. from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated February 22, 1940.

Mr. Iqbal Singh, for the Appellants.

Messrs. N. C. Pandit and Achhru Ram, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The parties to this case are Jats, who are said to be governed by custom. Mst. Tabo made a gift of certain immovable property in which she held a widow's life-estate. The gift was made with the assent of Rama, the next reversioner. The more remote collaterals of Mst. Tabo's husband are now seeking to have it declared that the alienation is not binding upon them. The property is non-ancestral and the Courts below have held, following Roshan v. Wadhawa (1) that the plaintiffs have no right to contest such an alienation. The plaintiffs have come up in second appeal. At first sight the judgment in Roshan v. Wadhawa (1) seems to be exactly applicable to the facts of the present case, but Sardar Sahib Iqbal Singh for the appellants seeks to question both its applicability and its validity. With regard to its applicability he contends that the case is governed by the local custom of the Hoshiarpur district in respect of which he wishes to refer to the Manual in which the Customary Law of that district is collected. It is to be observed that there is no certificate permitting an appeal on the question of custom. It has been held by the lower Court that reversioners in the position of plaintiffs would ordinarily have no right to contest an alienation made by a widow with the assent of the next reversioner. If Counsel for the plaintiffs wishes to establish a local custom to the contrary it seems to me that a certificate is required.

With regard to the validity of the judgment, Sardar Sahib Iqbal Singh contends that it not only runs counter to other judicial pronouncements of higher authority and the law as laid down by the most distinguished commentators, but that it is also opposed to the principles set forth in the very decision of the Privy Council on which it purports to be based. It is true that there are a number of pronouncements, either in the commentaries or in recorded decisions, which lay down the law with regard to the rights of the more remote reversioners to a widow's estate in terms which are somewhat widely expressed; and if these are taken as equally applicable to ancestral and non-ancestral property alike, they would lend some support to the claim of more remote reversioners to contest an alienation in respect of which only the assent of the nearest reversioner has been obtained. Generally, however, these pronouncements have been made with reference to cases in which ancestral property was involved, and this is shown by the reasoning on which they are based. So far as Customary Law is concerned, the Division Bench deciding Roshan v. Wadhawa (1) was fully aware of the fact that the judgment was not in accordance with the wording of para. 68 of Rattigan's Digest; but they adopted the opinion expressed in Jaswant Kaur v. Wasawa Singh (2) to the effect that this paragraph could be taken only as applying to ancestral property. I do not therefore think that it is necessary to refer to pronouncements of general importance unless they were made with specific reference to non-ancestral property, or the reasoning contained therein is equally applicable to such property.

The most important decision to be considered is that of the Privy Council in Rangaswami Goundan v. Nachiappa Gounden (3) on which Roshan v. Wadhawa (1) was based. That decision appears to lay down three things. In the first place, to explain the position of the reversioners in cases of this kind, it is not sufficient to refer merely to their consent. Persons with a mere expectation of succession cannot alter the devolution of property so as to affect the rights of persons other than themselves, so that a mere assent by some of them could not by itself affect the rights of the others. On the other hand, there are two possibilities to be considered, and the assent of one or more reversioners may validate an alienation by a widow if it falls into one of two categories. The first possibility is that the widow may terminate her own estate in favour of the next reversioner and the transaction may then have the effect of passing that reversioner's estate on to the persons in whose favour the alienation is being made. This may operate to validate a gift, but it must be shown that there has been a complete surrender of the widow's rights. The other possibility is that the alienation may be one for consideration on the ground of necessity, and the assent of the reversioners may be a token of their belief that the alienation is justified. In such a case, the assent should ordinarily be given by the reversioners as a body. In the case before them, their Lordships came to the conclusion that there had been only a partial alienation so that the transaction could not operate as a surrender of the widow's rights. On the other hand, as the alienation was found to be gratuitous, no question of necessity arose. It was accordingly held that the transaction could be challenged by a reversioner who had not given his consent to the alienation.

If these principles are applied to the facts of the present case, it will be seen that Rama, who had only an expectation of succeeding after the widow's death, was not in a position to do anything which would alter the rights of the other reversioners if the widow should live longer than he lived. Nor was there any question of giving his consent by way of indication that he considered that the alienation would be justified on grounds of necessity. On the other hand, it was open to the widow to terminate her own estate, which would then vest in Rama, and for Rama to allow the estate to pass on to the donee. The other reversioners would be powerless to prevent the termination of the widow's estate in favour of Rama during his lifetime, and they would be equally powerless to prevent the estate which had vested in Rama from passing on to another person when the property concerned was non-ancestral. The following passage from the judgment of the Privy Council may now be quoted:

"The surrender once exercised in favour of the nearest reversioner or reversioners the estate became his or theirs, and it was an obvious extension of the doctrine to hold that, inasmuch as he or they were in title to convey to a third party, it came to the same thing if the conveyance was made by the widow with his or their consent."

This was decided to be possible in Nobokishore Sarma Roy v. Hari Nath (4) and the principle there enunciated appears to have been accepted by the Privy Council as applicable to those cases of gift in which there has been a total surrender of the widow's rights. This was the principle applied in Roshan v. Wadhawa (1). It is true that there is a long line of decisions to the effect that a transfer by way of gift in favour of a stranger on the part of the widow is not an alienation to which a presumption of legitimacy founded on the consent of the reversioners can be applicable. A list of the earlier cases will be found in the headnote to Bindeshwari Singh v. Har Narain Singh (5) and I do not think that it is necessary to refer to them in detail. In these cases, transactions of this kind have been regarded as alienations made directly by the widow in favour of a stranger, to which the consent is added by way of ratification to what would be an impeachable transfer unless necessity could be established. They do not admit the principle that a gift may be in effect a surrender by the widow of her interest which passes that interest to the next reversioner, whereupon the more remote reversioners may cease to have any control over the estate. In this connexion, reference may be made to an earlier decision of the Privy Council, Vajranji v. Manokaronika (6). Although this was a case relating to a transfer for consideration, the question of surrender was discussed. After referring to the two theories, the surrender theory and the theory that the consent of reversioners is merely evidence of necessity, their Lordships proceeded to make the following observations:

"The High Court of Allahabad, indeed, does not recognize the validity of surrenders in favour, or alienations with the consent, of presumptive reversioners, so as to defeat the title of the actual reversioner at the time of the widow's death. But this restriction is at variance with the principle itself, and is not in accordance with the practice in other parts of India in which the Mitakshara Law prevails. Their Lordships have not been referred to any cases in the province of Oudh in which this restriction has been acted upon; and though they would be unwilling to extend the widow's power of alienation beyond its present limits, they cannot adopt the further limitation which the Allahabad High Court has sought to establish."

These remarks, taken with the later observations in Rangaswami Goundan v. Nachappa Gounden (3) clearly envisage the possibility that an alienation by way of gift on the part of a widow with the consent of the next reversioner only may take effect as a surrender of her interest followed by a transfer on the part of the reversioner, and that to exclude this possibility would be contrary to the views expressed by the Privy Council. When the alienation is by way of gift with the consent of the next reversioner only, and is not made for charitable or religious purposes, no question of justification arises, so that the consent cannot be treated as intended for evidence of justification. This proposition is unexceptionable; but it will not be sufficient in itself to dispose of the further question whether the consent of the next reversioner given in such circumstances should not be regarded as intended to operate as a transfer by the reversioner following on a surrender by the widow. In holding that it should be so regarded, it seems to me that Roshan v. Wadhawa (1) is in accordance with the law laid down by the Privy Council. For these reasons the appeal is dismissed with costs, but leave is given to file a Letters Patent Appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

RANGOON HIGH COURT

First Appeal No: 8 of 1939

August 23, 1940

MYA BU AND DUNKLEY, JJ.
MA AYE TIN—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANTversusDAW THANT—DEFENDANT—*RESPONDENT

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Property purchased in jointly in name of two persons—Evidence by one showing that he paid the whole consideration and that other's name was entered to enable him to present the deed for registration, admissibility of—Burmese Buddhist Law—Payin property of husband—Wife's vested interest in—Whether affected by rule in Manukye Book X, s. 28—Scope of operation of Manukye Book X, s. 28.

Where a certain property is purchased in the joint names of two persons, evidence by one of them showing that he paid the whole consideration of the purchase and the other's name was mentioned in the deed as a joint purchaser merely in order that he should be able to present the documents for registration is clearly inadmissible under s. 92, Evi. Act. [p. 314, col. 1.]

All property acquired by either or both the spouses before or during marriage passes into common enjoyment and both spouses have a vested interest in all such property; that is, "passing into common enjoyment" is a consequence of marriage and not a test of the vesting of property. The interest of the wife in the payin property of her husband is one-third. She cannot be deprived of such vested interest in the property of her husband by the rule in Manukye Book X, s. 28 to which vested interest the law of inheritance can have no application. 137 Ind. Cas. 1 (3), relied on. [p. 315, cols. 1 & 2.]

The wording of s. 28 of Book X of the Manukye does not restrict its operation to the vested interest of the deceased in the undivided family property only but appears to extend its operation to the property of the deceased generally which is in the possession of the parent. The rule applies whether the parent is natural or adoptive as adoptive parents stand in the same position as the natural parents and have the same rights so long as the relationship constituted by adoption subsists. [p. 316, cols. 1 & 2.]

F. A. against the decree of the District Court, Henzada, dated January 9, 1939.

Mr. U E Maung, for the Appellant.

Dr. Ba Han, for the Respondent.

Mya Bu, J.—We first heard this appeal on June 20, 21 and 22, 1939, and at that hearing it was made clear to us that the only obstacle in the way of the appellant's complete success in the appeal was the decision in Maung Ohn Khin v. U Nyo (1), in which it was laid down that the provisions of the Manukye, Book X, s. 28, were still the law of Burma in regard to the division between the parents and daughter-in-law of the property of a son who has died childless. So far as the present case is concerned, the pertinent part of that section of the Manukye read as follows (the section referring specifically to the case where the daughter has died and the son-in-law survives):

"Besides this he shall not recover any of his wife's property actually in the possession or keeping of her parents; they shall retain it."

As there was reason to doubt the correctness of the decision in Maung Ohn Khin v. U Nyo (1), we referred to a Full Bench for its opinion the following question:

"As between the parent and the surviving spouse of a child who dies leaving no issue but who lived with his or her parent and whose property is in the possession or keeping of the parent, who is entitled to inherit such property under the Burmese Buddhist Law?"

We have received the answer of the Full Bench* to this question, and it is that the parent is entitled to inherit such property. The conflict in this case is between the widow of one Maung Than Tun, namely Ma E Tin, who is the appellant and was the plaintiff in the District Court, and Maung Than Tun's adoptive mother, Daw Than, who is the respondent and was the defendant in the District Court. Most of the facts of the case have been set out in the order of reference, dated August 24, 1939, and it is unnecessary to repeat them. In fact, the only further questions of fact which remain for decision are (1) which of the properties mentioned in the Schedules attached to the plaint belonged to Maung Than Tun, it being admitted by the appellant that they were all acquired by him prior to his marriage with her and (2) which of the properties mentioned in the Schedules belonging to Maung Than Tun were in the possession of the respondent at the time of Maung Than Tun's death. The properties which the appellant claims to have constituted the estate of Maung Than Tun are set out in seven Schedules attached to the plaint. Those mentioned in Schs. A and B are the properties in regard to which Maung Than Tun relinquished all his right, title and interest in favour of the respondent by the release deed, dated February 11, 1927, which we have already held to be void. Those properties were therefore the absolute property of Maung Than Tun at the time of his death. However, the evidence makes it clear that Maung Than Tun himself considered this deed of release to be binding upon him up to the time of his death and, in fact, he never attempted to challenge it. He allowed the respondent to exercise all the rights of ownership over these properties and, consequently, they must be held to have been in her possession at the time of his death.

Schedule C contains a number of items of jewellery, and the memorandum of appeal states unequivocally that the claim to these jewelleries is abandoned. Schedules D and E contain a number of items of immovable property which were purchased in the joint names of Maung Than Tun and the respondent. The presumption therefore arises that Maung Than Tun and the respondent were joint owners in equal shares of this property. This presumption has not been rebutted by the vague evidence called by the respondent to the effect that she paid the whole consideration for the purchase of each of these properties and that Maung Than Tun's name was mentioned in the deed as a joint purchaser merely in order that he should be able to present the documents for registration. Evidence of the latter category is clearly inadmissible under s. 92, Evi. Act, and even if the evidence to show that the respondent paid the whole of the purchase moneys to the different vendors be accepted, that raises no presumption in her favour, because she was the guardian appointed by the Court of Maung Than Tun, who was a minor when these properties were acquired, and received on his account a sum of Rs. 8,000 which came to him on his natural father's death, and had for a number of years been in receipt of the income arising from lands which Maung Than Tun had inherited from his grandmother. No doubt, the respondent has an estate of her own, apart from the estate of Maung Than Tun, but she has admitted in evidence that the income of Maung Than Tun's estate has always been inextricably mixed by her with the income of her own estate, and consequently she had in her hands large funds belonging to Maung Than Tun's estate at the time when these properties were purchased; and therefore no inference arises, from the fact that she actually handed over the purchase moneys, that these moneys belonged to her only and not to Maung Than Tun.

Consequently, it has been established that Maung Than Tun owned a half share of the properties mentioned in Schs. D and E. But as regards the possession of these properties it must be held that they were in the possession of the respondent. She has produced a large number of leases of these properties executed by tenants, and these leases were all executed in her name alone; and as against these the appellant has been able to produce only two leases executed in a single year in which the joint names of the respondent and Maung Than Tun are mentioned as lessors. It is common ground that the paddy received as the rents of the agricultural lands were all stored in a granary belonging to the respondent alone, and the evidence appears to be conclusive that the respondent alone negotiated the sale of his rental paddy. As regards the houses there is no evidence as to what happened to the rents of these, and, in fact, only one, which is the one which was jointly occupied by the respondent and Maung Than Tun and the appellant, is of any considerable value; but the evidence does show that the whole of the income arising from both Maung Than Tun's estate and the respondent's estate was received by the respondent and treated by her as if it were her own. Consequently, it must be held that the respondent was in possession of the properties mentioned in Schs. D and E. Schedule F consists only of one pair of bangles and a motor-cycle. The learned District Judge has dealt with these items in his judgment and there is no appeal against his decision.

Schedule G consists of two debts. It is said by the appellant that these debts were debts due to Maung Than Tun and the respondent jointly, but there is no evidence in support of her assertion. On the other hand, the two debtors, one of whom was examined as a witness for the appellant, have stated that they borrowed the money from the respondent only. Both the debts are oral loans and the money may have come from the respondent's separate income, and in the absence of any evidence that Maung Than Tun's estate contributed towards these loans it must be held that it has not been proved that he had any interest in these debts. The same reasons apply also to a security deposit of Rs. 100 of which the respondent obtained the refund. Consequently, on the evidence, it would appear that Maung Than Tun's estate consisted of the whole of the properties mentioned in Schs. A and B and, a half share of the properties mentioned in Schs. D and E, but that all these properties were in the possession of the respondent at the time of his death. Now, as we have said, on the reference to the Full Bench the learned Judges who composed it have held that the case in Maung Ohn Khin v. U Nyo (1), lays down the law of Burma and that s. 28 of Book X of the Manukye is applicable in a proper case; but their decision is subject to a qualification in respect of any vested interest which the appellant may have obtained in her husband's property before his death. In the course of his judgment the learned Chief Justice said:

"But, of course, the question whether the property has been brought to the marriage and has been in the common enjoyment of the married couple, though still in the custody of the parent or parents, is all important."

In his judgment Mosely, J., said :

"It has been held in N. A. V. R. Chattyar Firm v. Maung Than Daing (2), and again by their Lordships of the Privy Council in U Pe v. U Maung Maung Kha (3), that either spouse has a vested interest (to the extent of one-third) in the payin property brought by the other spouse to the marriage, that is to say, property which has passed into the common enjoyment though it may be in the custody or keeping of the parent. . . . I would agree that the law of inheritance contained in Manukye X, 28, cannot affect the wife's interest in such property."

And Mackney, J., said :

"As my learned brother Mosely observes, the rule will not affect the vested interest of the son-in-law or daughter-in-law in the payin property brought to the marriage by the daughter and son: but property which is 'in the possession or keeping of the parents' can scarcely be deemed to be property brought to the marriage, unless it can be shown that the married couple actually enjoyed it as their own, the parents being as it were merely their agents for the management of the property."

Hence the learned Judges composing the Full Bench have held that the daughter-in-law could not be deprived by the rule in Manukye Book X, s. 28, of her vested interest in the payin property of her husband, to which vested interest the law of inheritance could have no application. The learned Judges have laid particular stress on the question of common enjoyment and have said that property cannot be said to be brought to the marriage unless it has passed into common enjoyment. With the greatest respect, these dicta would appear to be not in accordance with the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in U Pe v. U Maung Maung Kha (3), in which their Lordships observed (at p. 268*):

"Married persons hold during the subsistence of the marriage an interest in all property belonging to either or both."

Their Lordships further observed (at p. 280*):

"After all the ancient law has still a wide scope if admittedly all property acquired by either or both of the spouses before or during marriage passes into the common enjoyment and it is only dealt with by either according to his or her vested interest therein."

We consider ourselves bound to follow these statements of the law made by the Judicial Committee, which lay down as a principle that all property acquired by either or both the spouses before or during marriage passes into common enjoyment and both spouses have a vested interest in all such property; that is, "passing into common enjoyment" is a consequence of marriage and not a test of the vesting of property. Moreover, in the present case the property had passed into common enjoyment because the appellant and Maung Than Tun were during their married life maintained from the income of his property, and the respondent has stated in her evidence that this income was even insufficient to maintain the married couple. The interest of the wife in the payin property of her husband is one-third, and, in our opinion, the appellant had such a vested interest in the property of Maung Than Tun, which she acquired on her marriage with him, and which interest cannot be defeated by the fact that on his death his estate is inherited by some other person. On this ground the appellant is, in our opinion, entitled at least to a one-third share of the properties mentioned in Schs. A and B attached to the plaint and to a one-sixth share of the properties mentioned in Schs. D and E. A further question that has been raised on behalf of the appellant is whether s. 28 of Book X of the Manukye has any application at all in the present case. In support of the negative answer submitted by the learned Counsel for the appellant the following passage in the judgment of Page, C. J. in Ma Pwa Thin v. U Nyo (4), has been relied on :

"The doctrine laid down in s. 28, in my opinion, ought not to be extended. In cases where it directly applies the law will be enforced, and the Court applied s. 28 in connection with the claim to Po Aung's share. But unless the facts of any particular case bring it clearly within the terms of s. 28, in my opinion, the provisions of that section ought not to be extended by analogy or otherwise to other cases which are not brought within the ambit of the section."

The points of distinction between this case and the case in Maung Ohn Khin v. U Nyo (1) which dealt with the same family were: (1) Po Aung had not taken from his mother his share in the estate of his deceased father and he and his wife lived with his mother until his death leaving no issue, whereas Maung Nyun had received a sum of money from his mother in full satisfaction of his claim in the estate of his deceased father and he and his wife lived separately from his mother, and (2) the claim put forward by Maung Ohn Khin was for Po Aung's alleged share in the estate of his deceased father which was until Po Aung's death in the possession of the mother, while Ma Pwa Thin's claim was for Maung Nyun's share in the estate of his sister who lived with the mother and died a spinster. Similar points of distinction do not exist between Maung Ohn Khin v.

U Nyo (1) and the present case. Another ground advanced by the learned Counsel for the appellant is that the property in dispute in Maung Ohn Khin v. U Nyo (1), was the vested interest of Po Aung in undivided family property, whereas the property in dispute in the present case consists wholly of separate property belonging to the deceased. But the wording of s. 28 of Book X of the Manukye does not appear to restrict its operation to the vested interest of the deceased in the undivided family property only but appears to extend its operation to the property of the deceased generally which is in the possession of the parent. It has further been contended on behalf of the appellant that the respondent not being the natural mother of Maung Than Tun but only his adoptive mother, the provisions of s. 28 should not be extended so as to give the right under the section to the adoptive parents. Support is lent to this contention by the fact that under ss. 25, 26 and 27 of Book X which lay down rules regarding the right of inheritance of a child "publicly and notoriously" adopted, that is, a keittima child, the position of an adopted child is inferior to that of a natural child and in Maung Po An v. Ma Dwe (5) it was held that under the dharmathats the position of the keittima child was distinctly inferior in respect of inheritance to that of own children and accordingly that the right of the keittima child to equality with own children should not be extended to the orasa's right.

But Maung Po An v. Ma Dwe (5) was a case in which the right of the keittima child, the only child of the family, to claim a quarter share from the widow on the death of the adoptive father constituted the principle point for consideration. Such right is not enjoyed under the dharmathats by an ordinary child though the child may be a natural child who does not possess the qualifications of an orasa child. The right is a preferential right even under the dharmathats extended to, and only to, a child who possesses certain qualifications and is, therefore, designated as an orasa child. As regards the general inferiority of the position of the keittima child in respect of inheritance to that of the own children recognized by the dharmathats, the Judge-made Law for more than forty years has been that the keittima child stands exactly in the same position as a natural child and has taken firm root in the modern Burmese Buddhist Law of inheritance. The fact that the preferential right of an orasa child is denied to the keittima child even under the prevailing system of law does not throw any doubt on the correctness of the proposition that for ordinary purposes of inheritance the keittima child stands in the same position as a natural child. Nor is this fact sufficient to show that the proposition which has never been doubted during the last forty years, that adoptive parents stand in the same position as the natural parents and have the same rights so long as the relationship constituted by adoption subsists, Ma E Dok v. Maung Ngwe Hlaing (6), cannot be consistently applied in favour of the adoptive parent in the matter of inheritance of the keittima child's estate, the right of the parent under s. 26, Book X of the Manukye being a right applicable to all parents and not only to parents with certain special qualification.

In Maung Thein v. U Tha Byaw (7) a Full Bench of this Court has pointed out that the keittima adoption creates not only heirship of the adoptee to the adoptor but also the relations of a parent and child and by virtue of such relationship the adoptee acquires the rights of ordinary natural child of the adoptors in the estate of the adoptor's collaterals or ascendants. This shows that the relationship of the adoptive parent and the keittima child is as complete as that between an ordinary natural child and his parent in regard to rights of the keittima child or of the adoptive parent in the matter of inheritance. For these reasons we decline to uphold the contention that the provisions of s. 28 of Book X of the Manukye have no application at all in the present case. In the result the decree of the District Court will be set aside and there will be a decree in favour of the plaintiff-appellant for one-third share of the properties mentioned in Schs. A and B attached to the plaint and to a one-sixth share of the properties mentioned in Schs. D and E. The appellant's costs of this appeal and of the suit, including the court-fees payable on the plaint and on the memorandum of appeal, shall be paid out of the estate of Maung Than Tun.

Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act (VII of 1936), s. 34—Notice under, correctly giving number of case to be stayed—Omission of one of two decree-holders and addition of one who was not judgment-debtor, whether affect validity of notice—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—In spite of notice under s. 34, Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act (VII of 1936), property of judgment-debtor sold—Judgment-debtor, if can apply under s. 47 for declaration that sale does not affect his title—High Court, if can interfere with decision in revision.

Where the notice under s. 34, Ben. Agri. Debtors Act correctly gives the number of the execution case which is to be stayed, an omission of one decree-holder and an addition of a person who was not a judgment-debtor are mere formal defects which can not possibly affect the validity of the notice.

Where in spite of the notice under s. 34, Ben. Agri. Debtors Act the executing Court has proceeded to execute the decree and property of the judgment-debtor is sold, the judgment-debtor is entitled to raise the question in an application under s. 47, Civil P. C., to ask for a declaration that the sale has not affected his title. The decision on that application would be appealable and it would not be open to High Court to interfere in revision.

C. Rule in the matter of application for setting aside the order of the Munsif, Second Court, at Perojpur (Bakerganj), dated August 10 and September 21, 1939.

Mr. Bhupendra Nath Das Gupta, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Satyendra Ch. Sen, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This rule has been obtained by the judgment-debtors and arises out of rent execution case No. 405 of 1939. During the course of the proceedings the petitioners applied to a Debt Settlement Board and a notice under s. 34, Ben. Agri. Debtors Act, reached the Court on July 21, 1939. The Munsif disregarded it and the proceedings went on. A sale was held on August 10, in spite of the protests of the petitioners and the property was purchased by opposite parties. No. 3 to 7. Petitioners then filed the application which has given rise to this rule. It was dismissed. The sale was eventually confirmed on September 23, and, as the price fetched was greater than the demand, the execution case was dismissed on full satisfaction. The case of the petitioners is extremely simple. Their contention is that the Munsif acted without jurisdiction in ignoring the notice from the Debt Settlement Board and that the sale held was a nullity. But difficulty arises as to the procedure which he should follow in order to obtain relief.

I am bound to say that I find some difficulty in understanding the reasons which induced the Munsif to ignore the notice. Under s. 55, Ben. Agri. Debtors Act, the Local Govt. may make rules to provide for the manner of giving notices under s. 34. Under those powers a form is prescribed, form No. 15, and the notice was in that form. The form correctly gives the number of the execution case which was to be stayed. There were two decree-holders, one of whom is a trustee for the other. The notice mentioned the name of the trustee only. There were two judgment-debtors, the present petitioners. The notice also mentions the name of another brother. In other words there was an omission of one decree-holder and an addition of a person who was not a judgment-debtor. These are mere formal defects which could not possibly affect the validity of the notice. It has not been and could not be suggested that there was any other pending case to which the notice really referred. There is no doubt whatever that the notice referred to this case and it was the duty of the Munsif to stay further proceedings. In dealing with the petitioners' application the learned Munsif had some difficulty in deciding whether it was an application under s. 47 or s. 151, Civil P. C., or whether it was an application in review. He finally decided that it was none of them and that the only course open to the petitioners was to move this Court.

The relief which I can now on this rule grant to the petitioners lies within a very narrow compass. They are certainly entitled to a stay of any further proceedings in connection with the execution. But that relief would be infructuous for two reasons. In the first place they want relief against the sale and in the second place there is nothing further to be stayed. The result is that no useful purpose would be served by staying further proceedings. It is impossible for me to give any relief with regard to the sale. The petitioners are certainly entitled to raise the question in an application under s. 47 to ask for a declaration that the sale has not affected their title. There can be no doubt that the application filed by them was one under that section. There was therefore an appeal to the District Court and it will not be open to this Court to interfere in revision. The second difficulty lies in the fact that the dispute is now not between the petitioners and the decree-holders but between the petitioners and a third person namely, the auction-purchaser. In that view they can only obtain relief in a regular suit. If however they are of the opinion that the application under s. 47 was competent their proper course is to appeal against the Munsif's decision. The rule is accordingly discharged. I make no order as to costs.

EMPLOYEE'S CO-OPERATIVE URBAN BANK, LTD.—RESPONDENT

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), ss. 49, 17, 60—Preference of one creditor over another—After-acquired property of insolvent—Payments by insolvent before adjudication to creditor without notice of insolvency, if protected—Prior to adjudication insolvent obtaining loan from bank and undertaking to pay in monthly instalments from salary—Insolvent authorising and requesting employer to pay instalments out of his salary—Completed assignment or charge, if created in favour of bank—Insolvent's adjudication, effect of, on contract—Amount ordered by Court under s. 60 (2), if vested in Official Assignee and balance, if belonged absolutely to insolvent—Official Receiver, if can recover amount paid to bank out of such balance—Rule for fixing amount under s. 60 (2).

The insolvency law aims at equal and rateable distribution of the property of the insolvent among the creditors who are entitled to prove their debts in insolvency without any preference of one creditor over another. The property of the insolvent comprises also what is known as the after-acquired property, and the payments made by the insolvent to any of his creditors will be protected provided they are made before his adjudication and the creditor has no notice of the insolvency. [p. 320, col. 1.]

Sometime before his adjudication, the insolvent got a loan from a bank during the pendency of a prior insolvency proceeding. The insolvent undertook to pay back the loan in monthly instalments out of his salary and authorized and requested his employer, the Railway Co., to pay the said instalments to the bank and the bank which had no notice of the insolvency as per contract continued to recover the instalments even after the adjudication, until the debt was fully recovered :

Held, (i) that on the date of the insolvency there was only an authority or direction and request by the debtor to the Railway Co., to pay a portion of his salary to the bank or at best a contract to assign the future salary as and when it was earned and that there was no completed assignment or charge. By the adjudication of the insolvent the contract was revoked and consequently the liability of the insolvent or his estate for breach of such contract was only in damages and the creditor was not entitled to enforce the transaction as against his subsequent salary, at any rate not against the assignee in bankruptcy. [p. 321, col. 1.]

[English case-law relied on.]

(ii) that although any dealing by the insolvent with reference to after-acquired property was protected if the assignee acted bona fide and paid value, no matter that he had knowledge of the insolvency, a distinction had been made between the insolvent's after-acquired property in general and his pays, salary or other income, by reason of the provisions contained in s. 60, Pres. Towns Insol. Act, and that only the amount ordered by the Court under s. 60 (2) vested in the Official Assignee; and the balance being at the absolute disposal of the insolvent, he was free to pay any one of his creditors in full and consequently the Official Receiver could not recover the amount paid by the insolvent to the bank out of such balance subsequent to his insolvency. Ex parte Huggins, In re Huggins (6), referred to. In re Shine, Ex parte Shine (7) and In the matter of C. M. J. Donaghue (8), relied on.

(iii) that the letter of the Official Assignee permitting the bank to collect the amount from the Railway Co. according to the contract amounted to a voluntary payment. [p. 323, col. 1.]

The first one hundred rupees of the insolvent's salary and a half of the excess over one hundred are exempt from attachment; and therefore there is no reason why the balance at least should not be required to be paid for the benefit of the creditors. That should be the ordinary rule in fixing the amount under s. 60 (2). [p. 323, col. 2.]

Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri, for the Petitioner (Official Assignee.)

Order.—This application has been taken out by the Official Assignee under s. 7, Presidency Towns Insol. Act, for an order directing the Secretary, the M. & S. M. Railway Employee's Co-operative Urban Bank, Ltd., to refund to him all sums recovered by the said bank by way of deduction from the salary of the first insolvent towards refund of the loan taken by the said insolvent from the bank. The facts are briefly as follows :

The first insolvent who was employed as a chargeman in the M. & S. M. Railway workshops, Perampur, was adjudicated on April 29, 1936. He was at that time drawing a salary of Rs. 202-8-0. Some time prior to his adjudication, i. e., on October 19, 1935 he obtained a loan of Rs. 1,500 from the bank during the pendency of a prior insolvency proceeding. The insolvent undertook to repay the loan in 36 monthly instalments of Rs. 41-10-0 each out of his salary and authorized and requested the M. & S. M. Railway Co., to pay the said instalments to the bank out of his salary and the bank was so recovering the loan from the monthly salary of the insolvent until April 1939, when the loan account was closed, and the sureties discharged.

The Official Assignee by his letter dated October 8, 1935, Ex. D-2, in the case, permitted the raising of the loan and by his letter dated November 15, 1937, Ex. D-1, addressed to the bank permitted it to recover the amount of the loan from the salary of the insolvent. The terms on which the loan was granted by the bank were, inter alia, that it should be guaranteed by two sureties and that the amount was recoverable from the borrower's salaries or any other money which might be due to him from the M. & S. M. Railway Co., who were authorized and requested to deduct the amount from out of his salary and to pay it over to the bank. Exhibit D-3, which is a form of Loans Passed Register, provides:

"I...the borrower hereby authorize and request the M. & S. M. Railway Co. Ltd., to deduct from my monthly salary or any other money that may be payable to me by the M. & S. M. Railway Co. Ltd., such instalment or instalments of principal of the loan, or interest due on such loan, or, any other sum or sums which the M. & S. M. Railway Employee's Co-operative Urban Bank, Ltd., Adam's Park, Madras, may claim as due from me to the said bank."

Exhibit D-5 which is the application for loan also contains a similar clause. The service agreement Ex. D-4 also contains a similar provision:

"I also agree to deductions from my salary or any other moneys payable to me by the company being made on account of dues to the M. & S. M. Railway Co-operative Society and the M. & S. M. Railway Employee's Co-operative Urban Bank for the use of railway schools and railway institutes for services rendered by railway medical officers and for diets supplied in railway hospitals."

Rule 44 of the bye-laws of the bank, Ex. D-6, provides:

"It shall be competent for the board of directors to refuse to grant a loan unless the appellant shall agree in writing to permit the officer disbursing the pay to deduct instalments from his monthly pay to discharge the whole or part of the loan."

Rule 48 provides:

"The amount of paid up share capital, deposit and any other money to the credit of a member or a past member shall be subject to a first charge in favour of the bank in respect of any moneys due to the bank from such member or past member."

The loan in question was not recovered as provided by this rule. On the above facts the questions that arise for consideration are: (1) What is the nature of the transaction between the insolvent and the M. & S. M. Railway Employee's Co-operative Urban Bank Ltd.? Whether the transaction amounts to an equitable charge or assignment in favour of the said bank, in respect of so much of the future salary of the insolvent as is necessary for the payment of the monthly instalments? (2) What, if any, is the effect of the insolvency of the debtor on the said transaction? (3) Whether in any event the bank having recovered the loan in pursuance of the agreement such payments are protected and the bank cannot be ordered to refund the amount recovered?

The contention of the bank is that the transaction amounted to an equitable charge or assignment in favour of the bank in respect of so much of the salary as was necessary to pay up the monthly instalments and interest thereon, and that the transaction was not in any way affected by the subsequent insolvency of the debtor. It was also contended that the salary of the insolvent did not vest in the Official Assignee in the absence of an order of Court made under s. 60, Presidency Towns Insol. Act, that the insolvent was at liberty to deal with it in any manner he pleased and that in any case the Official Assignee having permitted the raising of the loan and the recovery thereof from out of the insolvent's salary and the recovery having been made with the full consent of the insolvent and the Official Assignee and in pursuance of an agreement with the insolvent authorizing such recovery, it was no longer open to the Official Assignee to claim a refund of the amount. It was stated that the bank had no notice of the insolvency till September 12, 1939 and that it acted perfectly bona fide.

Before proceeding to deal with the various points it will be useful to notice the provisions of the Presidency Towns Insol. Act which have a bearing on the said points and the general scheme of the Act. The policy of the insolvency law is equal distribution of the assets of the insolvent among the creditors who are entitled to prove their debts in insolvency, and it expressly provides against preference of one creditor to another. Section 17 of the Act lays down that the property of the insolvent shall vest in the Official Assignee and shall become divisible among his creditors and that thereafter, no creditor to whom the insolvent is indebted in respect of any debt provable in insolvency, shall during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings have any remedy against the property of the insolvent, in respect of the debt. It saves the right of the secured creditor to realize or otherwise deal with his security in any manner.

Section 49 provides for the distribution of the property of the insolvent and lays down that all debts shall rank equally between themselves and shall be paid rateably "and without any preference." Section 52 defines the property of the insolvent and it comprises all such property as may belong to or be vested in the insolvent at the commencement of the insolvency or may be acquired by or devolve on him before his discharge.

Section 57 protects bona fide transactions and saves any payment by the insolvent to any of his creditors and any contract or dealing by or with the insolvent for valuable consideration, provided that any such transaction takes place before the date of the order of adjudication and the person with whom such transaction takes place has not at the time notice of the presentation of any insolvency petition by or against the debtor. Section 60 deals with the pay or salary or other income of the insolvent and cl. 2 provides :

"Where an insolvent is in receipt of a salary or income other than aforesaid, the Court may at any time after adjudication and from time to time, make such order as it thinks just for the payment to the Official Assignee, for distribution among the creditors of so much of such salary or income as may be liable to attachment, the execution of a decree or of any portion thereof."

It will be apparent from the foregoing provisions that the insolvency law aims at equal and rateable distribution of the property of the insolvent among the creditors who are entitled to prove their debts in insolvency without any preference of one creditor over another, that the property of the insolvent comprises also what is known as the after-acquired property, and that payments made by the insolvent to any of his creditors will be protected provided they are made before his adjudication and the creditor has no notice of the insolvency. I shall now proceed to deal with the several questions that arise in the case in the order set out by me. First, as regards the nature of the transaction between the insolvent, the bank and the M. & S. M. Railway Co., the question is whether an equitable charge or assignment is created in respect of the insolvent's future salary. This depends upon the construction of Exs. D-3, D-4, D-5 and D-6. Exhibits D-3 and D-5 employ practically the same language and they contain an authorization and request to the M. & S. M. Railway Co., to deduct the instalments from out of the insolvent's salary every month. By the service agreement, Ex. D-6, the insolvent agrees generally to such deductions. The documents do not contain any promise to the bank to pay the loan out of the future salary. They merely authorize and request the M. & S. M. Railway Co., to withhold the amount of the monthly instalments and to pay it over to the bank. Reference may be made to r. 48 of the bye-laws of the bank, Ex. D-5, which expressly provides for a charge on certain amounts standing to the credit of the insolvent, viz., share capital, deposit, etc. The language of r. 44 is different and does not like r. 48 provide in express terms that a charge is created. But apart from the contrast with the language of r. 48, and taking r. 44 by itself, it does not appear that the documents disclose anything more than a "pay order." Rule 44 speaks of an agreement in writing to permit the officer disbursing the pay to deduct the instalments from his monthly pay to discharge the whole or part of the loan. The expression "to permit" is significant and that taken along with the expression "authorize and request" in Exs. D-3 and D-5 lends support to the view that the transaction amounts to nothing more than a mere authority or request by the debtor to his employees to pay the bank.

The decision in Ex parte Hall; In re Whiting (1) may be usefully referred to in this connection. In that case a customer borrowed £200 from his bankers on an agreement that the loan should be paid out of the rent of a farm which would become due to him in Michaelmas and he gave a letter to the bank addressed to the tenant by which he authorized and requested the tenant to pay £200 to the bankers when the Michaelmas rent became due. The bankers forwarded the letter to the tenant. Meanwhile, the customer was adjudicated bankrupt. It was held in that case that the letter amounted only to a revocable authority to pay the rent to the bankers and that it was revoked by the bankruptcy. Jessel M. R. says in that case:

"The only thing we can look at is the letter itself which authorizes and requests the tenants to pay £200 to the bankers. It amounts to nothing more than a request to pay the bankers. On the face of it, it is simply an authority revocable at any time and of course it was revoked by the bankruptcy."

There is also another aspect of the matter which may be considered, viz., that the agreement in the case does not relate to a fund in existence but to a future contingent fund which may or may not come into existence even at a future date. It has no doubt been held that a promise to pay a debt out of a specific fund in existence at the time, whether payable in presenti or in futuro, amounts to an equitable assignment of the fund so as to entitle the assignee of the fund to claim payment out of that fund. But that principle applies only to cases where the fund was in existence on the date of the assignment though payable on a future date and will not apply to a future contingent fund. "A man cannot in equity, any more than at law, assign what has no existence:"

see Collyer v. Isaacs (2). It has been held in Field v. Megaw (3) that a promise to pay out of moneys when received, i. e. promise to pay when the debtor receives a debt due to him from a third person, does not constitute an equitable assignment so as to charge the debt in the hands of such third person. I, therefore, hold there was no charge or completed assignment in this case though "a man cannot in equity, any more than at law, assign what has no existence," he "can contract to assign property which is to come into existence in the future, and when it has come into existence equity, treating as done that which ought to be done, fastens upon that property and the contract to assign thus becomes a complete assignment."

That is, in the case of future property, though the assignment may not operate in presenti, it may operate as and when the property comes to existence. Until then the assignment constitutes only a contract in respect of the future property and equity attaches to it as soon as the property comes into existence, when the contract to assign becomes a completed assignment. As was observed by Jessel M. R. in Collyer v. Isaacs (2):

"The assignment in fact constituted only a contract to give him the after-acquired chattels and until the property comes into existence the contract remains only a contract by which the party entering into it will be bound, and when the property comes into existence it is a contract for the breach of which he will incur liability."

In that case there was a bill of a sale by the debtor transferring for value to a creditor all the chattels at his place of business and all other chattels which may at any time be brought thereon. The creditor did not prove in bankruptcy but claimed certain chattels which were brought into the premises after the insolvent's adjudication. To the same effect are the following observations of Lindley, L. J., in Ex parte Nichols; In re Jones (4) which was a case of an assignment by a trader of the future receipts of his business:

"It is an agreement to assign to Younger & Co., not property of Jones and Barber, but money which would become due to them under the arrangement between them and the Railway Company. It is a mere agreement for the breach of which no doubt an action would lie."

If therefore a person agrees to pay his creditor out of his future salary or income which is contingent on his earning the same, the transaction amounts to a mere contract to assign until the salary or income comes into existence and will become complete only after the salary becomes due or after the income accrues and not before. Applying that principle to the present case, it will be seen that in respect of salary accruing subsequent to insolvency there was only a contract to assign as and when it was earned and that there was no completed assignment on the date of the adjudication. If that is so, the liability of the insolvent or his estate for breach of such contract will be only in damages and the creditor will not be entitled to enforce the transaction as against his subsequent salary, at any rate not against the assignee in bankruptcy.

The result of the foregoing discussion is that on the date of the insolvency there was only an authority or direction and request by the debtor to the M. & S. M. Railway Co., to pay a portion of his salary to the bank or at best a contract to assign the future salary as and when it was earned. There was no completed assignment or charge. What then is the effect of the insolvency on such direction to pay or contract to assign? Is it sufficient to give the creditor a right to the fund which will prevail over the right of the Official Assignee? As was pointed out in Ex parte Hall; In re Whiting, (1), already, referred to it is simply an authority revocable at any time and of course it was revoked by the bankruptcy. Treating it as a contract to assign, even then, as pointed in Collyer v. Isaacs (2).

"when the party who contracts becomes bankrupt the liability in respect of the contract is a liability provable in bankruptcy."

The observations of Lindley, L. J. in Ex parte Nichols; In re Jones (4), may also be usefully referred to:

"It is mere agreement for the breach of which no doubt an action would lie but which cannot prevail against the title of the trustee so far as regards payments received by the Railway Company under it after his title accrued."

To the same effect are the observations of Lopes, L. J. in Wilmot v. Alton (5).

"If the amount in question had been a debt which had accrued due at the date of the bankruptcy the case would have been different. But that was not so. In order to determine the right which was assigned to the plaintiff, it is necessary to consider the terms of the contract. Having regard to those terms it appears to me clear that there was only a debt which might or might not become due to the assignor in future according as the conditions of the contract were or were not fulfilled. That being so the case appears to me to come directly within the decision in Ex parte Nichols; In re Jones (4)."

The position is well summed up by Mulla in his book on the Law of Insolvency at

p. 348, s. 520:

"The effect of the subsequent insolvency of an assignor of future or after-acquired property may now be considered. If after-acquired property comes into existence prior to the insolvency of the assignor, the equitable assignment is complete and the Official Assignee will take the property subject to the assignment. If the property comes into existence subsequently to the insolvency and before the discharge of the insolvent, the Official Assignee will take the property subject to the assignment if the right of the assignor to recover that which is claimed by the assignee had become complete prior to the insolvency but not if the right had not become complete before then. In the latter case the assignee has no right to the property. Thus if a debt which is to fall due at a future time is assigned and the debt only falls due after insolvency the assignee has no right to it."

This takes me to the next point, viz., how far the insolvent was competent to deal with his subsequent salary in the absence of an assignment or charge in favour of the bank and how far can the bank claim protection in respect of the payments made to it from out of the subsequent salary. It was argued that the insolvent was absolutely entitled to his after-acquired properties and can deal with and dispose of them as he pleased unless and until the Official Assignee intervened and that all dealings and transactions had or entered into by the insolvent before such intervention were valid and cannot be questioned by the Official Assignee or by the creditors. It was further argued that so far as the salary was concerned, under the special provisions of s. 60, Presidency Towns Insol. Act, it did not vest at all in the Official Assignee in the absence of an order of Court fixing such portion of the salary as it thinks fit for payment to the Official Assignee for distribution among his creditors, and that at any rate when an order has been made by the Court fixing what proportion of the salary should be paid to the Official Assignee month after month the balance of the salary was at the absolute disposal of the insolvent and that the Official Assignee cannot claim anything more. The law in regard to after-acquired properties is that any dealing by the insolvent with reference to such property will be protected if the assignee acts bona fide and pays value, no matter that he has knowledge of the insolvency. In the present case, it cannot be denied that the bank had paid value. It is also claimed by the bank that it had no notice of the insolvency until April 1939 and that it advanced the loan in the ordinary course of business prior to the insolvency. The averments are not controverted on behalf of the Official Assignee.

We have next to consider whether the payments made to the bank are protected. No doubt a distinction has been made between the insolvent's after-acquired property in general and his pay, salary or other income, by reason of the provisions contained in s. 60 which corresponds to s. 51, English Bankruptcy Act of 1914, and s. 53, Bankruptcy Act of 1883. What then is the position of the Official Assignee and the creditors with reference to his subsequent salary? Does the whole of it vest in the Official Assignee subject to the insolvent's retaining a sufficient portion necessary for the maintenance of himself and his family or is it only so much of it as is liable to attachment in execution of a decree which vests in him or is it that no part of it vests in the Official Assignee until an order is made by the Court fixing so much of it as it considers proper? Judicial opinion on the subject is not uniform. It was held in Ex parte Huggins; In re Huggins (6), by the Court of Appeal on a construction of the Bankruptcy Act of 1869 that the effect of ss. 15 and 17 was to vest in the trustee all property including those dealt with by ss. 87 to 95 which relate to salaries, income, etc., (corresponding to s. 60, Presidency Towns Insol. Act,) but subject to the qualifications and exceptions introduced by those sections. But the decision in In re Shine; Ex parte Shine (7), seems to point in the other direction. That was a case in which an actor agreed to act in a theatre on a salary of £30 a week payable weekly and became bankrupt. He entered into an agreement with the theatre manager that he should retain £90 of his salary and discharge all his debts. The question was raised as to how for the arrangement was operative as against the trustee in bankruptcy. In upholding the arrangement, Esher, M. R. says:

"With regard to the particular salary or income which does not pass to the trustee the bankrupt had a right, notwithstanding the receiving order to make any bargain he chose."

Bowen, L. J., remarks dealing with s. 53 (2):

"Until the sub-section was put in force against him by diverting to the use and advantage of the creditors that which was prima facie up to that moment his own, he had a perfect right, although he was bankrupt, to make any bargain he pleased with any person as to the remuneration which he was to receive for his personal services."

The only Indian decision directly bearing on the point is the decision of a single Judge in In the matter of C. M. J. Donaghue (8), (6) (1882) 21 Ch. D 85; 51 L J Ch. 935; 47 L T 659; 30 W R 878.

(7) (1892) 1 Q B 522; 61 L J Q B 253; 66 L T 146; 40 W R 386; 9 Morrell 40.

(8) 19 B 232.

which turned on the construction of 11 and 12 Vict., Chap. 21, ss. 7 and 27. It lays down that the Official Assignee is not entitled to the subsequent salary or income except by means of an order obtained under s. 27 (corresponding to s. 60). I am of opinion, that only so much of the salary as is ordered by the Court under s. 60 (2) to be paid to the Official Assignee vests in him. In this case an order having been made under s. 60 (2) of the Act, only the amount ordered by the Court vests in the Official Assignee; at any rate the balance was at the absolute disposal of the insolvent. Assuming that the rest of the income did not vest in the Official Assignee, can the insolvent pay one creditor in full out of his subsequent salary? No doubt, the insolvency law aims at equal and rateable distribution of the assets of the insolvent among his creditors without any preference of one creditor over another. The bank in the absence of any assignment or charge is only in the position of an ordinary creditor entitled to prove in the insolvency for its debt. It is opposed to the very spirit of the insolvency law that a creditor who is entitled merely to share equally with the other creditors in the distribution of the assets of the insolvent should receive payment in full of his amount. He cannot be allowed to have any such advantage by any act of the insolvent. But the allocation under s. 60, cl. (2) of the Act, has been made and the rest of the salary is absolutely at the disposal of the insolvent. If he had spent the whole of it himself the Official Assignee cannot complain. On this ground, I think the Official Assignee cannot recover from the respondent the moneys in question.

There is one other aspect, viz., that the letter of the Official Assignee Ex. D-1, may amount to a voluntary payment. By this letter the Official Assignee permitted the bank to collect the amount from the Railway Company and the bank did so. Suppose the Official Assignee had collected the whole amount and that he afterwards paid the sums to the bank they would be voluntary payments which the Official Assignee cannot recover. I am of opinion, in this case the Official Assignee's conduct does bring the case within the rule that a voluntary payment cannot be recovered.

The allocation was evidently fixed very low by the master on the representation that the payment to the respondent bank should be taken into account when fixing the allocation. I have held that the respondent had no preferential right to be paid these sums from the salary. The first one hundred rupees and a half of the excess over one hundred are exempt from attachment; and, there is no reason why the balance at least should not be required to be paid for the benefit of the creditors. That should be the ordinary rule in fixing the amount under s. 60 (2). In the result this application is dismissed but without costs as the respondent has failed in many of its contentions. The Official Assignee will have his costs out of the estate.

YIN WIN LIN AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

Res judicata—Previous decisions as to existence of law or custom of persons domiciled in Burma whether binding on Courts in Burma as res judicata.

No number of previous decisions as to the existence of some law or custom of persons domiciled in Burma are binding on the Courts in Burma in the sense that they are res judicata; all that can be said is that a long line of decisions is always taken judicial notice of by the Court, and to that extent the law is to be regarded as settled law; but if any party so chooses, the question can always be reargued and an issue must formally be framed.

F. A. against the decree of the District Court, Myingyan, dated February 28, 1939.

Messrs. Hay and U Chan Htoon, for the Appellants.

Dr. Ba Han, for the Respondents.

Mya Bu, J.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen relates to a piece of immovable property which formed part of the estate of Yin Kyaung Yo, a Chinese Buddhist who died at Myingyan in August 1927. Yin Kyaung Yo had been married to Ma Kyin Sein, a Sino-Burmese lady, and lived with her at Myingyan, while he had a Chinese wife in China. On his death, Yin Kyaung Yo left him surviving Ma Kyin Sein as his widow but no issue whatever. He also had a brother Yin Kyaung Sint, who lived in Burma. Plaintiff-appellant No. 1 is the only surviving child of Yin Kyaung Sint by his first wife, while plaintiff-appellants Nos. 2 and 3 are the sons of Yin Kyaung Sint by his second wife. After the death of Yin Kyaung Yo in 1927 the property in suit fell into the hands of Ma Kyin Sein who subsequently sold it to defendants-respondents Nos. 2 and 3 by a registered deed of sale in July 1935. The suit of the plaintiff-appellants is for a decree for possession of that property, or in the alternative for pre-emption of the sale.

When it was first instituted it was by plaintiff-appellant No. 1 alone alleging that he had been adopted by Yin Kyaung Yo as a son and that under the Chinese Customary Law, by which the question of succession to the estate of Yin Kyaung Yo was governed, he was the sole heir to the exclusion of even the widow Ma Kyin Sein. The suit was filed on May 9, 1936. On March 1, 1937 judgment was delivered in First Appeal No. 93 of 1936 Khoo Soo Cheng v. Ta Ma Shwe Zin (1) of this Court where it was held to the effect that on death of a Chinese Buddhist domiciled in Burma and dying intestate a sole surviving son was entitled to succeed to the exclusion of the widow; that where the deceased left no son but an adopted son, the adopted son would have the same right as a natural son; and further that a son of the deceased's next younger brother must be adopted and that if such a nephew had not already been adopted, by the deceased, he should be deemed to have been so adopted and was thus entitled to all the rights of an adopted son and consequently of a natural son. After the passing of that judgment plaintiff-appellant No. 1 had the plaint amended by bringing on the record his two younger half brothers, Yin Win Chi and Yin Win Yin, as plaintiffs, stating that in the event of the Court holding that the alleged adoption of Yin Win Lin by Yin Kyaung Yo was not established, plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3, or any one of them, might be declared to be the heir of Yin Kyaung Yo, and was thus entitled to the estate of Yin Kyaung Yo to the exclusion of the widow.

By their written statements, the defendants denied the alleged adoption of Yin Win Lin, and also denied that the Chinese Customary Law governed the question of succession to the estate of Yin Kyaung Yo, or that under that law an adopted son is entitled to inherit the estate or that nephews, such as the plaintiffs, were to be deemed to have been adopted sons, or were entitled qua adoptee or potential adoptee or qua nephews to inherit the estate. The defendants further averred that Yin Kyaung Sint and plaintiff No. 1 Yin Win Lin, having taken part in the settlement under which Ma Kyin Sein received the property in suit, plaintiff No. 1 was estopped from denying Ma Kyin Sein's title to it. Upon the pleadings the following issues were inter alia framed:

"4. Was the succession to the estate of the late Yin

Kyaung Yo governed by Chinese Customary Law or by Burmese Buddhist Law?

5. Was plaintiff No. 1 adopted by the late Yin Kyaung Yo with a view to inherit his estate? If so, is he the sole heir to the estate of the late Yin Kyaung Yo? Or in the alternative are the plaintiffs the heirs to the estate of Yin Kyaung Yo to the exclusion of defendant No. 1?

6. Was such settlement acted upon and acquiesced in by the plaintiff? If so, are the plaintiffs estopped from questioning the sale of the suit properties by defendant No. 1 to defendants Nos. 2 and 3?"

Certain witnesses were called to prove issues Nos. 4 and 5, the first two set out above; but when the Court delivered judgment no substantial reference was made to the evidence of witnesses on issue No. 4 and the learned District Judge, following the principles enunciated in the judgment of this Court in First Appeal No. 93 of 1936 Khoo Soo Cheng v. Ta Ma Shwe Zin (1), held that Chinese Customary Law was applicable. On the issue as to adoption the finding of the learned District Judge was that the adoption was not proved. He further observed:

"I do not think that all three plaintiffs, as nephews, can be heirs to the estate of the deceased Yin Kyaung Yo. According to the passage from Von Mollendorf, which has already been quoted, to the effect that if the younger brother has only one son he has to marry a second legal wife and give the first-born son of that marriage to his elder brother in adoption, plaintiff No. 2 Yin Win Chi, the eldest son of Yin Kyaung Sint's second marriage, is the person entitled to be adopted and succeed to the deceased Yin Kyaung Yoe's estate. But there is no estate of Yin Kyaung Yoe in existence as it has been divided up by a family arrangement in which Yin Kyaung Sint, the father of plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3, participated and can be said to have acted and claimed a share in their interests."

and held that not only Yin Win Lin but the two minors Yin Win Chi and Yin Win Yin are entitled to no relief whatsoever. The District Court delivered this judgment on February 28, 1939, and the plaintiffs filed this appeal on May 26, 1939.

The judgment of this Court in First Appeal No. 93 of 1936 Khoo Soo Cheng v. Ta Ma Shwe Zin (1) was appealed against to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council; Tan Ma Shwe Zin v. Koo Soo Chong (2) at p. 568 and their Lordships of the Privy Council, in the judgment delivered by Sir George Rankin on June 22, 1939, reversed the appellate decree of this Court. In the course of the judgment it was observed:

"In the present case it is not in dispute that the propositus Khoo Boon Tin and his wife Tan Ma Thin were Chinese Buddhists and that unless the plaintiff can show that the law applicable in Burma to them in questions of succession is Chinese Customary Law his suit cannot succeed. Their Lordships are of opinion that the Burmese Buddhist Law is the law applicable to them, and it is not contended that according to that law the plaintiff has any claim to be the heir of either.

Their Lordships are further of opinion that on the evidence adduced in the present case it is not proved that according to Chinese Customary Law the plaintiff as nephew would be entitled although not in fact adopted to succeed as heir of Khoo Boon Tin in preference to the widow. No reliable expert witness was called to speak to this question, and though the book relied on by the Division Bench may have been admissible under s. 60, Evi. Act the conclusion drawn from its contents is drawn precariously and from material both obscure and inadequate. The order of succession which is essential to the plaintiff's case is not established by the evidence either as a matter of foreign law or as a custom and his suit must fail.¹

In these circumstances when this case is called on for hearing it is urged on behalf of the appellant that before this Court considers the evidence as to the alleged adoption and the case with reference to the other issues, they may be permitted to adduce further evidence specifically on the question as to whether the Chinese Customary Law is applicable to the case or not and, if so, what that law is with reference to the rights of nephews or adopted sons or persons entitled to be adopted as against the widow of the deceased. Whether this prayer should be allowed or not depends on whether the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council regarded it as a concluded matter of law that to the estates of Chinese Buddhists domiciled in Burma the Burmese Buddhist Law, and not the Chinese Customary Law, is applicable or whether the judgment of their Lordships still leaves room for evidence to be adduced upon this point as a question of fact. In view of the wording of s. 13 (1) itself of the Burma Laws Act (XIII of 1898) we are of the opinion that all that their Lordships intended to lay down—and actually did lay down—was that prima facie inheritance to the estate of a Chinaman who was domiciled in Burma and was a Buddhist was governed by the Buddhist Law of Burma, and that the burden of proving any special custom or usage opposed to the ordinary rules of the Burmese Buddhist Law of inheritance was on the person asserting that variation. Their Lordships found that in that case there was insufficient evidence to prove any Customary Chinese Law opposed to the ordinary rules of the Burmese Buddhist Law of inheritance. In our opinion the head-note of the Rangoon Law Reports of that ruling of their Lordships at p. 548 of 1939 Rangoon Reports correctly represents the trend of that decision.

The learned Advocate for the respondents in opposing this prayer submitted that the question as to whether the Chinese Customary Law was applicable or not was expressly put in issue, and that the plaintiffs therefore had adequate opportunity of adducing such evidence that they might deem desirable, and do not deserve any further opportunity to be given for this purpose. It is true that an issue was expressly framed as is seen in issue No. 4 and in the second part of issue No. 5, but these issues had to be formally framed because there were allegations in the pleadings and denials of those allegations in the written statement. It is, in our opinion, a correct statement of the law to say that no number of previous decisions as to the existence of some law or custom of persons domiciled in this country are binding on the Courts in this country in the sense that they are res judicata; all that can be said is that a long line of decisions is always taken judicial notice of by the Court, and to that extent the law is to be regarded as settled law; but if any party so chooses, the question can always be reargued and an issue must formally be framed.

It had been held consistently in the Court of this province since the case in Fone Lane v. Ma Gyee (3), a decision dating from 1903, with one or two exceptions, until the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Tan Ma Shwe Zin v. Koo Soo Chong (2), that Chinese Customary Law was the law applicable to such cases of inheritance or succession in Burma amongst members of the Chinese community domiciled in Burma. Those cases are as follow: Fone Lane v. Ma Gyee (3), Ma Pwa v. Yu Lwai (4), Kyin Wet v. Ma Gyok (5), Ma Shwe Thit v. Maung Kyin (6), Maung Po Maung v. Ma Pyit Ma (7), Ma Sein v. Ma Pan Ngun (8), Chan Pyu v. Saw Sin (9), Tan Ma Shwe Zin v. Tan Ma Ngwe Zin (10), Ma Sein Byu v. Khoo Soon Thye (11), Ah Pein v. M. C. Deva (12) and Chan Thwin v. Khoo Zin Nee (13). In all these cases Chinese Customary Law was applied. The sole exceptions are Apana Charan v. Shive Mu (14), where it was said that a Chinese Buddhist Law, if any would apply and not Chinese Customary Law; Ma Thein Shin v. Ah Sein (15), where it was said that justice, equity and good conscience should be the rule of decision; and the Full Bench case in Phan Tiyoek v. Lim Kyin Kauk (16) where the Succession Act was said to be the law applicable.

Considering the state of the law prevailing, or thought to be prevailing by the parties, at the time the parties adduced evidence in this case, it is not surprising that the evidence on both sides was scanty. There was evidence given by a considerable number of witnesses on behalf of the plaintiffs to say that Chinese Customary Law applied. The knowledge of some of those witnesses of the Chinese Customary Law was not very extensive and the number of instances which they could give where Chinese Customary Law had in fact been applied was not very large. On the other hand the defence took the matter even more lightly. There was hardly any cross-examination and the evidence in rebuttal was negligible. Both parties then took issues Nos. 4 and 5 (except on the question as to the alleged adoption) lightly, and it would not be fair to either side, or a satisfactory way of determining this suit, if it had to be determined on that evidence and if the parties were not allowed a further opportunity of adducing evidence, now that the legal position has been so changed by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council which was only announced after the appeal in the present suit was filed. For these reasons, we consider that this is a fit case in which we should require further evidence on these two matters in issue, namely (1) whether the Chinese Customary Law is the law applicable to this case, and (2) if so, what that Chinese Customary Law is. The case is therefore sent back to the trial Court in order that the Court may give the parties further opportunity of adducing such evidence that they desire on these matters in issue. The Judge of the District Court will resubmit this evidence with his finding by November 2, of this year. Costs of the present hearing to be costs in the cause.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT

Criminal Appeal No. 513 of 1940

December 4, 1940

BEAUMONT, C. J. AND SEN, J.

MOHANLAL BABABHAI—ACCUSED—

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 103—Panchnama—Identification parade—Police relying on panchnama must call panch to prove it—Object of calling panch witness—Independent evidence that identification parade was properly and fairly held—Panchnama can be used only to refresh panch's memory—Police Officer cannot bring panchnama on record in his evidence in chief—Police holding panchnama but not offering to call panch—Adverse inference against them can be drawn.

If the Police relied on a panchnama, they must call a panch to prove it, the practice of allowing a panchnama to be put in by a Police witness is wrong. The object of having panch witnesses is to provide evidence which is independent of the Police. In searches under Chap. VII, Criminal P. C., or the City of Bombay Police Act, it is necessary to call panchas, but s. 103 (2) of the Code provides that they need not be called as witnesses unless they are specially summoned. That does not mean that the panchnama can be used if no panch is called. Apart from searches, it is, of course, not a rule of law or practice, that Police evidence must be corroborated; but in case of an identification parade, and where it is of vital consequence to show that the accused was duly identified, it is obviously desirable, to have some independent evidence that the parade was properly and fairly held. 136 Ind. Cas. 868 (1), relied on. [p. 328, col. 1.]

The panchnama is merely a record of what a panch sees, and the only use to which it can properly be put is that when the panch goes into the witness-box and swears as to what he saw, the panchnama can be used as a contemporary record to refresh his memory. But a Police Officer is not entitled to give evidence of what the panch told him, that he saw, and that is what it comes to if a Police Officer is allowed to put in the panchnama. A Police witness may state that he held a panchnama and offer to produce the record if the accused asks for it, but he cannot bring it on record in his evidence-in-chief. If the Police hold a panchnama, and do not offer to call the panch, an inference may be drawn against them from the fact that the panch is not submitted for cross-examination. The putting in of a panchnama without calling the panch is not only an infringement of the rules of evidence against the admission of hearsay evidence, but it is unfair to the accused, because it enables the Police to get the advantage of evidence in corroboration without putting that evidence to the test of cross-examination. Cr. A. from conviction and sentence passed by the Presidency Magistrate, Fourth Court, Bombay.

Messrs. M. R. Vidyarthi and S. A. Kher, for the Accused.

Mr. R. A. Jahagirdar, Govt. Pleader, for the Crown.

Beaumont, C. J.—This is an appeal by the accused against his conviction under ss. 454 and 380, I. P. C., by the Presidency

Magistrate, Fourth Court, Bombay. The story of the complainant is that the accused was brought to his flat by a mutual friend on September 14, 1939, and on the 18th the complainant went to Surat, and left the accused and a relation of the complainant named Kodarlal in the flat. Part of the flat was locked up; the rest was left open. The complainant returned to Bombay on October 23, and then found the locks on the doors of the flat and cupboards broken, and some of his goods missing. He went round to the Police at once and gave information. He gave a list of the articles which, he said, he had lost, which were articles of no great value, worth about Rs. 50 or Rs. 60 and he stated that he had no suspicion against anybody. Police Sub-Inspector Harris went round to the flat and found that things were disturbed, and it looked, as if there had been house-breaking. The complainant says, and that no doubt is true, that the Police asked him not to touch anything because they hoped to find some fingerprints. The next day, the complainant says, after the Police allowed him to touch his things he looked into a secret drawer, and then discovered for the first time that he had lost some pearl necklaces and pearl bangles of the value of over Rs. 7,000. He says that when he went to Surat he left these articles in the secret drawer, and having discovered their loss, he made a supplemental statement to the Police. The accused could not be found for some time, and eventually on March 1, 1940, he surrendered to the Police, and he is charged with having stolen all these articles.

The learned Magistrate seems to have accepted the whole of the complainant's story, but a good deal of it seems to me to be, on the face of it, absurd. The complainant is a gentleman who has suffered from thieves before, according to his own story, and it is inconceivable that he would go off for a month to Surat, leaving valuable jewels in his flat in some secret drawer, the secret of which could no doubt be discovered by any thief, and with the accused whom, he says, he knew nothing about in occupation of his flat. If he had done so incredibly foolish a thing, I am quite certain that on his return from Surat and on discovering that his flat had been broken into, the first thing he would have done would have been to go to the secret drawer and find out whether the pearls were there. It is absurd to suggest that he never looked into the secret drawer until the next day, and only then discovered the loss of these pearls of very substantial value. I am perfectly certain that the pearls were not lost at all; but, on the other hand, probably somebody did break into the flat. I should think it unlikely that the whole thing was stagemanaged, although that is conceivable. There is no doubt that when the Police went to the flat, it showed signs of having been broken open.

Now, the evidence against the accused is, first of all, that he was admittedly left in the flat. He says that he remained there for some time. He wrote two letters, which are in evidence, asking the complainant for money to enable him to continue to live in the flat, and as the complainant did not send any money, he says that he left, throwing the key into the flat through a window. At any rate he was at one time in charge of the flat, and the evidence that he committed the house-breaking is that of two witnesses, Gopal, who was a bhaiya employed on the first floor of Kansara Chawl, the complainant's first being on the third floor, and a locksmith named Hasanali. Gopal says that he had seen the accused and a ghati, who was a servant of the complainant, and whom he had known as a servant of the complainant for seven months previously. He saw these two people removing various articles from the flat, and he was asked by Hasanali, the locksmith, whether these two people were servants of the complainant, because they had asked him to break open certain locks in the flat. Hasanali says that the ghati called him up to the complainant's flat, where was the accused, and they asked him to make keys for some of the locks, but he said that he could not do that, but would break them open, and accordingly, he says, he did break open the locks. Now, if the accused and the ghati got the locks broken open, it is no doubt a fair inference that they probably stole anything which was stolen. But I may point out that it is not the usual practice for house-breakers to send for an expert locksmith to help them in their work. I find it very difficult to suppose that, if they were minded to break open the locks, two men would not have done it without seeking the assistance of somebody who could afterwards identify them. But it is obvious that the value of the evidence of these two witnesses, assuming their main story to be true, must depend on their identification of the accused. So far as Gopal is concerned, his evidence is obviously wrong in respect of the ghati, because the complainant says that he never had a ghati in his employ, and yet Gopal says that he knew him as the employee of the complainant for seven months. It is difficult to see why, if the evidence as to the ghati is entirely false, the evidence as to the accused should be accepted as entirely true. There is no such criticism of Hasanali's evidence, but he had not seen the accused before and the evidence of identification of the accused is most unsatisfactory. Deputy Inspector Kale, who was in charge of the case, says that he held an identification parade at which Hasanali and Gopal at once identified the accused, and he then produced a panchnama of the identification parade, which was put in as Ex. E.

Now, this Court pointed out some years ago in Emperor v. Rustam Cursetji Lam (1), that if the Police relied on a panchnama, they must call a panch to prove it, and that the practice of Presidency Magistrates in allowing a panchnama to be put in by a Police witness was wrong. The object of having panch witnesses is to provide evidence which is independent of the Police. In searches under Chap. VII, Criminal P. C. or the City of Bombay Police Act, it is necessary to call panchas, but s. 103 (2) of the Code provides that they need not be called as witnesses unless they are specially summoned. That does not mean that the panchnama can be used if no panch is called. Apart from searches, it is, of course, not a rule of law of practice that Police evidence must be corroborated, but where one is dealing with an identification parade, and where it is of vital consequence to show that the accused was duly identified, it is obviously desirable, as the Police recognize themselves, to have some independent evidence that the parade was properly and fairly held, because there is nothing easier than for the Police to stage an unfair identification parade, in which the witness is shown the accused before he identifies. I do not suggest that the Police often hold unfair identification parade, but it is obviously desirable that there should be independent evidence to show that a parade has been properly held, and Deputy Inspector Kale recognized that in this case and summoned panchas, but if the prosecution wish to prove by independent testimony what happened at the parade, they must call the independent witness.

The panchnama is merely a record of what a panch sees, and the only use to which it can properly be put is that when the panch goes into the witness box and swears as to what he saw, the panchnama can be used as a contemporary record to refresh his memory. But a Police Officer is not entitled to give evidence of what the panch told him, that he saw, and that is what it comes to if a Police Officer is allowed to put in the panchnama. A Police witness may state that he held a panchnama and offer to produce the record if the accused asks for it, but he cannot bring it on record in his evidence-in-chief. If the Police hold a panchnama, and do not offer to call the panch, an inference may be drawn against them from the fact that the panch is not submitted for cross-examination. The putting in of a panchnama without calling the panch is not only an infringement of the rules of evidence against the admission of hearsay evidence, but it is unfair to the accused, because it enables the Police to get the advantage of evidence in corroboration without putting that evidence to the test of cross-examination. Such cross-examination might show that the panch was nothing but a Police agent and that his evidence is worthless. If the practice of allowing the prosecution to put in a panchnama without calling the panch is still in force despite the decision of this Court, I hope that Magistrates will see that it is stopped. Having regard to the extreme importance in this case of the identification of the accused by Gopal and Hasanali, and to the fact that evidence on this point was improperly admitted, the appeal must be allowed. I am not prepared to act on the uncorroborated testimony of the Police Officer as to what took place at this identification parade, particularly as evidence in corroboration was available and not called. The accused must therefore be acquitted. Fine, if paid, to be refunded.

L. P. A. against the judgment of Wadsworth, J., in C. M. A. No. 260 of 1938, dated August 25, 1939.

Messrs. K. Rajah Iyer and P. P. Ramabhadra Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. Ramaswamy Iyer, for the Respondents.

Leach, C. J.—The only question which arises in this appeal is whether a person who claims to come within s. 14, Lim. Act, has to show that in pursuing his remedy in other proceedings he acted in good faith or whether the burden of showing lack of good faith is on his opponent. The appellant obtained a decree on a promissory note against one Nataraja Pillai on October 22, 1930. On December 10, 1931, Nataraja Pillai sold certain immovable properties to the respondents. On August 12, 1932 the appellant attached these properties in execution of the decree which he had obtained on the promissory note and at the sale, which was held on January 15, 1935, he purchased the properties. When he desired to enter into possession he was obstructed by the respondents, who claimed title by reason of their purchase of the properties on December 10, 1931. On June 27, 1935 the appellant applied to the District Munsif of Manamadurai, in whose Court the execution proceedings had taken place, for an order against the respondents under O. XXI, r. 97, Civil P. C., requiring them to deliver possession to him. This application was dismissed by an order of the District Munsif passed on October 14, 1935. The appellant preferred an appeal to the Subordinate Judge of Sivaganga, who dismissed it on November 26, 1936, on the ground that the appellant's remedy was by suit and not by an appeal. Rule 103 of O. XXI provides that a party, not being a judgment-debtor, against whom an order is made under r. 98, r. 99 or r. 101 may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property; but, subject to the result of a suit the order is conclusive.

On December 7, 1936 the appellant instituted the suit out of which this appeal arises. He asked for a declaration that the sale of the properties to the respondents was invalid and for an order requiring them to vacate. The respondents pleaded that the suit was barred by the law of limitation, and clearly it was if the time taken up by the appeal from the order of the District Munsif dismissing the appellant's application under O. XXI, r. 97, was not to be excluded. The District Munsif held that the respondents' plea was well founded and dismissed the suit, but his decision was reversed on appeal by the Subordinate Judge. The respondents appealed to this Court and their appeal was allowed by Wadsworth, J. who however gave a certificate which has permitted the filing of the present appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent.

There is nothing on the record which shows the circumstances under which the appellant filed the appeal against the dismissal of his application under O. XXI, r. 97 and the decision in this appeal must turn on the question on whom lies the burden of proof. Section 14, Lim. Act, says :

"In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, the time during which the plaintiff has been prosecuting with due diligence another civil proceeding, whether in a Court of first instance or in a Court of appeal, against the defendant, shall be excluded, where the proceeding is founded upon the same cause of action and is prosecuted in good faith in a Court which, from defect of jurisdiction, or other cause of a like nature, is unable to entertain it."

Then follow three explanations, but it is not necessary to set them out. Section 2 (7) defines "good faith" for the purposes of the Act. The definition is that nothing shall be deemed to be done in good faith which is not done with due care and attention. I should have thought that when a person is claiming the benefit of s. 14, Lim. Act, he must prove that he acted in good faith in instituting the earlier proceedings. Order VII, r. 6, Civil P. C., states that where the suit is instituted after the expiration of the period prescribed by the law of limitation, the plaintiff shall show the ground upon which exemption from such law is claimed. This must mean that when a suit has been filed beyond the period allowed by law the burden of proving that there is ground for exemption from limitation is on the plaintiff, but apart from this the wording of s. 14, Lim. Act, seems to me to be here quite clear.

But a different opinion has been expressed by a Bench of this Court. In Alagappa Chettiar v. Somasundara Chettiar (1), Varadachariar, J. sitting with Mockett, J. discussed s. 14, Lim. Act, and it would appear that he was of the opinion that Privy Council in deciding Benodram Sen v. Brojendro Narain Roy (2) had placed the burden of proof on the defendant and not on the plaintiff. With the greatest respect to all that was said in the judgment of Varadachariar, J., I am unable to agree that the Judicial Committee can there be taken to have laid down a rule that a person seeking the benefit of s. 14, Lim. Act, is not required to show that he acted bona fide in the previous proceedings and that it is incumbent on his opponent to prove mala fides. In that case, the Privy Council were considering the effect of s. 10, Lim. Act of 1859 and not s. 14 of that Act, which corresponds to s. 14 of the present Act. Section 20 of the Act of 1859 corresponds to Art. 182 of the Act of 1908 and it reads as follows :

(1) (1937) M W N 465.

"No process of execution shall issue from any Court not established by Royal Charter to enforce any judgment, decree or order of such Court, unless some proceeding shall have been taken to enforce such judgment, decree or order or to keep the same in force within three years next preceding the application for such execution."

It was alleged in Benodram Sen v. Brojendro Narain Roy (2) that certain proceedings in execution had not been instituted bona fide and therefore the decree-holder was not entitled to claim a fresh starting point of limitation by reason of his application. There was nothing in the Lim. Act of 1859 which required the decree-holder to show bona fides, but in resisting the proceedings the person concerned set up a specific charge of mala fides. The Judicial Committee decided that in such circumstances the person who alleged mala fides ought to prove his allegation. There is nothing in the judgment in that case or in the judgment of the Privy Council in the earlier case in Roy Dhunput Singh v. Madhomotee Dabia (3), the earlier case referred to in Benodram Sen v. Brojendro Narain Roy (2) which can, in my opinion, be taken as supporting the interpretation placed upon s. 14, Lim. Act, in Alagappa Chettiar v. Somasundara Chettiar (1).

As I have already indicated, a person who asks the Court to hold that he is entitled to the benefit of s. 14 must in my judgment show that he comes within it. To the reasons I have given I may add that s. 103, Evi. Act, expressly states that the burden of proof of any particular fact lies on the person who wishes the Court to believe in its existence, unless it is provided by law that the proof lies elsewhere. I have no hesitation in holding that in this case the burden of proving that he acted bona fide in his earlier action rests on the appellant. He has not made any attempt to show that in filing the appeal against the claim order he was acting on advice and the Court is left in entire ignorance why he appealed from the order on his application under O. XXI, r. 97 before he filed the present suit. As the appellant has not shown that in filing the appeal he acted in good faith he is not entitled to the benefit of s. 14, Lim. Act. For these reasons I consider that the decision of Wadsworth, J. was correct and that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Gentle, J.—I agree.

Krishnaswami Ayyangar, J.—I also agree but I desire not to be understood as expressing any opinion on the question whether an appeal lay to the Subordinate Judge in the prior proceedings or not. The matter was argued on the assumption that no such appeal lay and that the remedy was by way of suit only.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

Suit No. 118 of 1940

June 26, 1940

LORT-WILLIAMS, J.

Syed MAHOMMED YAQUB—PLAINTIFF

versus

IMPERIAL BANK OF INDIA—DEFENDANT

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), ss. 85 (1), 10—Plaintiff having current account in Bank drawing post dated cheque on Bank in favour of M—Plaintiff subsequently counter-mandling his order for payment—Bank acknowledging instruction but yet cashing cheque and making payment to M—Payment, if made without negligence—Payment, if in due course so as to discharge Bank.

The plaintiff had at all material times a current account with the defendant Bank. He drew a cheque, on the Bank in favour of M post dated March 20, 1937. On February 14, 1937, he wrote to the Bank counter-mandling that order for payment, which was acknowledged by the Bank on March 20, 1937. Nevertheless, and contrary to these instructions, on June 10, 1937, the Bank cashed the cheque, made payment to M, and debited the plaintiff's account with the amount :

Held, that the payment in this case was not made "without negligence" and was not, therefore, a payment made in due course, within the meaning of ss. 85 (1) and 10 so as to discharge the Bank. Foley v. Hill (1), Cohen v. Hale (2), Wianholt v. Spitta (3) and Reade v. Royal Bank of Ireland (4), relied on.

Messrs. I. P. Mukherjee and J. P. Mukherjee, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. S. Chowdhury, for the Defendant.

Judgment.—The plaintiff's claim is for money had and received. He had at all material times a current account with the defendant Bank. In the first week of February 1937 he drew a cheque, No. A14766, on the Bank for Rs. 6,250 in favour of B. S. Makani, post-dated March 20, 1937. On February 14, 1937, he wrote to the Bank counter-mandling that order for payment, which was acknowledged by the Bank on March 20, 1937. Nevertheless, and contrary to these instructions, on June 10, 1937, the Bank cashed the cheque, made payment to Makani, and debited the plaintiff's account with the account. The plaintiff alleges and the Bank denies negligence. The Bank also relies on cl. 5 of its Current Account Rules, knowledge of which is admitted by the plaintiff, and which reads as follows:

"The Bank will register instructions from the drawer regarding cheques lost, stolen, etc., but cannot guarantee constituents against loss in such cases in event of a cheque being paid."

There can be no doubt that the Bank was guilty of negligence, which was the direct cause of the plaintiff's loss. In a letter dated July 12, 1937 from the Bank to Messrs. Thos. Cook and Son (Bankers) Ltd., it is stated that the payment had been made by mistake and through clerical oversight, and in a letter dated July 13, 1937 from the Bank's agent, he admitted that the payment had been made, on account of oversight due to rush of heavy work on a particular day, from the register of stopped cheques, and explained how the ledger-keeper had not followed the instructions regarding the recording of stop, and promised to make good the loss. In my opinion, the rule, relied on by the Bank is irrelevant. The cheque was not lost or stolen, and 'etc.' must be read ejusdem generis. The rule is intended to apply to events happening prior to the time when a cheque reaches the Bank and is presented for payment. Not to negligence committed by the Bank after presentation.

"The relation between a banker and his customer who pays money into the Bank is the ordinary relation of debtor and creditor, with the super-added obligation to honour the customer's cheques when the banker has sufficient assets of the customer available for that purpose, the money so paid into the Bank being, in fact, money lent to the banker on the terms that it should be repaid, when called for by cheque: Foley v. Hill (1) and the Negotiable Instruments Act, s. 31."

In s. 75 (1), Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, it is provided that the duty and authority of a banker to pay a cheque drawn on him by his customer are determined by countermand of payment. This Act is not applicable to India, but the Common Law, including the Law Merchant, is applicable to suits on the original side of this Court, and upon this point is the same as provided in s. 75 (1). Thus, in Cohen v. Hale (2) it was held that upon a cheque being stopped the position was the same as if it had never been given, and in Wianholt v. Spitta (3), Lord Ellenborough observed that a stopped cheque became a piece of waste paper in the hands of the payee. In Reade v. Royal Bank of Ireland (4), the plaintiff had a current account in the defendant's bank, which was in funds. The plaintiff drew a cheque on this account in payment of a gambling debt, but prior to its presentation countermanded by telegram payment of the cheque. Notwithstanding the countermand, the defendants subsequently honoured the cheque on presentment. The plaintiff did not sue the payee of the cheque for the recovery of the money, nor did he prove that he could not have recovered from the payee. It was held by the Court of appeal that the defendants were guilty of a breach of duty as bankers, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover from them the amount of the cheque. Ronan, L. J., said at p. 25*:

"But what was the effect of the countermand? Section 75, sub-s. (1), Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, says (and the Lord Justice read the words of the section). Four years before, the case in Cohen v. Hale (2) was decided. It is cited as applying to the section by Sir M. Chalmers, and referred to Hart on Banking as the existing law. I take the statement of the case from pp. 326-327 of that book. This puts the case in the same position as if the payment had been made without any cheque for the amount having ever existed. It follows, therefore, that as between the plaintiff and the defendant the case must be treated precisely in the same way as I have dealt with the case of no cheque and no request. The question here would directly arise if the plaintiff brought an action of debt for his balance, and the bank sought to set off this payment pro tanto."

And O'Connor, L. J., said at p. 26*:

"The relation of a bank to its customer is that of debtor to creditor. A bank can, and, indeed must, diminish, its indebtedness to the customer by obeying the mandate of the customer to pay away to third parties moneys up to the amount which the bank owes to the customer, or, in other words, which is standing to the credit of the customers' current account. The mandate is, of course, usually given by cheque. But a bank cannot diminish its indebtedness where no such mandate is given, or where a mandate is given but subsequently withdrawn, for that is the same as if no mandate were given at all."

Moreover, though s. 85 (1), Negotiable Instruments Act, provides that where a cheque payable to order purports to be endorsed by or on behalf of the payee, the drawee is discharged by payment in due course. Section 10 defines "payment in due course" as meaning payment in accordance with the apparent tenor of the instrument in good faith and without negligence to any person in possession thereof under circumstances which do not afford a reasonable ground for believing that he is not entitled to receive.

payment of the amount therein mentioned. As I have shown already, the payment in this case was not made "without negligence" and was not, therefore, a payment made in due course, so as to discharge the bank. The result is that the bank was not entitled to debit the plaintiffs' account and is still indebted to him in the sum of Rs. 6,250. The Bank does not pay interest on current accounts, therefore, the plaintiff has not suffered any damage on that score, and no other damage has been proved. The plaintiff is entitled to judgment for Rs. 6,250 only with interest and costs.

ACCUSED

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 84, 302—Held on facts that plea of insanity was not established and accused guilty of murder—Case held did not call for extreme penalty—Murder—Sentence—Absence of motive is material in considering question of sentence—Act unpremeditated and result of impulse and temper—Proper sentence—Plea of insanity—Burden of proof—Circumstances to be considered in considering plea of insanity—Principles to be applied to case of insanity, stated—Brutal assault by husband on wife—Husband not known to be ill-treating his wife—Insanity of husband, if can be presumed from mere absence of motive—Conflicting statements by person, whether sign of insanity—Criminal trial—Evidence—Murder—Deliberate opinion of doctor conducting autopsy that nature and number of wounds indicated that either there was deep motive for murder or murderer must have been insane—Admissibility—Prosecution witness not cross-examined by accused before committing Court—Statement by him of incident indicating accused's insanity in Sessions Court—His omission to state in committing Court does not affect his veracity.

A loving husband and an affectionate father who had never been known to have beaten or ill-treated his wife on any previous occasion suddenly killed her in a closed room bolted from inside by battering her head and body with a sitting plank inflicting as many as twenty wounds and bruises. There was an absence of any motive for the crime. The accused pleaded insanity. The evidence showed that the accused had been strange and eccentric in his actions for some days previous to the committing of the crime. He was labouring under a delusion that some relation of his had given him drugs and that krutrima (witch craft) had been done to him. After the room in which the occurrence took place was broken open by five persons, the accused made no attempt to escape but appeared dazed:

Held, (per King and Gentle, JJ., Patanjali Sastri, J., contra.)—That the offence committed was murder and the plea of insanity was not established.

Held, further that the case did not call for the extreme penalty of the law and the sentence of transportation was proper as there was no premeditation and the accused must have received what he felt to be considerable provocation before he attacked his wife in the way he did. [p. 314, col. 2.]

Per Gentle, J.—The absence of an apparent motive on the part of the accused in committing a murder is material when the question of sentence is considered. Where the offence committed was not premeditated in any way but was the result of impulse and temper, the proper sentence is one of transportation for life, though the assault was a violent one. [p. 338, col. 1.]

Per King and Patanjali Sastri, JJ.—The burden of proving insanity is cast upon the accused by s. 105, Evi. Act, and under s. 84, I. P. C., he must prove that at the time of the killing he was by reason of unsoundness of mind, incapable of knowing the nature of his act or that he was doing what was wrong or contrary to law. [p. 343, col. 1.]

Per Patanjali Sastri, J.—It is true that a mere lack of apparent motive for the deed does not necessarily or always lead to an inference of intellectual aberration or insanity, but a total lack of an apparent motive may in some cases, taken along with other facts legitimately give rise to an inference that the act was done under an insane impulse. Similarly, it is true to say, that a crime is not excused by its own atrocity. But it cannot be said that the nature of the act or the mode of perpetrating it can under no circumstances be taken into account in considering a plea of insanity. It may be that as a rule of prudence, Courts will be slow to infer from such material that the person committing the act was not conscious of its criminality. But there is no warrant for laying down, as a rule of evidence that one must look outside the act itself for the evidence as to how much the accused knew about it. The truth is that in dealing with all such cases no general rule can be applied and the only proper course to adopt is to decide each case on its own peculiar facts bearing in mind, of course, that the point for determination is whether the evidence before the Court is sufficient to establish that the person charged with the offence was not conscious of the nature of the act he was doing or that he was doing what was wrong or contrary to law. 170 Ind. Cas. 74 (1) and 91 Ind. Cas. 78 (3), referred to. [p. 340, col. 2.]

Per Gentle, J.—Where a husband who has never been known to have ill-treated his wife, assaults his wife which results in her death, from the mere fact that there was an absence of a deep-seated motive, it cannot be said that the husband must have been insane. 170 Ind. Cas. 74 (1), relied on.

A conflicting statement by a person is not necessarily a sign of insanity.

Per Patanjali Sastri, J.—The deliberate opinion of a doctor who conducted the autopsy that from the nature and number of the injuries on the body of the deceased which he had examined, there must have been either some deep-seated motive for the murder or the offender must have been insane, is admissible in evidence. M'Naghten's case (2), relied on. [p. 339, col. 1.]

Where a prosecution witness who has not been cross-examined by the accused in the committing Magistrate's Court states an incident indicating the accused's insanity in the Sessions Court for the first time, no adverse inference against the veracity of the witness can be drawn from his omission to refer to the incident in committing Magistrate's Court though he might have voluntarily placed the information before the Magistrate.

Refd. Trial and Cr. A. referred by the Court of the Session, South Kanara Division, dated March 11, 1940.

Mr. Sivaramakrishnan, for the Accused.
The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Gentle, J.—The appellant has been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of South Kanara of the offence of murder under s. 302, I. P. C., and has been sentenced to death. The appellant is Sankappa Shetty and the deceased was his wife, Kaveri. They had been married for eight years and had four children, issues of the marriage, of the ages between seven years and 18 months. The offence is alleged to have taken place in the house of Honnaya Hegde who is the uncle of the mother of the deceased. P. W. No. 2, Hoovamma, is the wife of Honnaya Hegde. In the community to which the accused and the deceased belonged, it is the custom for the husband to bear the expenses of the wife's confinement. Eighteen months before the death of the deceased, as her parents were dead, the deceased went to the house of P. W. No. 2 in Kuthavoor village for her confinement. The appellant was unable to bear the cost of the confinement or for his wife to return to him at his own village about 11 miles distant, and during the period of 18 months following her last confinement she remained at her relation's house where he visited her from time to time.

On November 28, 1939, the appellant arrived at the house. The deceased, P. W. No. 2 and her son, P. W. No. 3, were then present. He spent the night with his wife and children in a room in the house. On November 29, 1939, P. Ws. Nos. 2, 3 and 5, the brother of the deceased who also lived in the house but had been absent the previous night, took their food with the appellant and the deceased at about 10 A. M. The appellant asked the deceased to give him Rs. 25 and she replied that if he returned her jewellery which he had previously taken, she would let him have that amount. It was said that upon her marriage she had jewellery worth about Rs. 200 which the appellant had taken and upon which he had raised some money. About noon, P. W. Nos. 2, 3 and a servant, P. W. No. 4, went to a building about 45 feet away from the room which the deceased, the appellant and their children occupied, in order to pound paddy. About two hours later, these three witnesses heard the deceased cry "killing" and the children shouting "father is killing mother." They went to the room in the house and found the door shut and bolted or locked from inside. P. Ws. Nos. 2 and 3 went to an open window and saw the appellant inflicting a blow with a plank, upon which food was served, upon the deceased's temple. P. W. No. 5 was not then in the house, having gone out. P. W. No. 2 immediately raised an alarm which brought two neighbours, P. Ws. Nos. 6 and 7. P. W. No. 3 fetched P. Ws. Nos. 9 and 10 who were working nearby. P. W. No. 6 forced open the door with a crowbar. The deceased was lying dead on the floor, and the appellant was seized, brought out and secured. He appears to have offered but little, if any, resistance and some of the witnesses said he appeared dazed. Communication was made to P. W. No. 16, the village patel, who sent his report to the Police and the Police Officer arrived later.

On December 1, 1939, P. W. No. 1, the Medical Officer in charge of the Local Fund Hospital at Mulki, performed the post mortem examination upon the body of the deceased. He found 20 injuries of which 10 were on the head and the others on the various parts of her body. Seventeen of the injuries could have been caused by the plank with which P. Ws. Nos. 2 and 3 had seen him striking the deceased, two of the head injuries would have occasioned death within five minutes. Learned Counsel on behalf of the appellant stated that he was unable to suggest that the evidence of the above witnesses could in any way be attacked or disputed. There is nothing which shows that these witnesses were unreliable or their evidence unacceptable and that it is beyond doubt that the appellant caused the death of the deceased by striking her with a wooden plank which, in the way he used it, was a dangerous weapon. The defence which was put forward before the learned Sessions Judge and which has been argued before us is that at the time he killed his wife, the appellant was insane. Section 84, I. P. C., provides as follows:

"Nothing is an offence which is done by a person who, at the time of doing it, by reason of unsoundness of mind, is incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that he is doing what is either wrong or contrary to law."

The question of the sanity of the appellant was not raised or suggested to be in doubt until the trial in the Sessions Court which commenced in February 1940, about three months after the occurrence. In the statement which he made before the committing Magistrate on January 10, 1940, the appellant said he did not know anything and that the rest, he would tell in the higher Court; he had no witnesses to be examined in that Court; it was not possible for him to give a list of witnesses at that stage, as he would produce them in the Sessions Court. The facts and circumstances which are relied upon to substantiate the plea of the insanity are (1) the matters given in evidence in the Sessions Court by P. Ws. Nos. 1 and 14 and P. W. No. 1; (2) that the deceased and the appellant throughout their married life had lived upon affectionate and friendly terms; (3) that there was no motive to cause the appellant to take the life of the deceased and (4) that when the prosecution witnesses went to the scene of occurrence, the appellant appeared to be dazed and offered no resistance when he was seized and secured. All the witnesses who were acquainted with the deceased and the appellant said they were always upon affectionate terms together.

Prior to the happenings on November 28, 1939, there is no doubt that the appellant was in some financial embarrassment. He was also concerned in regard to some property belonging to his wife or in which she was entitled to a share and which he described as "our" property. The ejaman of the deceased's family is the husband of P. W. No. 2, a mortgage was subsisting upon this property and the ejaman had not kept up payment of the interest and some amount in respect both of principal and interest was outstanding. Some approaches to, or negotiations with, a bank in Mangalore had taken place to borrow the necessary funds to discharge the mortgage debt, but these had not been successful. On November 23, 1939, six days before the occurrence P. W. No. 15, a Sub-Inspector of Police had questioned the appellant regarding a piece of jewellery which was stolen and examined him as a witness who had some knowledge of the theft. The relevancy of these two matters will appear later.

It is now convenient to refer to the testimony of the three witnesses upon which the defence relies. P. W. No. 1, the Medical Officer who performed the post mortem upon the body of the deceased, was asked about the mental condition of the appellant when he was cross-examined before the learned Sessions Judge. He said that from the nature and the number of the injuries which he found the attack was very brutal. There must be some deep-seated motive for a man to cause so many injuries and if the deep-seated motive was absent, then the assailant must be an insane man especially when he is the husband of the victim. In reply to further questions by the learned Advocate for the appellant, he then gave the following evidence. One or two days before the death of the deceased, he travelled in a bus with the appellant. Both of them alighted at a village called Mulki. A little later, he said, he saw the appellant prostrating himself before a man who had been a passenger in the bus and talking incoherently to him, that his behaviour was not quite normal and that he was excited. In one part of his evidence he said he could not make out what the appellant was saying. Later he stated he did not pay any attention to what exact words were uttered, but corrected himself and said that he heard now and then some of the words which the appellant spoke to the passenger and which were "you are my saviour," "had it not been for you I would have been ruined," and "a telegram must be sent to Mangalore" and later still the witness said he did not catch the subject-matter of the talk. The appellant bent his head and touched the feet of the passenger several times. He did not say that the passenger presented the attentions of the appellant or that he tried to get rid of or escape from him, and added that whilst this man was a stranger to the witness, he was not sure that he was a stranger to the appellant.

The appellant is a villager and conduct of this kind is not a unique way for such a man expressing his thanks and appreciation for help and services rendered by another who might be in a higher station in life. If, as he said, he did not know what the subject was of the remarks made by the appellant and heard only the words which are set out above, it is difficult to see how he could say the appellant was talking incoherently. Hearing only three short disjointed sentence of a conversation without knowing the remainder or the subject of the remarks should not lead to an inevitable conclusion that the words which were heard must be incoherent, that is to say, inconsistent. The sentences seem to me to be more compatible with consistency than with incoherence. The witness said that it was the words he heard and, being incoherent, made him understand the appellant was not in his senses. As a general proposition, one cannot accept the opinion which this witness expressed that in the absence of what he described as a deep-seated motive, the brutal assault must have been committed by an insane man. P. W. No. 1 said that later he went to the house of one Raman Shetty where he saw P. W. No. 14, Jayarama Shetty, and told him of the incident of the appellant behaving "like a mad man." P. W. No. 14 said he had been so informed.

P. W. No. 14, Jayarama Shetty, in examination-in-chief said that he knew the appellant, who had stayed in his house at Mulki from November 26 to 28 and that it was the custom of the appellant to do this whenever he was in that village. During this particular visit, the appellant told him that there was a debt upon "our" property, Rs. 1,000 was due which it was necessary to pay and to do this, application had been made to a bank in Manglore for a loan which at first was promised but subsequently it had not been sanctioned. P. W. No. 5, the deceased's brother, who lives at the house of P. W. No. 2, said in cross-examination that there was a mortgage upon their family property the amount of which had been reduced to Rs. 3,000, it was decided to raise a loan to discharge this, and the appellant had been to a bank in Manglore to obtain a loan. He apparently was not asked and did not say whether the bank declined to grant it. There is no suggestion that the evidence of P. W. No. 5 was incorrect and therefore the statements by the appellant in regard to the mortgage and the attempts to obtain a loan are substantially correct. The appellant also told P. W. No. 14 that on account of financial difficulties he had not been able to cultivate his land and had let it out on lease, although no evidence was forthcoming about this, as the appellant was in straitened circumstances, it is likely to be correct. In re-examination, P. W. No. 14 said that when the appellant discussed financial matters, he talked like a sane man. From this part of this evidence, there is nothing from which it can be contended that the appellant was not in possession of his senses. Reliance is placed upon the evidence which this witness gave in his cross-examination. In this part of his testimony, P. W. No. 14 said that P. W. No. 1 had told him of a man behaving like a mad man, and that he, P. W. No. 14, guessed that P. W. No. 1 was referring to the appellant. On the night of November 26, 1939, the appellant stayed in his house, his behaviour was not quite normal, he was talking much, which talk was incoherent and nonsense. He expressed the fear he was going to die, that "Thamma," (younger brother or cousin) had given him some medicine which had made him ill and that he felt a strange sensation in his head. It was this talk which the witness said caused him to guess that the appellant was the man to whom P. W. No. 1 had referred as the former told him he had arrived by bus.

On November 27, 1939, P. W. No. 14 said the appellant was acting or behaving like a mad man on the road, someone informed him that a man who had stayed at his house the previous night was behaving in this way and on going up to a large crowd found the appellant, he ascertained that some rupees had been scattered on the road which had been picked up by a Konkani, except two, which the witness secured and took the appellant back to his house. He did not see the appellant throwing money on the road. At about 8-30 that evening the appellant suddenly got up and struck him a blow, attempted to run away, and with the help of two other persons who were present he was caught, brought back and made to sit down. He wept like a child and when asked why he struck the witness he said "When I looked at you, you appeared frightful. So I beat you. I am sorry for having beaten you." Later that evening he the appellant ran from an upper story in the house saying that he would jump into a well. On the morning of November 28, 1939, P. W. No. 14 said the appellant was all right. He took him to the bus station, obtained a ticket for him to Kimmigowli which he gave to the appellant and asked some man in the bus to arrange for two people to go with him. At the conclusion of his evidence, he, the witness, said that only occasionally the appellant would go off his head and that for most part of the time during his stay, the appellant was all right, by which the witness must mean he was behaving normally. There can be little doubt, indeed, the learned Public Prosecutor said that he would concede, that at times the appellant's conduct and behaviour were peculiar, but the expressions of regret which the appellant made to P. W. No. 14 after he had struck him indicate that he realized what he had done and that it was wrong. The incoherency and nonsense mentioned by P. W. No. 14 appear to refer to the appellant saying he feared he might die and blamed "Thamma" for having given him some medicine which made him feel ill and that he felt a strange sensation in his head. The evidence does not establish it was the appellant who threw money on the road; the defence suggests this should be inferred. The incident when he said he would jump into a well, if it occurred, reflects a suicidal and not a homicidal tendency. The effect of his evidence, whilst it shows the appellant's actions and conduct were strange and eccentric does not establish either that he did not know what he was doing or did not realize what he had done was wrong.

P. Ws. Nos. 1 and 14 both described the appellant's conduct as not quite normal which is not unsoundness of mind of the degree required by s. 84, I. P. C. Neither P. W. No. 1 nor P. W. No. 14 mentioned any of the matters to which I have just referred when they gave evidence before the Committing Magistrate and they were disclosed for the first time in the Sessions Court. Whatever might excuse P. W. No. 14 not referring earlier to the conduct of the appellant, P. W. No. 1 is a gentleman of education and a doctor, and one would have thought that if he had formed the opinion that the appellant was not responsible for his actions, he might have mentioned it earlier and not wait until he gave evidence in the Sessions Court. Mr. Ethiraj, the learned Public Prosecutor, however, stated that he did not wish that the position of the appellant should be adversely affected by the failure of these two witnesses to disclose the matters to which they spoke; would make no observations regarding the belated nature of their evidence but confine himself to criticising their testimony. He submitted it did not establish that the appellant, at the time he inflicted the injuries upon his wife, did not know what he was doing, or if he did not know that it was wrong or unlawful.

D. W. No. 1, Sridhara Shetty, did not give evidence until the trial in the Sessions Court. He said that he knew the appellant and saw him at the end of November in Kimmigowli sitting on a bench in a coffee hotel. There were other people present including a man named Degu Bhandari, who gave some rupees to the appellant. The witness said that he told the appellant that P. W. No. 14 had sent word that he (the appellant) should be sent to his house escorted by two other persons and asked him whether he was going to his wife's house at Kodappa (this is the name of the house where the deceased was living with P. W. No. 2). The appellant replied that he had been drugged, krutrima has been done to him and went on talking. The witness said he paid no attention to this. Upon being asked again where he intended to go, the appellant informed him that he was going to Kodappa. The witness said that he told two men, Isthu and Babu, who were not called to give evidence, to take the appellant and leave him at Kodappa. Incidentally, P. Ws. Nos. 2 and 3 when cross-examined said that the appellant arrived alone. D. W. No. 1 did not remain long at the hotel or talk to him much. When the appellant said he would go to his relations at Kodappa he spoke rationally, that he was now and then all right and talked properly. The only matter to which this witness deposed showing abnormality was the appellant's reference to drugs and krutrima and as he remained only a short time his statement that the appellant was all right now and then, suggesting at other times he was not, carries little, if any, weight.

In the Sessions Court, the appellant made a lengthy statement in the course of which he said that prior to the occurrence he was not well and felt that his enemy had administered evil drugs to him. At that time a man named Aga Kala Dasu Chetty had stolen a jewel. He had informed the Sub-Inspector who was responsible for the theft and ten days afterwards his illness grew worse and he had some fear and a sensation in his stomach. On one occasion when in the dark he felt as though he saw an apparition like a big man. In the journey to Mulki in the bus he felt a sort of fear and was unwell. He lost some rupees which he had on arrival and asked P. W. No. 14 and others where they had gone. The next day he felt better. He referred to his stay with P. W. No. 14 and the visit to the hotel of Kimmigowli where he had taken food. He said two persons accompanied him to the house where his wife was, one a Christian and the other a dark man. He felt a chill and was shivering as if he had fever. On arrival at the house, his wife and P. W. No. 2 asked him if he had fever. They applied some medicine to his head and gave him a bath. The next day he said that P. W. No. 2 and his wife told him that there was some talk that he had stolen the jewel. Later he said his wife alone told him this. At noon his wife roused him from his sleep and asked him to take some food and then inquired about the stolen jewellery and at that time he was not well. The statement then continues that he was unaware after this if he beat his wife or not. There was no disagreement between them; he did not ask his wife for money; she had none; and that whenever she needed any he gave it to her. The next day he was told by the Police that he had killed his wife and he said that he had no recollection of doing so. P. W. No. 2 and her son P. W. No. 3 bore feelings of enmity against him arising out of a mortgage loan to be obtained from a bank, a disagreement over a marriage and a dispute regarding money, and they had given evidence against him on account of this animosity. He added that he first became aware of his surroundings during the night when he was in the yard with his legs and hands tied. The learned Sessions Judge put to the appellant a large number of questions which more resembles cross-examination than an examination under s. 342, Criminal P. C.

P. Ws. Nos. 2 and 3 denied the appellant was brought to the house by two men, that he was ill on arrival and had been given treatment and a bath. These two witnesses, and P. W. No. 5 said that he was in his senses and alright. The evidence regarding the occurrence is given by P. Ws. Nos. 2 and 3; it was not suggested they were not speaking other than the truth. There is no reason to reject their testimony upon the appellant's state and condition of mind. The case for the appellant is that his conduct and behaviour during the three days prior to and on the day of the occurrence shows that he was of unsound mind to a degree that he was unable to distinguish between right and wrong. According to his own statement, he underwent a 'black out' at the time of the attack upon the deceased and his memory of that event is a complete blank. There was no evidence, indeed there was no suggestion, that previous to the period covered by the occurrence and the three days prior thereto or at any time since, the appellant has shown any signs of mental derangement, his unsoundness of mind being limited to those few days. In his statement, he gives the places to which he went during that time and his arrival at Kodappa house. His statement is at variance with the evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 2 and 3 regarding his arrival with two persons and being given treatment and a bath, but a conflicting statement is not necessarily a sign of insanity. He therefore had a recollection of his movements during this period. His reference to the loss of some money at Mulki and his enquiries of P. W. No. 14 what had become of it doubtless refers to the affair in the road to which this witness spoke and the inference is sought to be drawn that his mind is a blank in respect of that incident. Whilst this incident may have occurred, one is dependent upon the accused's own statement that he has no recollection of it, the suggestion being that this freak of memory is similar to his want of recollection of the occurrence in the room where his wife was killed. If he was suffering from unsoundness of mind, it is unlikely it would have been manifest only during the period of four days and terminated immediately after the attack upon his wife, when, for a short time, the suggestion is that he became a homicidal maniac.

Even accepting the whole of the evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 1, 14 and D. W. No. 1 of whom the first two witnesses described the conduct of the appellant as not quite normal, it shows he was strange and eccentric, he was under a delusion that a brother or cousin had given him drugs and that krutrima had been done to him, and putting it at the highest, was acting upon some insane impulse when he struck P. W. No. 14, but nevertheless, his expression of regret shows he must have known he was then doing what was wrong. P. W. No. 14 said that when he told him of his financial troubles, he talked like a sane man and it would seem with substantial accuracy. D. W. No. 1 said he spoke rationally when he said he was going to his relations at Kodappa house. His cognitive faculties were therefore not absent. When a man is worried with his affairs or distracted about money matters, as the appellant was, slight annoyance may rouse his anger which at other times would be left unperturbed and may cause him to lose his temper and do an act even of violence. Can it be said that such a person is insane to a degree the section requires? The appellant and the deceased were in the room for two hours prior to the occurrence. Their young children were with them but are too young to give evidence of what transpired. Whilst there is no apparent motive for the appellant's act, it is not without some significance that the door was bolted from inside the room at the time and although there is no evidence who secured the door the attack was made at a time when entry into the room was obstructed and prevented. This factor is relevant also when considering the appellant's knowledge. The absence of motive and the violence used to cause the death of another alone are not sufficient to establish that the assailant was insane at the time: see Emperor v. Gedka Goala (1), and the cases cited in the judgment.

The last two matters requiring consideration are that the appellant appeared dazed and offered no resistance when he was secured after the occurrence. It is likely that he would be dazed when he realized what he had done and as five men broke into the room, in such circumstances a man who is not out of his senses would appreciate the futility of offering resistance. If the appellant had exhibited violence to, and fought with, these men, such conduct might well reflect a disordered mind. If an inference is to be drawn from his behaviour at this time, it is that he appreciated what he had done and knew that resistance was useless.

Upon consideration of all the evidence, facts and circumstances, including the absence of an apparent motive and the appellant's conduct both before and after the occurrence, it is not established that he did not understand the nature and quality of his act. Although his behaviour may have been unusual and strange, he was not suffering from unsoundness of mind so as to be incapable of knowing the nature of his act or that he was doing what was either wrong or contrary to law when he put his wife to death. The defence under s. 84, I. P. C. should therefore fail.

The appellant inflicted grievous injuries upon his wife with a wooden plank which was, by the way in which it was used, a dangerous weapon. The persistence of the attack evidenced by the number of injuries and the grievous nature of at least two of them show that when he was beating his wife he intended to kill her. Therefore the offence which he committed is murder. The absence of an apparent motive is material when the question of sentence is considered. The offence which the appellant committed was not premeditated in any way and must have been the result of impulse and temper. In these circumstances, I consider that although the assault was a violent one, the proper sentence is one of transportation for life. I would therefore, affirm the conviction but reduce the sentence.

Patanjali Sastri, J.—I regret I am unable to agree with my learned brother in the conclusion he has arrived at. I would accept the appellant's plea of insanity and set aside his conviction. The facts of the case have been fully stated in the judgment of my learned brother which I have had the advantage of reading and it is unnecessary to recapitulate them here. I would content myself with briefly indicating the grounds of my decision. The appellant's plea is based upon s. 84, I. P. C., and the onus of establishing it is on the appellant; see s. 105, Illustration (a), Evl. Act. The question for determination therefore is whether the appellant has succeeded in proving that when he killed his wife, he was incapable, by reason of unsoundness of mind, of knowing the nature of the act or that he was doing what was either wrong or contrary to law. It may be observed at once that the appellant was not placed under any medical observation soon after the occurrence and we have thus no expert medical evidence relating to the cognitive faculties of his mind during the period immediately following the occurrence. There is, however, sufficient evidence, in my opinion, to establish the appellant's plea of insanity.

In the first place, there is such a complete lack of apparent motive and the act of killing was done with such needless fury and violence that it is difficult to regard it as the act of a person in the unimpaired possession of his cognitive faculties, especially as the deceased was the appellant's wife and it is abundantly proved by the prosecution evidence itself that they were living on quite affectionate terms. Some attempt was no doubt made by the prosecution to suggest a motive of a sort, namely that the appellant had previously taken and sold the jewels of the deceased for his own purposes and when he asked her on the morning of the day of occurrence to give him Rs. 25, the latter replied that if he returned what he took from her previously, meaning the jewels, she would pay the sum required. This is said to have so enraged the appellant that he killed her in a fury. P. Ws. Nos. 2, 3 and 5 speak to this incident in the morning but the story is very thin and the witnesses themselves admit that even after the appellant took away the jewels of the deceased, they were living on very affectionate terms. P. W. No. 2 the grandaunt of the deceased said:

"Yes, the accused was showing great affection to her. Kaveri never complained to me or to my husband about the accused. They were loving each other very much. Even about his having taken away her jewels, she never complained to me or to any of us. The accused was also loving his children very much."

P. W. No. 5, the brother of the deceased, said:

"Kaveri did complain to me about the accused having sold away her jewels and having himself utilized the proceeds. Yes, in spite of that both husband and wife were loving each other. Up till that Wednesday I have not known of any instance of the accused having beaten or ill-treated Kaveri on any other occasion."

This evidence clearly shows that there was no ill-feeling or misunderstanding due to the appellant having sold away his wife's jewels and it could not have possibly served as a motive prompting the perpetration of the deed. Then as to the appellant having asked his wife for Rs. 25, on the morning of the day of the occurrence, it is difficult to accept the evidence as it was admitted by P. W. No. 5 that the deceased had no money at the time and that the appellant also knew that she had no money, and, in any case, it has been elicited from P. W. No. 2 that the appellant did not show any signs of having got irritated by his wife's alleged answer to his demand for money. The attempt, therefore, on the part of the prosecution to make out that the appellant's act of killing his wife was prompted by a rational motive must be held to have completely failed and indeed, the learned Public Prosecutor made no such attempt before us.

We have thus the spectacle of a loving husband and an affectionate father who had never been known to have beaten or ill-treated his wife on any previous occasion suddenly killing her by battering her head and body with a sitting plank inflicting as many as twenty wounds and bruises. The post mortem certificate (Ex. K) describing the injuries shows that the appellant must have been seized with a frenzy of violence which led him to deal blow after blow indiscriminately all over the body, and the doctor (P. W. No. 1) who conducted the autopsy gave it as his deliberate opinion that from the nature and number of the injuries which he had examined, there must have been either some deep-seated motive or the man must have been insane. Comment was made that this was a mere matter of opinion. I did not however understand the Public Prosecutor to argue that it is inadmissible in evidence. In M'Naghten's case (2) the learned Judges who were consulted by the House of Lords expressed the view that a medical man who had been present in Court and heard the evidence might be asked as a matter of science, whether the facts, assuming them to be true, showed a state of mind incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong. If so, I do not see why the opinion of P. W. No. 1, who was a medical man and had himself seen the injuries on the body of the deceased, should be rejected as inadmissible. Even apart from this opinion of P. W. No. 1, I consider that the nature and circumstances of the appellant's act justify the inference that it must have been committed under an insane impulse when he was incapable of understanding what he was doing. This inference is supported by the evidence in the case relating to the abnormal behaviour of the appellant spoken to by P. Ws. Nos. 1 and 14 during the two days immediately preceding the occurrence. P. W. No. 1 said that one or two days before the death of the deceased, he saw the appellant at Mulki "behaving like a mad man." He deposed:

"I saw this accused prostrating before a passenger (in the bus) and talking incoherently to him. His behaviour that day was not quite normal. He was excited. I could not make out what he was saying to the passenger.....I told him (P. W. No. 14) about this incident—the accused behaving like a mad man."

(2) (1843) 10 Cl. & F 200; 59 R R 85.

In re examination he added :

"The accused's prostrating to the passenger" was on the road. He did not lie flat on the ground. He simply stooped and bent his head and touched the feet of the passenger so many times: He said 'You are my saviour and so on'.....He would say some words, now and then, touch the feet of the passenger and then keep quiet and then he would say some words. The words that I caught now and then, while he talked, were incoherent and they made me understand that he was not in his senses."

It is true that this witness did not refer to this incident when he was examined before the Committing Magistrate. But it must be remembered that he was not cross-examined on behalf of the appellant in that Court and though he might have voluntarily placed the information that he possessed before the Magistrate, no inference against his veracity could, in my opinion, be drawn from his omission to do so. It might well be that he thought that it is none of his business to bring it to the notice of the Court. It might also be that he did not want to run the risk of his statement being discounted or disbelieved as something volunteered on account of his supposed interest in the appellant. The learned Public Prosecutor stated quite fairly before us that he would not question the veracity of this witness on the ground that he failed to refer to this incident when he gave evidence before the Committing Magistrate and argued only that taking his evidence to be true, it was not sufficient to support a plea under s. 84, I. P. C. P. W. No. 14, also gave evidence as to the accused's state of mind during the same period, i. e., the two days prior to the occurrence. He is a resident of Mulki and he said that whenever the appellant came there, he used to take his food in a hotel but stay in the witness's house during the nights. This witness was examined for the prosecution to show the financial condition of the appellant at about the time of the occurrence. In cross-examination, however, certain important incidents throwing light on the appellant's state of mind have been elicited. The witness said that on the night of the 26th, when the appellant came to his house, the appellant was talking incoherently and even talked nonsense. He expressed some fear and was saying that he was going to die. He said that "Thamma" (younger brother or cousin) had given him some medicine and after that he had been keeping ill and was feeling a strange sensation in his head. On November 27th witness saw the appellant acting and behaving like a mad man on the road in Mulki. Some one told the witness that the man who had slept in his house on the previous night was behaving like a mad man on the road, whereupon the witness went and saw a large crowd round the appellant on the road where he noticed rupees lying scattered. Some of the coins had been picked up by a Konkani and the witness picked up two which had been left on the road and took the appellant to his house. The witness also said that on hearing his voice, the appellant sat down on the road.

After the appellant was taken to the house at about 8-30 in the night, he suddenly got up and gave the witness a blow when the latter was talking to certain other persons in the room. After the appellant gave the blow, he attempted to run and the witness and another caught hold of him and brought him back to the house. When asked why he beat the witness, the appellant did not talk at all for an hour; then he wept like a child and said that he was sorry, explaining that he beat the witness as the latter "appeared frightful" to look at. Later, in the course of the night, the appellant ran down from the upper storey saying that he would jump into a well. The next morning, however, the appellant was all right and left the house of the witness saying that he would go to his place. The witness accompanied him to the bus station and bought him a ticket to Kinnigowli where the appellant wanted to go. Finding one Deju Shetti also going to Kinnigowli, the witness asked him to take the appellant to one Shridhara Shetti there and to request the latter to arrange for two men to escort the appellant to this place. In view of these statements of the witness the prosecution obtained permission to cross-examine him. All that was elicited in such cross-examination to shake his credit was that he did not refer to these incidents when he was examined before the Committing Magistrate. He explained the omission by saying that the prosecuting inspector in that Court did not ask him what all talks passed between him and the appellant but asked him only to say what the appellant told him about his financial difficulties and to answer only questions that were put to him. The witness denied that the appellant was his particular friend. He added that only occasionally the appellant would go off his head and would think and talk incoherently, but most of the time during his stay on that occasion, the appellant was all right. As in the case of P. W. No. 1, the learned Public Prosecutor said that he was not prepared to impeach the testimony of this witness on the ground of his failure to refer to those incidents before the Committing Magistrate but only urged that it did not assist the appellant any more than the evidence of P. W. No. 1 to bring himself within the exemption under s. 84, I. P. C.

The learned Public Prosecutor contended, placing reliance upon Emperor v. Gedka Goala (1) that it is only unsoundness of mind which materially impairs the cognitive faculties of the mind that can form a ground of exemption under s. 84 and that neither the apparent lack of motive nor the particulars of the appellant's behaviour as described by P. Ws. Nos. 1 and 14 on the two days immediately preceding the occurrence are sufficient to bring the case within that section. It is no doubt well-settled that unless the unsoundness of mind pleaded is such as to render the accused incapable of understanding the nature of the act with which he is charged or that what he was doing was wrong or contrary to law, he is not excused from criminal responsibility. It is also true to say that a mere lack of apparent motive for the deed does not necessarily or always lead to an inference of intellectual aberration or insanity, but a total lack of an apparent motive may in some cases taken along with other facts legitimately give rise to an inference that the act was done under an insane impulse: see Subbigadu v. Emperor (3). Similarly, it is true to say, as was said by the learned Judges in the case referred to above that a crime is not excused by its own atrocity. This indeed is a truism. But can it be said that the nature of the act or the mode of perpetrating it can under no circumstances be taken into account in considering a plea of insanity? It may be that as a rule of prudence, Courts will be slow to infer from such material that the person committing the act was not conscious of its criminality. But I can see no warrant for laying down, as a rule of evidence that one must look outside the act itself for the evidence as to how much the accused knew about it. The truth is that in dealing with all such cases no general rule can be applied and the only proper course to adopt is to decide each case on its own peculiar facts bearing in mind, of course, that the point for determination is whether the evidence before the Court is sufficient to establish that the person charged with the offence was not conscious of the nature of the act he was doing or that he was doing what was wrong or contrary to law. It will be seen that in the case referred to above, the evidence showed that at the time he committed the offence, the accused

"knew what killing was and meant to do it, knew what he had done already, knew who was his brother and his sister-in-law and where they lived and the way to that place."

In the present case, not only is there nothing to show that the appellant was aware of what he was doing but the extracts given above from the evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 1 and 14 as well as the conduct of the accused immediately after the occurrence would seem, to my mind, to show that the accused was incapable by reason of his mental aberration of knowing the nature of his act. His incoherent talk to a passenger in the bus which led P. W. No. 1 who was a medical man himself, to think that the appellant "was not in his senses," and his abnormal behaviour to repeatedly stooping and touching the feet of the passenger on a public road "so many times," hailing him as his saviour certainly show that his reason was affected at the time, and his conduct in throwing rupees on the road is a strong indication that he was not conscious of what he was doing. No doubt, P. W. No. 14 said that he did not see the appellant throwing rupees on the road but his evidence leaves no reasonable doubt that the act of scattering the rupees which had attracted a crowd round the appellant on the road was an act of the appellant. The learned Public Prosecutor urged that the impression formed by P. W. No. 1 about the mental condition of the appellant cannot be accepted as correct as it is not warranted by what the witness said he observed and heard with reference to the behaviour and utterances of the appellant. It was said that the appellant's conduct towards the passenger is not an uncommon way among villagers of expressing gratitude for help rendered and that the words which the witness said he heard from the appellant did not indicate that the appellant's talk was incoherent or that he was not in his senses. I cannot agree with this criticism. Surely it is a strange way, either for villagers or townsfolk to express gratitude by stooping and touching the feet of a helper "so many times" on a public road with intervals of silence; and as for incoherent talk the witness does not say that the words he was able to quote from his recollection three months later were all the words he heard the appellant utter on the occasion of such a casual incident. The impression which the witness says definitely he formed from the conduct and utterances of the appellant that the latter was "behaving like a mad man" and "was not in his senses" goes a long way, in my judgment, to support the appellant's plea of insanity.

The learned Public Prosecutor also laid stress on the statement of P. W. No. 14 that the appellant attempted to run after beating him and later expressed regret, as indicating the appellant's consciousness that what he did was wrong. But it is significant that when the appellant was asked why he beat the witness, he did not give any reply at all for an hour and then wept like a child and expressed regret saying that he struck the witness because he was frightful to look at. The attempt to run away might have been therefore due to the "frightful appearance" of P. W. No. 14 in the eyes of the appellant, and the expression of regret which followed only after an hour of dazed silence in spite of questioning, is more consistent with the absence of cognitive faculties at the time when he struck the blow than with possession of such faculties.

Turning next to the appellant's conduct on the day of the occurrence, he said in the course of his examination by the learned Sessions Judge that after his wife roused him at about noon when he was sleeping and served him food and questioned him about some stolen jewels, his mind became a perfect blank and when he became aware of his surroundings in the night he found himself placed in the yard, his hands and legs tied, with people crowding round him and talking. The appellant also stated that he did not know if the door of the room in which the deceased was killed was bolted from inside or not, or if the door was forced open or not, and that he was not aware whether Bogga Shetty (P. W. No. 7) and others caught hold of him, tied his hands and feet and kept him in the yard. This statement of the appellant receives some support from the admission of several prosecution witnesses in cross-examination that when the appellant came out of the room and was tied after the occurrence, he did not offer any resistance. P. W. No. 6 said:

"When the accused came out after I forced open the door, he did not try to run away. He quietly submitted when we tied him and did not offer resistance. I did not ask the accused why he beat his wife."

P. W. No. 10 said:

"When we caught and tied the accused after he came out after the door was broken open, he did not offer resistance. He made no attempt to escape from our hold and to run away. We ourselves tied him to avoid his escaping and running away. We tied him up, because we were afraid that he might beat somebody else."

P. W. No. 7 no doubt spoke to some resistance on the part of the appellant at the time but in the face of the clear admissions of P. W. No. 6 and P. W. No. 10 in their cross-examination, it must be taken that the appellant offered no resistance when his hands and feet were tied and he was taken and placed in the yard of the house where he remained until the Sub-Inspector of Police came and arrested him in the afternoon of the next day. It is no doubt true that there were so many persons present when the appellant came out of the room and his attempt to resist would have been ineffectual and though it is possible that the non-resistance might be due to the realization of this fact, I think it is more probable that it was due to a blank mind, for, it would be a natural instinct of a sane person in the situation of the appellant to try to escape without pausing to think whether such an attempt would be effectual or otherwise. And it is somewhat remarkable that if the appellant was quite all right, as the prosecution witnesses would have the Court believe, that none of the persons who came on the scene ever attempted to question him regarding his apparently unaccountable conduct in killing his wife. Even the brother of the deceased (P. W. No. 5) did not ask him the reason why he beat his wife to death. He said:

"It struck me as strange that the accused should have beaten and killed her, knowing that he and his wife were affectionate before that. Yet, I did not ask the accused, what I am to ask, after he has killed her?"

None of the witnesses said that he asked the appellant why he committed the deed. This somewhat strange conduct lends countenance to the suggestion made for the defence that the prosecution witnesses were aware at that time that the appellant did the act when he was not in his senses and that they tied him hand and foot lest he should inflict injury on others, though they denied this at their examination. The learned Public Prosecutor drew attention to the circumstance that the appellant had bolted the door of the room before committing the crime and argued that this was an act of preparation showing that the appellant was conscious of the criminality of the act he was about to perpetrate. The argument would have force if there was clear evidence to show that the appellant bolted the door from inside just prior to the act by way of preparation for it. All that the evidence discloses, however, is that the appellant and the deceased had been in the room for about two hours before the occurrence and that the room was found bolted from inside when other persons came to the spot on hearing the cries of the deceased. It may well be that the deceased bolted the door for privacy or that the appellant did so for the same reason before the idea of killing his wife ever occurred to him. This circumstance cannot therefore be relied upon as definitely pointing to the appellant's knowledge of the nature of the act.

Lastly, the Public Prosecutor referred to the evidence of P. W. No. 15, the Sub-Inspector, who said the appellant appeared quite normal when he was examined as a witness in the course of investigation of a theft case about six days prior to the occurrence, and also from the time when the witness arrived at the scene of occurrence till the time he got the appellant remanded, and argued that the appellant's case of mental aberration only during the three or four days about the time of the occurrence was highly improbable. I am unable to see any force in this contention. Temporary fits of insanity which come all of a sudden and disappear after a short while are by no means uncommon. Indeed, the evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 1 and 14 shows that even during this period the appellant had perfectly lucid intervals. The evidence of P. W. No. 15 and of some of the other prosecution witnesses who say that he appeared all right when they saw him either before or after the occurrence is not therefore necessarily inconsistent with the truth of the appellant's case. On the whole I am of opinion that the appellant must be held to have killed the deceased under an insane impulse without understanding the nature of his act, and must therefore be acquitted.

[On difference of opinion between Gentle and Patanjali Sastri, JJ. the case was posted before King, J.]

King, J.—The accused in this case, one Sankappa Shetty, has been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of South Kanara for the murder of his wife, Kaveri, on November 29, last and has been sentenced to death. He is about 35, she was about 24 years of age. They had been married for eight years and had four children of which the youngest was about 18 months old. That child had been born in the house of Kaveri's family in Kuthethur and since its birth the husband and wife had not been living together. The evidence however is that this fact was not due to any estrangement, but to financial reasons; and that the accused frequently came and stayed with his wife for some days. It was on such a visit that accused last went to Kuthethur on November 28. On the early afternoon of the 29th, accused and his wife were alone in a locked room together. Cries were heard coming from the room and when the witnesses broke open the door they found Kaveri still alive, and her body covered with injuries, found at the post mortem to be twenty in number, ten of them being on the head. Accused was seized and kept tied up until in due course report was made to the village Munsif and the Police arrived. Kaveri died within a very short time. The accused did not deny at his trial that he was alone with his wife at the time when she was killed but put forward the plea of insanity and stated that he had no recollection whatever of what happened. The learned Sessions Judge has rejected this plea. Whether he was right or wrong in this rejection is the only point at issue before me.

The burden of proving insanity is cast upon the accused by s. 105, Evi. Act, and under s. 84, I. P. C., he must prove that at the time of the killing he was by reason of unsoundness of mind, incapable of knowing the nature of his act or that he was doing what was wrong or contrary to law. His case is sought to be made out in the following way: (i) by a consideration of the circumstances attending upon the actual offence; (ii) by medical evidence; (iii) by the evidence of P. W. No. 14; (iv) by the evidence of D. W. No. 1; and I will deal with each of these in turn. In regard to the first point stress is laid upon the lack of motive or of adequate motive, the exceptionally brutal nature of the attack, and upon the fact that upon discovery the accused made no serious attempt to escape. That there was lack of adequate motive is clear, but everyone who has to do with the administration of criminal justice in this country is unfortunately aware that the commission of crimes of violence, including murder, as the result of the most trivial quarrels is all too common. It is also clear that accused might well have achieved his purpose with a lesser degree of violence, but here again experience amply proves that once an offender has lost control of his temper he gives way unrestrainedly to his passion, without any thought for what may or may not be precisely necessary to carry out his intention. That the accused made no serious attempt to escape on discovery was no doubt due to the fact that five men were there to seize him and the weapon he had used was no knife, but only a wooden footstool. It is further argued for the accused that he appeared to be dazed, but this, I think, is natural enough upon any view of accused's state of mind when he committed the act. No doubt there is nothing positive in the evidence relating to accused's conduct to prove conclusively that he was able to think of his position and make rational decisions—but this evidence standing alone, is equally inconclusive in favour of accused's plea.

The medical evidence was given by P. W. No. 1, the officer in charge of the Local Fund hospital at Mulki. So far as it deals with insanity as a branch of medical jurisprudence it is of no value whatever. He quotes no text books but gives it as his opinion that a husband who inflicts so many injuries without a deep-seated motive must be insane—and he says this without any reference to the knowledge referred to in s. 84. He, however, also describes an incident which occurred on November 26 when he saw the accused prostrating himself before a man and talking incoherently to him. I do not think P. W. No. 1's evidence—which may be accepted as true—is of any assistance to the accused. Whether talk is incoherent or not is a matter of opinion. P. W. No. 1 heard only snatches of the conversation and the statements which he heard are by no means incoherent. These statements and accused's action are quite consistent with the theory that accused was deeply grateful to another man for help rendered, and was expressing his thanks to him. There is no evidence at all to show that the man was a stranger, or the help rendered a delusion.

P. W. No. 14 is a landholder of Mulki. His evidence is that accused came to him on the evening of November 26 and stayed until the morning of the 28th. He says that during this time the accused frequently talked incoherently; once accused a relation of having given him medicine which made him ill; once gave him a blow and fell to weeping and did not reply for an hour when asked why he had done so, and said finally it was because the witness looked frightful. He also said he would jump into a well, and once on the 27th took out Rs. 17 and scattered them on the roadside. When he left, the witness bought a bus ticket for him, and gave him in charge to one Deju Shetti with instructions to see that he got safely home. Now this evidence, if believed, certainly reveals some measure of eccentric conduct on the part of the accused but the learned Sessions Judge does not believe it. He points out, that according to the witness himself accused was able to speak quite rationally about his cultivation and his financial difficulties and that the witness took no steps to inform others about or protect himself against possible further violence from the accused.

For these and for other reasons which I shall mention later, I agree that the learned Sessions Judge was right in rejecting this evidence, however, respectable the social position of the witness may be.

D. W. No. 1 is a cultivator of Mennakettu, and the president of the Panchayat Court in that village. His evidence is that he arranged on what must have been November 28 to send accused to his wife's house. He was told by one Degu Bandari that accused was unwell. He called two men Isthur and Babu, and told them to take accused to his wife's house and to tell its inmates that he was sick. Accused told him that he was the victim of witchcraft, but the witness paid very little attention to his remark, and was unable to say positively whether accused's talk in general was coherent or not. Neither Degu Bandari nor Isthur nor Babu was called as a witness to support him. In these circumstances it is not surprising that the learned Sessions Judge thinks his evidence of no importance.

I may now state that, apart from the lack of corroboration to which reference has already been specifically made I am unable to believe P. W. No. 14 or D. W. No. 1 in so far as they seek to establish insanity because if their evidence were true, further corroboration should inevitably have been available. If we take the evidence for the accused at its best, we have in this case proof of delusions, and of some degree of eccentric conduct extending over the extremely short period of three days (November 26 to 28). There is no proof of any form of insanity or eccentricity before November 26; no proof of any accident or shock or any other event which might have brought on insanity; and no indication whatever of anything abnormal during the Police investigation, the period of accused's detention in jail, the preliminary inquiry, or the trial. I do not wish to be too dogmatic on the very difficult subject of insanity, but I feel convinced that it is impossible for manifestations of an insanity so serious as to result in the killing of a wife, to be confined to these comparatively trivial incidents over a period of only three days—and for the witnesses to such incidents to be confined to comparative strangers. And even on November 28 and 29 themselves it is to be noted, we get no indications at all (apart, of course from the murder) of eccentric conduct on the part of the accused as it appeared to his wife and her relations. The Kuthethur witnesses are unanimous on this point. It is argued that they are so determined to see that accused suffers the penalty for his crime that they are wilfully suppressing evidence which would help him to establish his plea. I am unable to take this view of their evidence and must point out on the contrary that all are anxious to emphasize that accused and his wife were on good terms.

For the reasons which I have given I am thus of opinion that the learned Sessions Judge was justified in not accepting the evidence of P. W. No. 14 and D. W. No. 1. Even if it were accepted as true, it would still in my opinion be insufficient to prove accused's plea. Delusions about the witchcraft and poisonous medicine may have been mentioned—there is nothing whatever to connect these with accused's wife. Accused himself does not say who it is who has practised witchcraft upon him. Surely if insanity be the cause of this crime it is explicable only on the hypothesis that accused was actuated by homicidal mania, or killed his wife under the delusion that she was not his wife at all, or that he was bound to kill her for some reason or other. Of homicidal mania there is really no trace in the evidence. The 'blow' to P. W. No. 14, if given, must have been a trivial one. Of any delusion concerning the identity or actions of accused's wife, there is clearly no trace. I find accordingly that the accused has been rightly convicted for murder. I think, however, that this is a case which does not call for the extreme penalty of the law. There cannot have been any premeditation—and I feel sure that the accused must have received what he felt to be considerable provocation before he attacked his wife in the way he did. I accordingly in confirming the conviction commute the sentence into one of transportation for life.

Partnership Act (IX of 1932), ss. 74 (b), 69—S. 74 (b), scope of—Whether limits exemption from operation of s. 69 only to pending proceedings.

Sub-section (b) of s. 74, Partnership Act, relates to those legal proceedings or remedies which were open to a party in respect of any right, title, interest, obligation or liability which had already been acquired, accrued or incurred before the commencement of the Act. It does not limit the exemption from the operation of s. 69 only to pending proceedings. 160 Ind. Cas. 277 (1), not approved.

Messrs. N. P. Asthana, Harnandan Prasad and Kamla Nandan Prasad, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit in which the plaintiff, an unregistered firm, sued for the price of certain goods supplied to the defendants. The only question raised in this appeal is as to whether s. 69, Partnership Act, applies to the plaintiff's suit. Section 69 prohibits unregistered firms from suing to recover money due to them for goods supplied. Section 74 of the Act, however, is to the effect :

"Nothing in this Act or any repeal effected thereby shall affect or be deemed to affect (a) any right, title, interest, obligation or liability, already acquired, accrued or incurred before the commencement of this Act, or (b) any legal proceeding or remedy in respect of any such right, title interest, obligation or liability, or anything done or suffered before the commencement of this Act."

Learned Counsel maintained that in view of these latter provisions the learned Civil Judge was not justified in dismissing the suit because the plaintiff was an unregistered firm. The learned Judge found upon a consideration of the evidence that the plaintiff firm was not a joint family firm and that s. 69 therefore applied to the case.

There has been some divergence of opinion in this Court and in other High Courts in India as to the effect of s. 74, Partnership Act. We have considered the decision in this Court in Danmal Parshotamdas v. Baburam Chhote Lal (1). In that case Bennet, J. expressed the view which does not appear to have been shared by Sulaiman, C. J. that s. 74 (b) related to legal proceedings instituted before the commencement of the Act. In our judgment this construction of the provision is not sound. The word "pending" does not appear in the sub-section. The sub-section in our judgment relates to those legal proceedings or remedies which were open to a party in respect of any right, title, interest, obligation or liability which had already been acquired, accrued or incurred before the commencement of the Act. This in our judgment is put beyond doubt by the opening words of the sub-section, "any legal proceeding or remedy." If the intention of the Legislature had been to exempt from the operation of s. 69 only proceedings which had been instituted, the opening words would have been "any legal proceeding pending or remedy taken." The words "pending" and "taken" do not appear. The provision seems to us to be perfectly clear and straightforward and we see no reason to introduce into the section words which the Legislature must be taken to have deliberately omitted.

In the result the appeal is allowed and the order of the learned Civil Judge is set aside. The learned Judge dismissed the suit upon the ground that the plaintiff firm was not entitled to sue. He did not go into the merits of the case. The record will be returned accordingly to the lower Appellate Court with a direction that the appeal be admitted to its original number and disposed of according to law. The appellant firm is entitled to its costs.

Criminal References Nos. 98 to 112 of 1940

October 3, 1940

BROOMFIELD AND WASSOODEW, JJ.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR

versus

CHAMPAKLAL CHUNILAL BANKER—

ACCUSED

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 234. Criminal cases, when can be consolidated and tried together on same evidence—Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act (XVIII of 1925), s. 159—What is to be proved under s. 159, stated—Waste water of dyeing and bleaching department of mill, if necessarily offensive—Secretary of mill is not as such liable to be convicted under s. 159 as having control over premises.

Criminal cases cannot like civil suits be consolidated and tried together on the same evidence except within the limits as to the joinder of charges laid down in the Criminal P. C. Hence, where there are a series of complaints of an offence alleged to have been committed on different occasions it is not permissible to the Magistrate to hear the evidence and write a judgment in one of the cases and then proceed to pass merely consequential orders in other cases. Emperor v. Pannubhai Laljibhai, Cr. Revn. No. 267 of 1938, relied on.

Under s. 159, Bom. Municipal Boroughs Act, it has got to be proved, firstly, that the accused is a person, who has the building or land under his control, secondly, that he allowed the water to run upon any street, land or space, and, thirdly, that the water was or was likely to become offensive. Waste water of the bleaching and dyeing departments of a mill would not necessarily be offensive or likely to become offensive in the absence of any proof.

The secretary of a mill is not as such liable to be convicted under s. 159 as being in control of the premises. Prima facie, the secretary of a mill would be a person to attend to the office and clerical work, but he would certainly not be a person to control the working of the mill or to see in what manner the waste water is to be discharged. That would be for the manager. If the secretary of the mill has control of the mill, there ought to be evidence to that effect.

Cr. Refs. made by the Sessions Judge, Ahmedabad.

Messrs. S. T. Desai and M. H. Chhatrapati, for the Accused.

Mr. J. C. Shah, for the Complainant.

Broomfield, J.—These are references from the Sessions Judge of Ahmedabad in 15 cases in which the Additional Stipendiary First Class Magistrate, Ahmedabad convicted one C. C. Banker, said to be the secretary of the New Manekchowk Mill at Ahmedabad, of offences under ss. 159 and 160 Bom. Municipal Boroughs Act (Bom. XVIII of 1925). In nine cases the prosecution was under s. 159 which renders punishable the act of causing or allowing the water of any sink or sewer or any other liquid or other matter which is or which is likely to become offensive, from any building or land under the control of the accused, to run, drain, or be thrown or put upon any street or open space. In the other six cases the charge was under s. 160 which makes it an offence for the owner or occupier of any building or land to keep or allow to be kept for more than 24 hours, or otherwise than in some proper receptacle, any dirt, dung, bones, ashes, night soil, etc., in or upon such building or land. It appears that at the suggestion of the defence Pleader the learned Magistrate recorded evidence in one of the cases only, which is the subject of the first of these criminal references, No. 98. Having convicted and imposed sentence in that case the Magistrate then passed orders in the other cases without recording any further evidence. As the learned Sessions Judge says, this procedure is not contemplated by the Criminal P. C. and is clearly illegal. We had to deal with the same kind of illegality in another case, Criminal Revision No. 267 of 1938, decided on October 6, 1938, by Broomfield and Macklin, JJ., Emperor v. Panubhai Laljibhai from the Ahmedabad District not very long ago, and as it appears that the Ahmedabad Magistrates are under a serious misapprehension as to their powers in this respect, it is desirable to repeat what was said in the judgment in that case, which applies exactly to the present case :

"We agree with the learned Sessions Judge of Ahmedabad that when you have a series of complaints of an offence alleged to have been committed on fourteen different occasions it is not permissible to do as the Magistrate in this case did, viz., to hear the evidence and write a judgment in one of the cases and then proceed to pass merely consequential orders in the other cases. Criminal cases cannot like civil suits be consolidated and tried together on the same evidence except within the limits as to the joinder of charges laid down in the Criminal P. C. It would have been permissible for the Magistrate to try the charges in groups of three, and I may say incidentally that I should have thought it quite sufficient for all practical purposes if the Municipality had restricted themselves to lodging three or at the most six complaints. However, that may be, the Magistrate's procedure is plainly illegal and the illegality is not cured by the fact that the accused's Pleader appears to have consented to the procedure adopted."

In the present case it appears that the defence Pleader suggested the adoption of this procedure. That makes no difference. It is plain therefore that the conviction of the accused in all the cases in which no evidence was recorded, that is, the cases which are the subject of references Nos. 99 to 112 of 1940, must be set aside and the fines and process fees ordered to be paid must be refunded to the accused. The learned Sessions Judge has also recommended that the conviction in the first case (No. 98), in which evidence was recorded, should also be set aside. He points out quite correctly that under s. 159, Bom. Municipal Boroughs Act, it has got to be proved, firstly, that the accused is a person who has the building or land under his control, secondly, that he allowed the water to run upon any street, land or space, and, thirdly, that the water was or was likely to become offensive. He says in his letter of reference that there is no finding of the Magistrate on any of these points. The accused denied that he was the secretary of the mill; evidence was given to show that he was; the Magistrate held that he was; and on the strength of that finding, according to the learned Sessions Judge, he convicted the accused.

Mr. J. C. Shah, who appears for the Municipality which was the complainant in these cases, disputes the statement of the learned Sessions Judge that there is no finding of the Magistrate on points Nos. 2 and 3. He says that the first sentence of the order shows that the accused was charged with having discharged waste water of the bleaching and dyeing departments on the street land and thus committed an offence punishable under s. 159, and that further on in the judgment the Magistrate said : "Here the offence has been committed as supported by the prosecution evidence." It is by no means clear, I think, that the particulars of the charge have been stated sufficiently clearly to make it appear that the learned Magistrate had applied his mind to the necessary ingredients of the offence. "Waste water" would not necessarily be offensive or likely to become offensive, which is what the section requires, and the Magistrate's statement that the prosecution evidence justifies a conclusion that the offence had been committed hardly enables one to say that the necessary evidence as to the offensive character of the waste water had been produced. However it is not necessary to deal with the matter on points Nos. 2 and 3.

It is quite clear from the learned Magistrate's judgment that he did not apply his mind to the question whether the accused was a person who had the building or land of the mill under his control. Mr. Shah has not suggested that there was any evidence produced to show that he had such control. He says that the secretary is an officer of the company and that the Magistrate may have assumed that as secretary he was liable to be convicted. It may well be that the Magistrate did make this assumption, but if he did, it was a wrong assumption. It was recently pointed out by this Court in Criminal Reference No. 71 of 1940, decided on July 30, 1940, by Beaumont, C. J., Emperor v. Jagannath P. Thakur that the secretary of a mill was not as such liable to be convicted under s. 159 as being in control of the premises. The learned Chief Justice said in that case:

"Prima facie, the secretary of a mill would be a person to attend to the office and clerical work, but he would certainly not be a person to control the working of the mill or to see in what manner the waste water is to be discharged. That would be for the manager. If the secretary in the case of this mill has control of the mill, there ought to be evidence to that effect."

In the present case also there is no presumption that the accused as secretary was in control of the premises, and, as far as we can see, no evidence to that effect was produced. In this case also therefore we agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the conviction cannot stand. In the case which is the subject of reference No. 98 of 1940 the conviction is set aside and the fine and process fees must be refunded to the accused.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT

First Appeal No. 104 of 1939

October 3, 1940

IQBAL AHMAD AND VERMA, JJ.

B. RAMMAN LAL—APPELLANT

versus

RAGHUNATH SHANKER AND ANOTHER—

RESPONDENTS

U. P. Encumbered Estates Act (XXV of 1934), ss. 11, 9, 10, 4—Application under s. 4—Issue of notice under s. 9—Alleged creditor denying to be creditor and claiming to be lessee of applicant's mahals and claiming protection of possession during term of lease—Claim, if falls under s. 11—Whether must file fresh claim after notice under s. 11—Deed—Construction—Zarepeshgi lease and usufructuary mortgage—Distinction—Transaction held lease and hypothecation clause did not change its character—Lease—Terms of deed should be looked to, to ascertain character of document—Executant's description is not infallible guide—Document styled as "wasika qaimmuqami" held was lease.

A claim under sub-s. (2) of s. 11, U. P. Encum. Estates Act, has to be filed within a period of three months from the date of the publication of the notice in the Gazette. But this provision does not debar the Court from entertaining, and adjudicating upon, a claim which was filed before the publication of the notice, if, in fact and in substance, the claim amounts to a claim under sub-s. (2) of s. 11. Where therefore the alleged creditor in an application under s. 4 appears in consequence of a notice under s. 9 and files a written statement denying his status as a creditor and claiming protection of his possession of the applicants' mahals on the ground of his being a lessee, during the term of the lease, his claim falls within the purview of sub-s. (2) of s. 11 and not within the purview of ss. 9 and 10. The lessee need not file a fresh written statement after the publication of a notice under s. 11 and no question of his claim being time-barred under s. 11 (2) arises. [p. 349, col. 1.]

Both in the case of a zarepeshgi lease and in the case of a usufructuary mortgage the person in whose favour the document is executed is entitled to possession. Similarly, in both cases there is an advance of money to the executants of the deed. But in the case of a usufructuary mortgage, there is a statutory liability for accounting cast upon the mortgagee by s. 76 (g), T. P. Act. In the case of a zarepeshgi lease however normally there is no such liability on the lessee. Further, in the case of a zarepeshgi lease pure and simple the lessee is not given any security for the amount advanced by him. Whereas in the case of a usufructuary mortgage there is a transfer of interest in the property mortgaged in favour of the mortgagee. It is clear from the provisions of s. 105, T. P. Act, that in the case of a lease there is a mere transfer of a right to enjoy the property leased, and no interest in the same is transferred in favour of the lessee. Again, in the case of a lease there is no right of redemption vested in the lessor, whereas such a right exists in the case of a mortgage.

Held, on construction that the transaction was a lease and the hypothecation clause did not alter the character of the transaction. Nidha Sah v. Murli Dhar (1), relied on.

In order to ascertain the real character of the document one has to look to the terms of the deed, and the description of the document given by the executant cannot be an infallible guide.

Held, that the document styled as "wasika qaimmuqami" (instrument of representation) fulfilled all the characteristics of a lease.

F. A. from the order of the Special Judge, First Grade, Bareilly, dated March 9, 1939.

Mr. G. S. Pathak, for the Appellant.

Mr. L. N. Gupta, for the Respondents.

Iqbal Ahmad, J.—This appeal is directed against an order passed by a Special Judge, first grade, in proceedings under the U. P. Encum. Estates Act (Act XXV of 1934) and arises under the following circumstances. Raghunath Shanker and his minor son, Girish Prasad, the respondents in the present appeal, filed an application under s. 4, U. P. Encum. Estates Act, before the Collector who, in accordance with the provisions of s. 6 of the Act, in due course, forwarded that application to the Special Judge. After the receipt of the application by the Special Judge, the applicants filed a written statement on February 12, 1937 containing the particulars enumerated in s. 8 of the Act. In their written statement the applicants alleged that B. Ramman Lal, the appellant in the present appeal, was one of their creditors. The learned Judge then directed the publication and the service of the notices prescribed by s. 9 of the Act. There was however this irregularity that the publication of the notice in the Gazette enjoined by sub-s. (1) was subsequent to the publication and the service of the notices in accordance with the provisions of sub-s. (2) of s. 9. But it is admitted that on March 2, 1937, notice was served on Ramman Lal calling upon him to file a written statement of his claim. In pursuance of this notice Ramman Lal, on April 29, 1937, filed a written claim. In the claim submitted by him, Ramman Lal denied that he was a creditor of the applicants and maintained that under two documents, both dated September 12, 1935, executed by the applicants in his favour, three mahals of village Deosas, viz., Mahal Surkh, Mahal Lakhi and Mahal Zard, were leased to him for a period of ten years commencing from 1343 F. On the basis of this allegation he maintained that he was entitled to remain in possession of the three mahals as a lessee for the period reserved by the two leases. He, accordingly, submitted that the mahals could not be attached or sold for the satisfaction of the debts due from the applicants so as to prejudicially affect his rights as a lessee.

After Ramman Lal had preferred this claim, a notice in accordance with the provisions of sub-s. (1) of s. 9 was published in the official Gazette on June 12, 1937. Thereafter on April 9, 1938, notice in accordance with the provisions of sub-s. (1) of s. 11 was published, specifying the properties mentioned by the applicants in the written statement filed by them under s. 8 of the Act, as also the properties specified by the claimants under s. 10 of the Act. Admittedly no fresh claim was filed by Ramman Lal asserting his rights as a lessee within three months of the publication of the last-mentioned notice as required by sub-s. (2) of s. 11. The case was taken up for settlement of issues on September 12, 1938, and, on that date, the Counsel for Ramman Lal was called upon to state whether the claim preferred by Ramman Lal was under s. 9 or s. 11 (2) of the Act. The Counsel stated that Ramman Lal's claim should be treated primarily as a claim under s. 11 and that his claim was that the three mahals referred to above could not be sold or mortgaged until the expiry of the period for which Ramman Lal was entitled to remain in possession as a lessee. The Counsel further stated that after the claim under s. 11 was decided, the claim of Ramman Lal, if necessary, might also be treated as a claim under s. 9. The Court then passed the following order: "Seen. Let the W. S. filed by these claimants be treated as one under s. 11 of the Act." It is clear from this order that the learned Judge, who was then seized of the case, treated the claim filed by Ramman Lal on April 29, 1937, as a claim under sub-s. (2) of s. 11. The issue that he framed was in the following terms:

"What were the rights of the claimant Ramman Lal in the zamindari property of Mouza Deosas and on what condition is it liable to attachment, sale or mortgage in satisfaction of the debts due from the applicants?"

The claim of Ramman Lal was eventually heard and decided by a Judge other than the Judge who had passed the order and framed the issue quoted above. The learned Judge dismissed the claim of Ramman Lal on three grounds. He held that, if the statement made by Ramman Lal's Counsel on September 12, 1938, be treated as a claim under s. 11, "it was manifestly time-barred." Secondly, he held that the claim filed by Ramman Lal on April 29, 1937, was a claim under s. 9 and not under s. 11 of the Act. Thirdly, he held that the position of Ramman Lal under one of the documents was that of a usufructuary mortgagee, and under the other document was that of a mere manager and, as such, Ramman Lal was not entitled to the possession of the three mahals in the capacity of a lessee.

Ramman Lal has filed the present appeal and it is argued on his behalf that the conclusions arrived at by the learned Judge are erroneous. In our judgment this contention is well-founded and this appeal must prevail. The applicants, as already stated, had in their written statement, mentioned Ramman Lal as one of their creditors, and it was in that capacity that Ramman Lal was served with a notice and was called upon to file a written statement of his claim. Ramman Lal admittedly filed a written statement within the time fixed by the notice but, in the written statement, he disclaimed being a creditor of the applicants. He definitely asserted that his position was that of a lessee and that, in view of the stipulations contained in the two documents referred to above, his possession over the three mahals could not be disturbed for a period of ten years. In other words, the assertion contained in the written statement of Ramman Lal was that the applicants' proprietary rights in the mahals were subject to the right of Ramman Lal to remain in possession of those mahals for a period of ten years. In consequence of these allegations Ramman Lal's contention was that the three mahals could not be attached, sold or mortgaged in satisfaction of the debts due from the applicants so as to prejudicially affect his rights as a lessee. The claim embodied in the written statement of Ramman Lal was in substance a claim that fell within the purview of sub-s. (2) of s. 11 and not within the purview of ss. 9 and 10. That this is so is apparent from the fact that a claim under the last-mentioned sections could be preferred only by a creditor, whereas Ramman Lal, as stated before, disclaimed the position of a creditor.

It is true that Ramman Lal did not, after the publication of the notice under s. 11, prefer a claim. But as he had already done so, it would have been idle for him to file a fresh claim reiterating the very grounds that were embodied in the claim already filed by him. A claim under sub-s. (2) of s. 11 has to be filed within a period of three months from the date of the publication of the notice in the Gazette. But this provision does not debar the Court from entertaining, and adjudicating upon, a claim which was filed before the publication of the notice, if, in fact and in substance, the claim amounts to a claim under sub-s. (2) of s. 11. In this view of the matter, it was open to the Court to treat the claim filed by Ramman Lal as a claim under s. 11 (2) of the Act, and the Judge, who framed the issues, was therefore right in passing the order that we have quoted above. As the claim was filed even before the publication of the notice there can be no question of the claim being time-barred. In this connection we may point out that the statement made by Ramman Lal's Pleader on September 12, 1938 was not a claim, but was a mere statement specifying the nature of the claim that had already been filed by Ramman Lal.

This brings us to the consideration of the merits of the claim preferred by Ramman Lal and it necessitates an examination of the two documents on which Ramman Lal's claim was based. Both the documents were executed on one and the same date. But as the terms of the two documents are not identical it would be convenient to deal with them separately. One of the documents is in terms described as a lease (patta). This document was executed by the applicants as first party and by Ramman Lal as second party. It relates to Mahal Surkh and Mahal Lakhi of village Deosas. It begins with a recital that the executants first party had given a zarepeshgi lease of the two mahals for a period of ten years (1343-1353-F.) and that the executant second party was liable to pay Rs. 990 a year on account of Govt. revenue and had already paid profits at the rate of Rs. 500 a year to the executants first party. It was stated in the deed that a sum of Rs. 5,000 on account of the profits for ten years at the rate of Rs. 500 a year had already been paid in advance by the executant second party to the executants first party, and that the executant second party was entitled to remain in possession "in the capacity of a lessee" for a period of ten years. There was a clear stipulation in the deed that the sum of Rs. 5,000 paid in advance would be liquidated in full on the expiry of ten years.

There was no provision in the deed entitling the executants first party to demand accounts from the executant second party, nor was any liability cast on the latter to maintain accounts of the profits of the two mahals. By para. 3 of the deed, executant second party was authorized to institute suits for arrears and enhancement of rent, for ejectment and to realize nazrana from the ryots who constructed new houses in the mahals. In short, all the rights that the executants first party could exercise in the management of the affairs of the mahals were given to executant second party. The document consists of twelve paras. and provisions contained in ten of those paragraphs clearly disclose a transaction of lease. But by paras. 7 and 9 of the deed, Ramman Lal was authorized, in certain contingencies, to realize the balance of the money paid by him in advance with interest by enforcement of charge against the two mahals. By the last mentioned paragraphs the two mahals were hypothecated by the executants first party and, in the event of the possession of Ramman Lal being disturbed, he was given the right to realize the balance of the zarepeshgi with interest at 12 per cent. per annum, as well as such profits as he could have made if the lease had remained in operation for the full period of ten years by enforcement of the charge against the two mahals. It is argued on behalf of the respondents that in view of the hypothecation of the two mahals the document in question embodied a transaction of usufructuary mortgage and not of a lease. We are unable to agree with this contention.

The answer to the question whether a transaction amounts to a mere zarepeshgi lease or to a usufructuary mortgage is often attended with considerable difficulties. Both in the case of a zarepeshgi lease and in the case of a usufructuary mortgage the person in whose favour the document is executed is entitled to possession. Similarly, in both cases there is an advance of money to the executants of the deed. But in the case of a usufructuary mortgage, there is a statutory liability for accounting cast upon the mortgagee by s. 76 (g), T. P. Act. In the case of a zarepeshgi lease however normally there is no such liability on the lessee. Further, in the case of a zarepeshgi lease pure and simple the lessee is not given any security for the amount advanced by him. Whereas in the case of a usufructuary mortgage there is a transfer of interest in the property mortgaged in favour of the mortgagee. It is clear from the provisions of s. 105, T. P. Act, that in the case of a lease there is a mere transfer of a right to enjoy the property leased, and no interest in the same is transferred in favour of the lessee. Again, in the case of a lease there is no right of redemption vested in the lessor, whereas such a right exists in the case of a mortgage.

The question that arises is as to what was the effect of the inclusion of paras. 7 and 9 in the document in question. Those paragraphs no doubt created a charge over the two mahals, but the charge could become operative only on the happening of the contingencies mentioned in those paragraphs. The document primarily embodied a transaction of lease and it was simply with a view to secure to Ramman Lal the rights given to him in his capacity as a lessee that a charge was created over the two mahals. In other words, the covenant as to the charge contained in the document was with a view to ensure the performance of their part of the contract by the lessors. But the inclusion of the paragraphs mentioned above could not and did not nullify the transaction of lease. Because of the inclusion of the two paragraphs the document became more than a mere zarepeshgi lease. It embodied a transaction of zarepeshgi lease and it also contained a hypothecation clause which was to come into operation on the happening of specified contingencies. In short, it partook of the character both of a zarepeshgi lease and of a simple mortgage. In Nidha Sah v. Murli Dhar (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council were concerned with the interpretation of a document which was described as a deed of mortgage. Their Lordships made the following observation in that case :

"This instrument, though it is called a mortgage, and though it will be convenient to follow the nomenclature used in the document itself and in the pleadings and judgments in the Courts below, is not a mortgage in any proper sense of the word. It is not a security for the payment of any money or for the performance of any engagement. No accounts were to be rendered or required. There was no provision for redemption expressed or implied. It was simply a grant of land for a fixed term . . . , in consideration of a sum made up of past and present advances."

In the case before us the document fully satisfies the tests laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council for holding that the document before their Lordships did not embody a transaction of mortgage. We therefore hold that by the document the appellant acquired the rights of a lessee and his possession as a lessee could not be disturbed for a period of ten years.

The second document was also executed by the applicants as executants first party and by Ramman Lal as executant second party. The document is styled as "wasqa qaim-muqami" (instrument of representation). It is recited in the deed that the executants first party had appointed executant second party as their "qaim-muqam" (representative). The document relates to Mahal Zard and authorises executant second party to remain in possession of that mahal and to exercise all proprietary rights with a view to realise the profits of that mahal. The liability to pay the Govt. revenue and a sum of Rs. 50 a month as profits to executants first party is cast by the document upon the executant second party. The document was to remain in operation for a period of ten years and the possession of executant second party during that period could not be disturbed by the executant first party. There is a clear provision in the deed that the executants first party shall not be entitled to demand accounts from the executant second party. In short, the rights given by the document to Ramman Lal are identical with the rights possessed by a lessee. The document is however not described as a deed of lease.

But in order to ascertain the real character of the document one has to look to the terms of the deed, and the description of the document given by the executant cannot be an infallible guide. The document secures to Ramman Lal the right of possession over the mahal for a period of ten years certain, and casts on him the liability to pay the Govt. revenue and Rs. 600 a year on account of profits to executants first party. Ramman Lal has therefore the right to enjoy the property covered by the document for the period mentioned above and this right was transferred to him by executants first party. The document therefore fulfils all the characteristics of a lease and must be regarded as such. We may mention that the document is inscribed on a stamped paper of Rs. 15 which, in the year 1935, was the correct stamp duty payable on a deed of lease of this character. If by the document Ramman Lal was to be appointed a mere manager, as found by the Court below, much less stamp duty would have been paid. We therefore hold that this document also embodies a transaction of lease.

In view of the conclusions arrived at by us this appeal must prevail. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the order of the Court below and send the case back to that Court with the direction to treat Ramman Lal as a lessee under the two documents for a period of ten years from 1343 F. and then to proceed with the case according to law. Ramman Lal is entitled to the costs of this appeal.

Mussalman Waqf Act (XLII of 1923), s. 10—District Judge if has jurisdiction to enquire into nature of property—Non-compliance by mutawalli with provisions of Act—District Judge, if can impose fine.

In proceedings under s. 10, Mussalman Waqf Act XLII of 1923, the District Judge has no jurisdiction to hold an inquiry into the nature of the property where the alleged mutwalli denies the existence of the waqf. 138 Ind. Cas. 725 (1), dissented from.

In case the mutwalli has not complied with the provisions of the Act the District Judge is not empowered himself to impose a fine on him. The offence must be dealt with by a Court constituted under Criminal P. C., i. e., by a Magistrate.

C. R. Ps. referred by Tek Chand and Beckett, JJ, dated January 16, 1941.

Order of Single Judge.

Din Mohammad, J.—This order will cover both Civil Revisions Nos. 168 and 234 of 1940. On February 9, 1939, the Shia Youngmen's Association, Lahore, (hereinafter to be called the Association) made an application under s. 10, Mussalman Waqf Act (XLII of 1923) praying that action be taken against Sayyed Fateh Ali Shah and Sayyed Hussain Ali Shah (hereinafter to be called the respondents) as they had failed to furnish a statement of account prescribed by the Act. This application was resisted by the respondents on several grounds. They contended inter alia that no waqf existed and consequently no action could be taken against them under the Act and that no penalty could be imposed on them by the District Judge. The District Judge repelled their contentions but instead of taking any action against them under s. 10, allowed them further opportunity to furnish a statement of account as contemplated by s. 3 of the Act. Both the Association and the respondents have put in petitions for revision against the order of the District Judge, the former urging that the District Judge should have imposed some penalty on the petitioners under s. 10 of the Act, and the latter contending that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to determine the nature of the waqf and to make the direction that he had made.

Two important questions emerge from these proceedings: (1) whether the District Judge has any jurisdiction to determine the nature of the property involved in the proceedings, if the so-called mutwalli denies the existence of any waqf and (2) whether the District Judge is empowered in case of default of the mutwalli to impose a penalty under s. 10. On the first question, the Association refers to a case reported in Mohammad Baqar v. Mohammad Casim (1) where a majority of the learned Judge of the Chief Court held that this power was vested in the District Judge. On behalf of the respondents, however, reliance is placed on Ali Mohammad v. Collector of Bhagalpur (2), Waheed Hasan v. Abdul Rahman (3) and Abdul Hussain v. Mohamad Ibrahim Raza (4) which all lay down that no such power is vested in the District Judge. My personal view is that the decision of the majority of the learned Judges in the Oudh case (1) is incorrect and that the law has been correctly enunciated in the three judgments relied on by the respondents. There is no provision in the Act which confers any jurisdiction on the District Judge to determine whether a certain property, in relation to which a denial is made as to its being waqf, is waqf or not. In fact, as I read the Act, it applies only to those cases where the waqf nature of the property is not disputed by any person interested therein; and if any proceedings are taken under the Act against any person on the ground that he is a mutwalli of a waqf as contemplated by the Act, the District Judge ceases to have jurisdiction as soon as that person asserts that there is no waqf of which he can be called a mutwalli.

On the second question, the Association relies on a remark made by Sulaiman and Niamat Ullah, JJ., in a case reported in Nasrullah Khan v. Wajid Ali (5) which in a way favours the contention that the District Judge is himself empowered to impose a penalty under s. 10 on a mutwalli who fails to furnish a statement of account as required by the Act. I am, however, not disposed to agree with the learned Judges in this matter. In my view, there is nothing in the Act which empowers the District Judge to exercise magisterial powers and to punish the so-called offender under s. 10. The language of the section rather negatives the possibility of any such power being vested in the District Judge. All that the Legislature intended to do in enacting s. 10 was to create an offence for non-compliance with the provisions of the Act, but the mere creation of an offence in a special Act does not confer any magisterial jurisdiction on the particular Court before which the proceedings under that special Act are to be taken. Take for instance the Companies Act which creates offences in certain cases, but the mere fact that penalties are provided in the Act does not empower the liquidation Court to assume magisterial jurisdiction against the delinquents. Similarly, in several other special Acts penalties are provided for non-compliance with the bye-laws or the rules made under those Acts but in all cases the procedure laid down in the Criminal P. C., must be observed before an offender is punished. I am, therefore, disposed to hold that the District Judge has neither the power to determine whether a certain property is waqf or not when the existence of a waqf is denied by any interested person nor is he empowered to impose any penalty on any delinquent under s. 10. In the former case, parties have to be referred to an ordinary Civil Court and in the latter, to an ordinary Criminal Court. Though I am clear in my views, I do not propose to decide these cases myself as at least four Muslim Judges of different Courts in India have taken a contrary view. The matter involved is important from the point of view of the Muslim community and I accordingly forward these cases to the Hon'ble the Chief Justice with the request that they may be laid before a larger Bench with a view to have an authoritative pronouncement of this Court on the questions involved therein.

Order of Reference

Tek Chand and Beckett, JJ.—The following questions of law arise in this case and were referred by Din Mohammad, J. to a Division Bench for an authoritative decision: (1) Whether in proceedings under s. 10, Mussalman Waqf Act, XLII of 1923, the District Judge has jurisdiction to hold an enquiry into the nature of the property where the alleged mutwalli denies the existence of the waqf; and (2) Whether in case of default by the mutwalli the District Judge is empowered to himself impose a fine on him, or whether he should file a complaint against the mutwalli in a Criminal Court.

The provisions of the Act are by no means clear and there is a serious conflict of judicial decisions bearing on the point. The questions are of public importance and we think that they should be settled by a Full Bench. We, accordingly, refer the two questions above-mentioned to the Full Bench. The rulings bearing on the points are: Mohammad Baqar v. Mohammad Casim (1), Abdul Wahid v. Chheddu (6), Nasrullah Khan v. Wajid Ali (5), Nasrullah v. Wahid Ali (7), *Wāheed Hasan v. OPINION

Young, C. J.—Two questions of law have been referred to this Full Bench for decision. They are :

"(1) Whether in proceedings under s. 10 Mussalman Waqf Act, XLII of 1923 the District Judge has jurisdiction to hold an inquiry into the nature of the property where the alleged mutwalli denies the existence of the waqf; and

(2) Whether in case the mutwalli has not complied with the provisions of the Act the District Judge is empowered himself to impose a fine on him?"

Dealing first with the first question of law, Mr. Barkat Ali relies upon Mohammad Baqar v. Mohammad Casim (1) where it was decided that the District Judge had power to decide whether the property was waqf or not. Counsel argues upon this authority on behalf of the petitioner that the Act applies to all waqfs whether they are admitted to be waqfs or not, and secondly that the jurisdiction of the District Court applies to all waqf properties, and therefore the District Judge must decide as a preliminary point whether the property in question is waqf or not and that a mere denial by the respondent that the property is waqf cannot oust the jurisdiction of the Court. It is an elementary proposition of law that every Court acting in a judicial capacity, whose jurisdiction is denied, has jurisdiction to decide whether it has jurisdiction or not: Budh Singh Dudhuria v. Niradbaran Roy (12) at p. 437. It is necessary however to look at the Mussalman Waqf Act itself to see whether this proposition of law applies or not. Under s. 3 (1) it is enacted that every mutwalli shall furnish to the Court (i. e., under s. 2 (b), the Court of the District Judge or such other Court subordinate to the High Court as the Provincial Govt. may by notification in the official Gazette designate in this behalf) a statement containing particulars of the waqf property, the income, etc. Under s. 3 (2) every such statement must be accompanied by a copy of the deed or instrument creating the waqf. Under s. 4 (1) of the Court shall cause notice of the furnishing of such a statement to be affixed in some conspicuous place in the court-house, etc., and thereafter any person may apply to the Court by a petition in writing for an order requiring the mutwalli to furnish further particulars or documents. Under s. 4 (2) the Court may, after making such inquiry as it thinks fit, order the mutwalli to furnish such particulars or documents. Under s. 5 mutwalli must furnish accounts and s. 6 provides for the audit of such accounts. Under s. 10 the Act provides that if there is any failure to furnish the necessary statements or documents, or if the mutwalli furnishes false statements or documents, he is punishable with a fine which may extend to Rs. 500.

When the nature and scope of the Act are considered, it appears to me that the Act merely confers administrative powers upon the "Court." The object is to have on record full particulars of all waqf property and to enforce that the mutwalli shall honestly carry out the provisions of the trust imposed upon him, and to have in a convenient place information available to the public, or to any beneficiary of the waqf, in order that they may see whether the waqf property is being properly administered and, if it is not, that any one may file an information against the mutwalli so that the penalty imposed by s. 10 may be inflicted upon him. The "Court" is nowhere in the Act said to be acting in its judicial capacity. The "Court" under this Act has duties almost identical with those of the Registrar, Joint Stock Companies, under the Indian Companies Act. Under the latter Act, it is the duty of the companies to lodge certain information and documents with the Registrar and if there is a failure on the part of a company or its officials so to act, penalties are provided as in s. 10, Mussalman Waqf Act. It has never been contended that the Registrar, Joint Stock Companies, acts in any way in a judicial capacity. It has been assumed in the authorities relied upon by the petitioner here that the "Court" under the Mussalman Waqf Act is a judicial tribunal acting in its judicial capacity. In my opinion, there is nothing in the Act to justify this assumption. The mistake has occurred by a misconstruction of the use of the word "Court" in the Act itself.

It does not appear to me to matter whether the nature of the waqf property is admitted or not. The "Court" is simply a depository for the information required under the Act. There is nothing in the Act itself which authorizes the District Judge to take any action if there is a failure to comply with the provisions of the Act. Of course he could, as any citizen could, if an infringement of the Act is brought to his notice, lodge an information before a Magistrate. It is conceded by Mr. Barkat Ali that if the District Judge did take upon himself to decide the nature of the waqf property, his decision would not be binding on anyone. Further, he has been forced to admit that only administrative powers are conferred on the "Court." It is clear that no appeal lies from the decision of the District Judge on this point. It would merely be a summary trial. I would be unwilling, therefore, to decide unless forced to do so, that the "Court" must take upon itself the duty of deciding whether the property is waqf or not when its decision was not binding. Such a proceeding would be a sheer waste of time. The use of the word "jurisdiction" in connection with this Act is misleading, this Act merely confers administrative powers upon the Court. With regard to the second point, it is clear that the District Judge cannot himself impose a fine for neglect of the duties imposed upon a mutwalli by this Act. This point is concluded by a reference to s. 28, Criminal P. C., which provides that any offence under the I. P. C. may be tried by the High Court, the Court of Session, or by any other Court by which such offence is shown to be triable and to s. 29 which enacts that (1) any offence under any other law, when any Court is mentioned in this behalf in such law, shall be tried by such Court, and (2) when no Court is so mentioned, it may be tried by the High Court or by any Court constituted under this Code by which such offence is shown to be triable. The offence under the Mussalman Waqf Act is an offence "under any other law." No Court is mentioned in this Act as a Court which has jurisdiction to try such an offence. It must therefore be dealt with by a Court constituted under the Criminal P. C., i. e., by a Magistrate.

If it was held that the District Judge has jurisdiction to inquire into the nature of the waqf property and to punish any neglect on the part of the mutwalli to provide the necessary information and particulars, the result would be that the trial by the District Judge would be summary in its nature and no appeal would lie from the District Judge's decision, his decision would not be binding on anybody and the Civil Court might, in the meantime, be moved to decide the matter judicially and might come to a decision, after a full investigation, contrary to the decision of the District Judge, but in the meantime the mutwalli might be penalized by heavy fines imposed upon him by the District Judge. Quite apart from the considerations set out in this judgment, it appears to me that no such extraordinary state of affairs could have been contemplated by the Act. We answer both the questions in the negative. The revision petitions will be returned to the Single Judge to be dealt with in accordance with the answers to the questions put to this Bench.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 115, 105, 151, O. IX, r. 9—Order setting aside dismissal of case for default—Revision, if lies—Dismissal for default—Setting aside of 'Sufficient cause', within meaning of O. IX, r. 9—Inherent jurisdiction of Court to restore case.

Under s. 105 (1), Civil P. C., the propriety of the order setting aside the dismissal of a case for default of the plaintiff cannot be set forth as a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal from the decree ultimately passed in the suit, and hence where an order sets aside the dismissal for default and restores the case, there is a case decided within the meaning of s. 115 and an application in revision lies against the order restoring the case. 133 Ind. Cas. 129 (3) and 90 Ind. Cas. 180 (4), followed, 143 Ind. Cas. 222 (1) and 143 Ind. Cas. 307 (2), dissented from.

The plaintiff's application for permission to sue as pauper was dismissed by the Court for plaintiff's default. An application for restoration was made by the plaintiff the same day alleging that he was present in the Court compound from 10 a.m. and explaining that he did not attend the Court when the case was put up for hearing because he did not hear the case called out. The Court held that there was not a sufficient cause for restoration because there was no sufficient cause for the non-appearance within the meaning of O. IX, r. 9 of the Civil P. C. He added however "but in the interest of justice, I am of opinion that the case be restored on payment of costs to the contesting opposite party":

Held, that as the plaintiff was present in the Court on the date fixed for hearing, the Court was not justified in holding that there was no sufficient cause for the restoration under O. IX, r. 9, Civil P. C., and it had, therefore, power to restore the case and in the circumstances of the case was justified in restoring it.

[Case-law referred to.]

C. R. App. of the order of the Munsif, Haveli, Lucknow, dated September 21, 1940.

Mr. Govind Behari Lal, for the Applicant.

Mr. Imtiaz Ali Sufi, for Opposite Party No. 1.

Order.—This is an application in revision under s. 115, of the Civil P. C. against certain orders passed by the learned Munsif of Haveli, Lucknow, restoring a case which he had dismissed because the applicant failed to attend in Court when the case was called out.

The applicant, Ram Narain, had applied for permission to sue as a pauper under O. XXXIII, r. 1, of the Civil P. C. and August 24, 1940, was fixed for hearing this application. Ram Narain did not attend when the case was called out. The application was opposed by one of the opposite parties, Baijnath, who is the applicant in the present revision application, and the application was dismissed under O. IX, r. 8.

An application for restoration was made by Ram Narain the same day. Ram Narain alleged that he was present in the Court compound from 10 A.M. and explained that he did not attend the Court when the case was put up for hearing because he did not hear the case called out. He filed an affidavit and produced two witnesses to support it. The Munsif did not consider that the witnesses, who stated that Ram Narain had been present in the Court compound from 10 A.M., were reliable because they contradicted each other as to what Ram Narain had done that morning, though both agreed that he had been in the compound. The learned Munsif held that there was not a sufficient cause for restoration because it was Ram Narain's own fault if he did not hear the case called out, that is we understand he did not consider that there was sufficient cause for the non-appearance of Ram Narain within the meaning of O. IX, r. 9, of the Civil P. C. He added however :—

"But in the interest of justice I am of opinion that the case be restored on payment of costs to the contesting opposite party."

He accordingly allowed Ram Narain's application and restored the case to its original number on payment by Ram Narain of Rs. 10 as costs. These costs were paid.

It is contended by Baijnath in this application in revision that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to set aside the order dismissing Ram Narain's application, apart from the provisions of O. IX, r. 9. Having held that there was no sufficient cause made out for the non-attendance of Ram Narain, the Munsif acted, it is argued, without jurisdiction, or, at any rate, with material irregularity in restoring the case.

The first question for consideration is whether an application in revision lies. On this point we have been referred to various authorities.

In M. Mohiuddin Ahmad v. Hanuman Pershad (A. I. R. 1933 Oudh, 331) (1), it was held by a Single Judge of this Court that an application against an order for restoration of a suit under O. IX, r. 9 cannot be entertained for the simple reason that the validity of such an order could be attacked under s. 105 in an appeal from the final decree passed in the suit.

In Panna Lal v. Basdeo, (A. I. R. 1933 All. 118) (2), a similar view was taken by a Bench of the Allahabad High Court. In this case a suit had been restored by an Assistant Collector who had originally dismissed it under O. IX, r. 8. It was said that that order could be set aside by the Assistant Collector either under O. IX, r. 9, or under the inherent jurisdiction vested in Courts by s. 151. The order was not appealable to the District Judge and, therefore, no revision lay to the High Court.

A different view had, however, been taken previously by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Radha Mohan Dutt v. Abbas Ali Biswas, (A. I. R. 1931 All. 294) (3). It was said by the Full Bench in this case that under s. 105 (1) of the Civil P. C. the propriety of the order setting aside an ex parte decree cannot be set forth as a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal from the decree ultimately passed in the suit, and that where an order sets aside an ex parte decree there is a case decided and not merely an interlocutory order during the pendency of the suit. Consequently the High Court is entitled to interfere in revision.

The same view had been taken by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in an earlier case, Ram Sarup v. Gaya Prasad, (A. I. R. 1925 All. 610) (4).

We are of opinion that the question whether the application was properly restored could not be raised in an appeal from a decree passed in the suit, and, therefore, there was a case decided within the meaning of s. 115 and an application in revision lies.

The second question for consideration is whether the Munsif was justified in passing an order which must have been passed under s. 151, of the Civil P. C. when he was not justified on his own admission in passing the order under the provisions of the law which applied to such a case, namely, O. IX, r. 9.

In most of the cases to which we were referred on this point the question was whether a Court has power, apart from the provisions of O. IX, r. 13, to set aside an ex parte decree passed by itself.

In Neelavani v. Narayana Reddi, (I. L. R. 43 Mad. 94) (5), it was held that a Court has no such power. Similarly in K. B. Dutt v. Shamsuddin Shah Shaheb, (A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 488) (6), it was said that if no case is made out to satisfy r. 13 of O. IX, it is not open to the Court to enlarge the rule by taking recourse to s. 151, and that where the Court invokes its inherent jurisdiction under s. 151 in these circumstances it is an instance of a decree being set aside irregularly, the Court purporting to exercise powers which it does not possess.

A similar view was taken by the Allahabad High Court in A. H. Ghaznavi v. Sardar Gurcharan Singh, (A. I. R. 1937 All. 691) (7), where it was also remarked that no revision lies to the High Court under s. 115 from an order passed under O. IX, r. 13, refusing to set aside an ex parte decree, as the person aggrieved could appeal against that decree. That, however, is not the position in the present case.

We have already referred to the observation of the Allahabad High Court in Panna Lal v. Basdeo (2), that an order under O. IX, r. 8, could be set aside either under O. IX, r. 9, or under the inherent jurisdiction vested in Courts by s. 151.

It has also been recently held by a member of this Bench in Badri Prasad v. Ambika Persad, (1940 O. W. N. 1086), (8), that the proposition that where an alternative remedy is provided the Court is precluded from exercising its inherent jurisdiction under s. 151, is too wide and does not take into account cases of special and exceptional character which may demand the exercise of the equitable jurisdiction in the ends of justice to correct palpable mischiefs.

We are not prepared to hold in the present case that the Munsif had no power to restore the application. We are not indeed satisfied that he was justified in the view that there was no sufficient cause for restoration, that is under O. IX, r. 9. It was held in Ram Shankar Tewari v. Ram Narain Tewari, (A. I. R. 1928 All. 301) (9), that no order of dismissal in default should have been passed till the end of the day when the Court was rising, because there could be no default until the Court rose for the day.

In the present case we know that Ram Narain was present at the Court on the day fixed for the hearing of his application because he applied for restoration of the case that very day. It is not stated at what time application for restoration was made, and this, we think, should have been noted by the Court below. Nor did the Court below note the time when the case was dismissed. It is possible that Ram Narain was not present in the Court compound when the case was originally called out, the case having been taken early in the day. It is also possible that the case was not called out in such a way that every one in the compound could hear. A third possibility is that Ram Narain had gone away temporarily, as litigants may no doubt sometimes be obliged to. The Munsif did not discuss the question how it was that Ram Narain failed to hear the case called out. He did not find that Ram Narain was not present in the compound at the time: he merely said that it was the applicant's fault that he did not hear the case being called out. That is not a satisfactory way of dealing with the matter. In any event we are of opinion that since Ram Narain was present and attended in Court on the date fixed the Court below was justified in restoring the case.

We do not consider that there is any good ground for interference with the orders passed and we accordingly dismiss this application with costs.

Application dismissed.

FEDERAL COURT

Case No. I of 1941

April 22, 1941

GWYER, C. J.; S. VARADACHARIAR AND BEAUMONT, JJ.

In the matter of THE HINDU WOMEN'S RIGHTS TO PROPERTY ACT, 1937 (CEN-TRAL ACT XVIII OF 1937) AND THE HINDU
WOMEN'S RIGHTS TO PROPERTY (AMENDMENT ACT) 1938 (CENTRAL ACT XI OF 1938)

AND

In the matter of A SPECIAL REFERENCE
UNDER SECTION 213 OF THE GOVERN-MENT OF INDIA ACT, 1935

Hindu Women's Right to Property Act (XVIII of 1937)—Hindu Women's Rights to Property (Amendment) Act (XI of 1938)—Acts, whether operate to regulate succession to agricultural land in Governors' Provinces—Subject-matter of devolution by survivorship of non-agricultural property is included in entry No. 7 of List III, the Concurrent List, of Government of India Act, 1935, (25 & 26 Geo. V, Ch. 42).

The Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act XVIII of 1937, and the Hindu Women's Rights to Property (Amendment) Act XI of 1938, (a) do not operate to regulate succession to agricultural land in the Governors' Provinces; and (b) do operate to regulate devolution by survivorship of property other than agricultural land. [p. 363, col. 1.]

The subject of devolution by survivorship of property other than agricultural land is included in entry No. 7 of List III, the Concurrent List, Govt. of India Act, 1935. [ibid.]

Gwyer, C. J.—This is a Special Reference which His Excellency the Governor-General has been pleased to make to the Court under s. 213 of the Constitution Act. The questions referred are :—

- (1) Does either the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937 (Central Act XVIII of 1937), which was passed by the Legislative Assembly on February 4, 1937; and by the Council of State on April 6, 1937, and which received the Governor-General's assent on April 14, 1937, or the Hindu Women's Rights to Property (Amendment) Act, 1938 (Central Act XI of 1938), which was passed in all its stages after April 1, 1937, operate to regulate

- (a) succession to agricultural land?
 - (b) devolution by survivorship of property other than agricultural land?
- (2) Is the subject of devolution by survivorship of property other than agricultural land included in any of the entries in the three Legislative Lists in the Seventh Schedule to the Govt. of India Act, 1935?

There being no "opposite party" properly so-called to this Reference, it was not considered necessary or useful to serve any parties with notice of the Reference. But, as the Court desired to hear the various possible viewpoints presented and argued, it suggested to the Advocate-General of India the desirability of inviting brief statements from the Advocates-General of the Provinces, containing the point of view that each of them wished to present and arguments in support thereof. The Advocate-General of India has filed a statement on behalf of the Govt. of India and he has also placed on the file statements from the Advocates-General of seven of the Provinces. As the Court further intimated that besides hearing the Advocate-General of India it would be prepared to hear two more Counsel, the Advocate-General of Madras and United Provinces appeared and took part in the argument. The Court is indebted to all the learned Counsel for the assistance which they have afforded it.

The doubts which have led to the Reference arise from the fact that the bill which became the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937 (Act No. XVIII of 1937), which for convenience is hereafter referred to as Act No. XVIII, was passed by the Legislative Assembly of the Indian Legislature on February 4, 1937, that is, before Part III of the Constitution Act came into operation and at a time when the powers of the Legislature were plenary, but was passed by the Council of State only on April 6, 1937, that is, after Part III, had come into operation, and received the Governor-General's assent only on April 14, 1937. After April 1, 1937, the Central Legislature was precluded from dealing with the subjects enumerated in List II of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution Act, so far as the Governors' Provinces were concerned. Laws with respect to the "devolution of agricultural land" could be enacted only by the Provincial Legislatures (entry No. 21 of List II), and "wills, intestacy and succession, save as regards agricultural land" appeared as entry No. 7 of List III, the Concurrent List. Act No. XVIII, read with the amending Act of 1938, endeavoured to improve the position of Hindu widows in two classes of cases: (a) where by the operation of the principle of survivorship the widow is excluded from enjoyment of the share of her husband in property which he held jointly with other co-parceners, and (b) where, even apart from the rule of survivorship, the widow is excluded from claiming any share in her husband's estate by reason of the existence of sons, grandsons or great grandsons of the deceased who under the law take in preference to the widow. Provision is also made for securing a share to a widow even in cases where her husband had predeceased the last male owner (s. 3 (1), first proviso). The Act purports to deal in quite general terms with the "property" or "separate property" of a Hindu dying intestate, or his "interest in joint family property", it does not distinguish between agricultural land and other property and is therefore not limited in terms to the latter. It may be mentioned that some aspects of the questions now referred have already been discussed in one or two cases (see, for instance, Janak Dulari v. Sri Gopal (1), on the assumption that the Bill had been passed even by the Council of State before the new Constitution came into force. From the dates given in the present Reference it will be seen that this assumption is not correct. It may be added that the validity and operation of the amending Act of 1938 (Act No. XI of 1938) call for no separate discussion, since it does not enact any independent provisions, but merely makes some amendments in the Act of the previous year.

Of the questions referred, Question (2) will in effect be answered by the views to be expressed in the course of the discussion of Question (1); and it is therefore not separately considered. In the statements filed before the hearing and in the course of the arguments, the following contentions were raised with respect to Question (1):—

(i) That Act No. XVIII was never properly passed at all, in view of the stage at which it was taken up and dealt with by the Council of State and the Governor-General.

(ii) That the Act was in any view ultra vires the Indian Legislature, so far as its operation might affect agricultural land in the Governors' Provinces.

(iii) That if the Act should be held to be only in part ultra vires, it would not on the authorities be permissible to sever the good from the bad, so as to allow it at any rate to operate in respect of property other than agricultural land in the Governors' Provinces.

(iv) That even if it were permissible to uphold the Act to a limited extent, the provision in s. 3 (2) relating to the interest of the deceased in Hindu joint family property would be ultra vires the Indian Legislature, on the ground that the mention of "succession" in entry No. 7 of List III of the Seventh Schedule does not include or authorize legislation in respect of the benefit which accrues to the members of a Mitakshara joint Hindu family under the rule of survivorship.

In addition to the constitutional points above summarized, a suggestion was made on the construction of the Act that it does not provide for the devolution of any property by survivorship nor confer on the widow a right by survivorship, though it gives her the same interest in the joint property as her deceased husband had. This does not seem to be tenable. It is true that s. 3 of the Act does not use the word "survivorship", and it may be that the widow taking a share under the Act does not become a co-parcener with the other sharers; but there can be no doubt that in the cases in which it gives to the widow of a deceased co-parcener a right to a share in the joint property which she did not possess under the pre-existing law, it takes away to that extent the benefit of the rule of survivorship which would have accrued to the remaining co-parceners. The Reference must therefore be dealt with on the footing that so far as its effect goes, the Act does legislate "with respect to" the law of survivorship. It can make no difference for this purpose whether the measure confers on one person a benefit by way of survivorship or takes away from another the benefit of survivorship.

On the first contention, the Court is satisfied that no objection can be taken to the validity of the Act, on the ground only that it was introduced into the Legislature and passed by the Legislative Assembly before Part III of the Constitution Act came into force. Part XIII of the Constitution Act contains certain provisions entitled "Transitional Provisions", which are to apply "with respect to the period elapsing between the commencement of Part III of this Act and the establishment of the Federation". It is then enacted by s. 317 that the provisions of the Govt. of India Act, 1919, set out (with certain amendments consequential on the provisions of the Constitution Act) in the Ninth Schedule, are to continue to have effect, that is, during the transitional period, notwithstanding the repeal of the earlier Act by the Constitution Act. Among the provisions thus continued are the provisions of the earlier Act relating to the Indian Legislature; and it is clear that the Indian Legislature which was in existence immediately before the coming into force of Part III of the Act was continued in existence after that date, and was in all respects the same Legislature, though its legislative powers were no longer as extensive as they had previously been.

One of the provisions included in the Ninth Schedule is that a Bill shall not be deemed to have been passed by the Indian Legislature unless it has been agreed to by both Chambers either without amendment or with such amendments only as may be agreed to by both Chambers. It is common ground that the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Bill was agreed to without amendment by both Chambers of the Indian Legislature, and as soon as it received the Governor-General's assent, it became an Act [Ninth Schedule, para. 68 (2)]. Not until then had this or any other Court jurisdiction to determine whether it was a valid piece of legislation or not. It may sometimes become necessary for a Court to inquire into the proceedings of a Legislature, for the purpose of determining whether an Act was or was not validly passed; for example, whether it was in fact passed, as in the case of the Indian Legislature the law requires, by both Chambers of the Legislature before it received the Governor-General's assent. But it does not appear to the Court that the form, content or subject-matter of a Bill at the time of its introduction into, or of its consideration by, either Chamber of the Legislature is a matter with which a Court of law is concerned. The question whether either Chamber has the right to discuss a Bill laid before it is a domestic matter regulated by the rules of the Chamber, as interpreted by its Speaker, and is not a matter with which a Court can interfere, or indeed on which it is entitled to express any opinion. It is not to be supposed that a legislative body will waste its time by discussing a Bill which, even if it receives the Governor-General's assent, would obviously be beyond the competence of the Legislature to enact; but if it chooses to do so, that is its own affair, and the only function of a Court is to pronounce upon the Bill after it has become an Act.

In the opinion of this Court therefore it is immaterial that the powers of the Legislature changed during the passage of the Bill from the Legislative Assembly to the Council of State. The only date with which the Court is concerned is April 14, 1937, the date on which the Governor-General's assent was given; and the question whether the Act was or was not within the competence of the Legislature must be determined with reference to that date and to none other.

It is convenient to consider the second and third contentions together, viz. that the Act was beyond the competence of the Indian Legislature, so far as its operation might affect agricultural land in the Governors' Provinces; and that, if it were held to be in past beyond the competence of the Legislature, its provisions were not severable, so that it could not even affect property other than agricultural land. No doubt if the Act does affect agricultural land in the Governors' Provinces, it was beyond the competence of the Legislature to enact it; and whether or not it does so must depend upon the meaning which is to be given to the word "property" in the Act. If that word necessarily and inevitably comprises all forms of property, including agricultural land, then clearly the Act went beyond the powers of the Legislature; but when a Legislature with limited and restricted powers makes use of a word of such wide and general import, the presumption must surely be that it is using it with reference to that kind of property with respect to which it is competent to legislate and to no other. The question is thus one of construction, and unless the Act is to be regarded as wholly meaningless and ineffective, the Court is bound to construe the word "property" as referring only to those forms of property with respect to which the Legislature which enacted the Act was competent to legislate; that is to say, property other than agricultural land. On this view of the matter, the so-called question of severability, on which a number of Dominion decisions, as well as decisions of the Judicial Committee, were cited in the course of the argument does not arise. The Court does not seek to divide the Act into two parts, viz. the part which the Legislature was competent, and the part which it was incompetent, to enact. It holds that, on the true construction of the Act and especially of the word "property" as used in it, no part of the Act was beyond the Legislature's powers.

There is a general presumption that a Legislature does not intend to exceed its jurisdiction: Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes (8th Ed.) 126; and there is ample authority for the proposition that general words in a statute are to be construed with reference to the powers of the Legislature which enacts it. "It seems to me" said Lord Esher, M. R. in Colquhoun v. Heddon (2) at p. 134,

"that, unless Parliament expressly declares otherwise, in which case, even if it should go beyond its own rights as regards the comity of nations, the Courts of this country must obey the enactment, the proper construction to be put on general words used in an English Act of Parliament is, that Parliament was dealing only with such persons or things as are within the general words and also within its proper jurisdiction, and that we ought to assume that Parliament (unless it expressly declares otherwise), when it uses general words, is only dealing with persons or things over which it has properly jurisdiction."

Where the expression "personal estate" occurred in a Victorian Statute imposing duties on the estates of deceased persons, it was held by the Judicial Committee that it must be construed as referring only to such personal estate as the colonial grant of probate conferred jurisdiction on the personal representatives to administer, whatever the domicile of the testator might be; that is to say, personal estate situate within the Colony, in respect of which alone the Supreme Court of Victoria had power to grant probate:

"Their Lordships thought that in imposing a duty of this nature the Victorian Legislature also was contemplating the property which was under its own hand, and did not intend to levy a tax in respect of property beyond its jurisdiction. And they held that the general expressions which import the contrary ought to receive the qualification for which the appellant contends, and that the statement of personal property to be made by the executor under s. 7 (2) of the Act should be confined to that property which the probate enables him to administer."

Blackwood v. The Queen (3) at p. 98. In the well known case of Macleod v. Attorney-General for New South Wales (4) the Legislature of New South Wales had enacted a law providing that 'whosoever being married marries another person during the life of the former husband or wife, whosoever such second marriage takes place, shall be liable to penal servitude for seven years.'

The appellant, who had during the lifetime of his wife married another woman in the United States of America and had in a New South Wales Court been convicted of bigamy under the provisions of this law, contended that the Court had had no jurisdiction to try him for the alleged offence, since the Act under which he was tried, according to its true construction, was limited to offences committed within the jurisdiction of the local Legislature by persons subject at the time of the offence to its jurisdiction; and that upon any other construction the Act would be ultra vires. Lord Halsbury, delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee, observed that if their Lordships construed the statute as it stood and upon the bare words, any person, married to any other person, who married a second time anywhere in the habitable globe, was amenable to the criminal jurisdiction of New South Wales, if he could be caught in that Colony. "That seems to their Lordships", he continued, "to be an impossible construction of the statutes; the Colony can have no such jurisdiction, and their Lordships do not desire to attribute to the Colonial Legislature an effort to enlarge their jurisdiction to such an extent as would be inconsistent with the powers committed to a Colony, and indeed inconsistent with the most familiar principles of international law. It, therefore, becomes necessary to search for limitations, to see what would be the reasonable limitation to apply to words so general; and their Lordships take it that the words 'whosoever being married' mean 'whosoever being married, and who is amenable, at the time of the offence committed, to the jurisdiction of the Colony of New South Wales.'"

And again in a later passage:

"It appears to their Lordships that the effect of giving the wider interpretation to this statute necessary to sustain this indictment would be to comprehend a great deal more than Her Majesty's subjects; more than any persons who may be within the jurisdiction of the Colony by any means whatsoever; and that, therefore, if that construction were given to the statute, it would follow as a necessary result that the statute was ultra vires of the Colonial Legislature to pass. Their Lordships are far from suggesting that the Legislature of the Colony did mean to give to themselves so wide a jurisdiction. The more reasonable theory to adopt is that the language was used, subject to the well-known and well-considered limitation, that they were only legislating for those who were actually within their jurisdiction, and within the limits of the Colony."

The principle is the same for all law-making bodies with limited powers:

"Now it is true that a by-law must be, as a general rule, consistent with the principles of the Common Law; that if it violates those principles it is bad; and it follows that if it is capable of two constructions, one of which would make it bad and the other good, we must adopt that construction which will make it consonant with the principles of the Common Law."

Collman v. Mills (5), at p. 399. In D'Emden v. Pedder (6), the High Court of Australia held that they would not be justified in assuming that a State Parliament intended general words in an enactment to have an application which would conflict with the constitution of the Commonwealth :

"It is in our opinion a sound principle of construction that Acts of a sovereign Legislature, and indeed of subordinate Legislatures such as a Municipal authority, should, if possible, receive such an interpretation as will make them operative and not inoperative.....It is a settled rule in the interpretation of statutes that general words will be taken to have been used in the wider or more restricted sense according to the general scope and object of the enactment." (at pp. 119, 120).

There is this also to be said. The underlying purpose of Act No. XVIII is plainly stated in its preamble: "Whereas it is expedient to amend the Hindu Law to give better rights to women in respect of property". It is therefore a remedial Act seeking to remove or to mitigate what the Legislature presumably regarded as a mischief; and as such it ought to receive a beneficial interpretation: "If the enactment be manifestly intended to be remedial, it must be so construed as to give the most complete remedy which the phraseology will permit". Coal Economising Gas Co., In re Gover's Case (7), at p. 198. It may well be that the Indian Legislature, if it had been able to pass the Act while it still possessed plenary powers, would have desired that the "better rights" which it sought to give to Hindu women should extend to agricultural land as well as to other property; but it cannot be supposed that when, after restriction of its powers, it passed, an Act with the above preamble, it did not intend to make the enactment as effective as it was within its power to make it. It was contended before the Court that the passing of the Act with a restricted effect might result in some cases in a widow being deprived of advantages which she possessed under the pre-existing law. The examples adduced by the Advocate-General of India were by no means conclusive, and it should not be assumed that the Court accepts the contention; but even if it were true that an Act intended to be remedial, though possibly limited in scope, was found in a small minority of cases to prejudice rather than to benefit those whom it was intended to help, this would be no reason why the Court should not adopt the construction which is on the whole best calculated to give effect to the manifest intention of the Legislature.

The Court has already pointed out that the question is one of the construction of the Act, that is to say, of ascertaining its true meaning, and that the construction which has commended itself to the Court leaves no room for the application of the principle of non-severability of subject-matter. It should not however be thought that the Court has overlooked cases cited to it in which the same words have been applied in an Act to a number of purposes, some within and some without the power of the Legislature, and the whole Act has been held to be bad. If the restriction of the general words to purposes within the power of the Legislature would be to leave an Act with nothing or next to nothing in it, or an Act different in kind, and not merely in degree, from an Act in which the general words were given the wider meaning, then it is plain that the Act as a whole must be held invalid, because in such circumstances it is impossible to assert with any confidence that the Legislature intended the general words which it has used to be construed only in the narrower sense: Owners of S. S. Kaltbia v. Wilson (8), Vacuum Oil Company Ltd. v. State of Queensland (9), R. v. Commonwealth Court of Conciliation and Arbitration (10), British Imperial Oil Co. Ltd. v. Federal Commissioner of Taxation (11). If the Act is to be upheld, it must remain, even when a narrower meaning is given to the general words, "an Act which is complete, intelligible, and valid and which can be executed by itself"; Wynes: Legislative and Executive Powers in Australia 51, citing Presser v. Illinois (12). These words appear to the Court apt to describe Act No. XVIII, if construed as the Court has thought right to construe it, that is to say, even when a narrower meaning is given to the general words which the Legislature has used.

It remains to deal with the fourth contention, that is, with regard to the import of the term "succession" in entry No. 7 of List III and of the word "devolution" in entry No. 21 of List II. The question raised is whether these words which prima facie imply the passing of an interest from one person to another can include the change which takes place under the Mitaksharā Law in the extent of the interest possessed by the male members of a joint Hindu family in the joint property when one of these members dies. Borrowing a term from the English Law, this change has been described as the operation of the principle of survivorship. But the note of caution sounded by Lord Dunedin in Bajjnath Prasad Singh v. Tej Bali Singh (13), as to the use of the terms "co-parceners" and "co-parceners" in relation to a Mitakshara joint family is equally applicable to the use of the terms "joint-tenancy" and "survivorship"; for the incidents associated with joint ownership under the Mitakshara Law are not identical with those known to the English Law of joint-tenancy. There is however this degree of resemblance between the jus accrescendi and the effect of the death of one of the owners of joint family property under the Mitakshara law, that in a sense there is only an extinction of the deceased person's interest, and the shares of the survivors, whose pre-existing interest extended over the whole property are increased only because of the diminution in the number of sharers. The argument therefore is that words like "devolution" and "succession" cannot be held to include cases where the deceased person's interest does not pass to another but is merely extinguished or lapses. There are at least two answers to this argument.

Whatever may be the position under the English Law, the theory of extinction does not exactly describe the position which arises on the death of a member of a Mitakshara joint family. The result of a long course of decisions is that certain legal acts continue to operate on the interest of the deceased member even when what is ordinarily spoken of as the rule of survivorship is taking effect. Thus, if a creditor obtains a decree against a member of a joint family and during the latter's life-time attaches his undivided interest in the family property, the creditor will be entitled to proceed against that interest to the extent necessary for the satisfaction of his claim even after the property has survived to the other members by reason of the death of the judgment-debtor. In some of the Provinces there have also been decisions recognising a right of voluntary alienation in each joint owner, in respect of his undivided share, when the alienation is for value; and, if in this part of the country a member creates a mortgage over his undivided share, such mortgage has been held to be operative even after the death of the mortgagor. According to several decisions of the Madras High Court, the alienation by a member of his undivided share does not disrupt the joint status and yet the rights of the purchaser have been held not to be defeated by the death of the alienor, though no suit for partition be instituted during his lifetime. Results of this kind are wholly inconsistent with the theory of extinction or lapse, and even more so when the deceased happens to be the father of the survivors. It was recognised as early as Nanomi Babuas-in v. Modhun Mohun (14), that the application of the theory of the son's "pious obligation" to pay the father's debts has practically resulted in the pro tanto extinction of the son's independent rights in the family property; and s. 43 of the Civil P. C., provided that to the extent to which joint family property remained liable for the father's personal debts even after his death, it "shall be deemed to be property which has come to the hands of the son as his legal representative".

It is equally important to remember that neither in their ordinary grammatical significance nor by a long continued use in a technical sense have the words "devolution" and "succession" acquired a connotation that would preclude their application to describe the operation of the rule of survivorship as above explained. Eminent text-writers and Judges have used one or the other of these terms to include the accession of right which takes place on the death of one of the members of a Mitakshara joint family. Many enactments of Parliament and of the Indian Legislature have used the words "inheritance" and "succession" in juxtaposition, justifying the inference that succession is either another category from or a wider category than inheritance" (see some of these enactments referred to in Ilbert's Govt. of India, Chap. IV, and in Mulla's Hindu Law, p. 4). If in these enactments "succession" should be held not to include the principle of survivorship, it would be difficult to say what else that word is meant to refer to and in any other view the continued administration of that part of the Hindu Law by the British Indian Courts could not have been provided for, because there are no other appropriate words in those provisions. Such being the position as to the meaning of the words, it is permissible to add that it is difficult to conceive of any reason why in framing Lists II and III Parliament should have thought fit to take away the law of survivorship from the jurisdiction of the Indian Legislatures, and there is no justification for attributing oversight either, when, as above explained, the language employed may properly be held to comprehend the law of survivorship as well.

A line of cases in the High Courts dispensing with the production of a succession certificate when title to a "debt" is claimed by survivorship may seem to support the restricted interpretation of the word "succession" (cf. at p. 16). But taking this class of decisions as a whole they must be understood to rest not so much on the connotation of the words "succession" as on the meaning of the expression "effects of the deceased person" and on the reason of the rule relating to the production of a succession certificate in support of the claim to a "debt" prima facie due to a deceased person. (See Vairanán Chettiar v. Srinivasa Chettiar) (15). In any event, the two enactments not being in pari materia, such observations as may be found in these cases in support of the limited interpretation of the word "succession" cannot be held to be sufficient to override the cumulative effect of the considerations referred to above.

In one or two instances, eminent writers have employed language suggesting that "devolution" may comprehend cases of survivorship but not the word "succession" (see Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 270), but it is difficult to find any basis for this distinction. "Devolution" may be wider in scope than "succession" in the sense that the former is not restricted to the result of a "death" (see O. XXII, r. 10, Civil P. C.), but that is immaterial for the present purpose; and, as already stated, eminent Judges have used both the terms in a sense that will include the operation of the principle of survivorship.

The Court is therefore of opinion that the answers to the questions comprised in the Special Reference are as follows:—

- (1) The Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937, and the Hindu Women's Rights to Property (Amendment) Act, 1938,—
 - (a) do not operate to regulate succession to agricultural land in the Governors' Provinces; and
 - (b) do operate to regulate devolution by survivorship of property other than agricultural land.
- (2) The subject of devolution by survivorship of property other than agricultural land is included in entry No. 7 of List III, the Concurrent List.

The Court will report to His Excellency accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2—Plaintiff not aware of his right at date of former suit suing subsequently on such right—Second suit, if barred.

A right which a litigant possesses without knowing or ever having known that he possesses it, can hardly be regarded as a "portion of his claim" within the meaning of O. II, r. 2 (2), Civil P. C.

Where, therefore, the plaintiff at the date of the former suit was not aware of the right on which he claimed in a subsequent suit;

Held, that O. II, r. 2 did not apply to the case and the plaintiff was not precluded from suing in respect of that right. Anant Bibi v. Imdad Husain (1), 7 Ind. Cas. 289 (2) and 49 Ind. Cas. 54 (3), followed, 134 Ind. Cas. 654 (4) and Kishen Narain v. Nizamuddin (5), distinguished.

S. R. A. against the decree of the District Judge, Rae Bareilly, dated September 28, 1937.

Mr. Mohd Husain, for the Appellant.

Mr. Akhtar Husain, for Respondent No. 1.

Judgment.—This is a second rent appeal by the defendant arising out of a suit for recovery of land revenue under s. 108 (16) of the Oudh Rent Act.

Mst. Taj-un-nissa Bibi, the plaintiff-respondent, filed a suit to recover Rs. 361-3-11 with interest on account of arrears of the land revenue which she alleged to have paid for the years 1339 and 1340 Fasli on behalf of the defendants. The plaintiff is the lambardariya of Mahal Taj-un-nissa situate in village Kutra Bahadurganj. There are two khata khewats in this mahal, one of which khata khewat No. 1 stands in the name of Mst. Taj-un-nissa and the other khata khewat No. 2 stands in the names of the mortgagees who are defendants to the suit. This village was under attachment in 1339 and 1340 Fasli and the plaintiff's allegation was that the arrears of revenue due in respect of the khata khewat No. 2 had been realised by the Govt. from the plaintiff.

The material defence was that the revenue had been paid out of the realisations of khata khewat No. 2 when the mahal was under the direct management of the Govt. It was also pleaded that the suit was barred under the provisions of O. II, r. 2 of the Civil P. C.

The learned Assistant Collector held that the plaintiff had paid Rs. 353-2-10 as land revenue for the share of the defendants and Rs. 9-0-9 for the expenses of the attachment. He further found that O. II, r. 2 of the Civil P. C. did not bar the present suit of the plaintiff because the plaintiff was not aware of the accounts in 1337 Fasli. He accordingly decreed the suit against all the defendants jointly.

The defendants appealed and the learned District Judge upheld the findings of the learned Assistant Collector on both the points but modified the decree by separating the liabilities of the defendants inter se.

Bhagwan Dass, defendant No. 5, who is the appellant before me, has alone appealed. The other defendants have acquiesced in the decree.

The only point that has been urged before me in support of the appeal is that decision of the lower Courts is erroneous and that it should have been held that the plaintiff's present suit was barred by the provisions of O. II, r. 2, of the Civil P. C. It is argued that the plaintiff brought a suit on June 12, 1933, (vide plaint Ex. A-1) in respect of the revenue for 1337 Fasli and obtained a decree (Ex. A-2) on October 9, 1933, against certain defendants including the present defendant-appellant, that the revenue for 1339 and 1340 Fasli had become due at the time of the institution of the suit and the plaintiff's omission to sue in respect of the revenue for 1339 and 1340 Fasli was a bar to the maintainability of the present suit. Reference is made in this connection to para. 5 of the plaint (Ex. A-1), which shows that the plaintiff in the previous suit alleged ignorance of the revenue having been realised from the plaintiff's share as the mahal was under attachment in 1339 Fasli and expressed her inability to sue for 1339 Fasli on that ground. She further stated in that paragraph that she would sue for the revenue after she had become aware of the fact that the revenue had been realised. It is further argued that the plaintiff became aware in September 1933, of the liabilities of the defendants to pay the arrears of revenue and that she should have sought an amendment of the plaint so as to include the claim for 1339 and 1340 Fasli or obtained leave from the Court under O. II, r. 3, of the Civil P. C.

I am of opinion that these contentions have no force.

There is a concurrent finding of both the Courts below that the plaintiff was not fully aware of the account on the date of the filing of her suit and that she had a reason not to be aware of the assets and liabilities in respect of 1339 and 1340 Fasli on June 12,

1933, when she instituted the previous suit. The finding that the plaintiff was not aware of her assets and liabilities in respect of 1339 and 1340 Fasli at the time of the institution of the previous suit is based on admissible evidence and is binding in second appeal. The only question, therefore, which remains for determination is whether in view of this finding the lower Courts were justified in arriving at the conclusion that the provisions of O. II, r. 2 of the Civil P. C. did not apply to the case. I do not see any legal flaw in the decision arrived at by the two Courts below. The said rule lays down—

"(1) Every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action.

(2) Where a plaintiff omits to sue in respect of, or intentionally relinquishes, any portion of his claim, he shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished."

In a case under s. 7 of Act VIII of 1859, which was substantially to the same effect as the present O. II, r. 2 of the Civil P. C., 1908. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that a right which a litigant possesses without knowing or ever having known that he possesses it, can hardly be regarded as a "portion of his claim" within the meaning of the section in question. Their Lordships were further pleased to observe that upon the evidence in that case the plaintiff at the date of the former suit was not aware of the right on which he was not insisting. (See Amanat Bibi v. Imdad Husain, L. R. 15 I. A. 106) (1).

This decision was followed by the Allahabad High Court in Batul Kunwar v. Munni Lal (I. L. R. 32 All., 625) (2). In that case the plaintiff first obtained an ex parte decree against the mother of a deceased tenant for 1313 Fasli and he obtained another decree against the daughter of the deceased tenant for 1314 Fasli. The first decree was set aside and at the re-hearing the daughter was made a party. It was found that at the time the plaintiff brought the suit in respect of 1314 Fasli he was not aware that the daughter was the tenant in 1313 Fasli also. It was held, therefore, that the plaintiff having no knowledge when he had brought his suit in respect of 1314 Fasli that the daughter was the tenant in 1313 Fasli, could not be said to have omitted to sue in respect of that year, and the suit for 1314 Fasli was not barred by the provisions of s. 43 of the Civil P. C. of 1882 (corresponding to O. II, r. 2 of the Civil P. C. of 1908).

(2) 32 A 625; 7 Ind. Cas. 289; 7 A L J 738.

In Ram Khelawan v. Jaskaran (21 Oudh Cases 307) (3), Mr. L. Stuart, A. J. C., (afterwards Sir Louis Stuart) held that a person is not deleteriously affected by the provisions of O. II, r. 2 of the Civil P. C. if at the time he brought his former suit he was not in a position to know all his rights.

The case of Naba Kumar Hazra v. Radhashyam Mahish (A. I. R. 1931 P. C. 229) (4) is clearly distinguishable upon the facts. There it was held that the relief for rent and profits which could have been prayed for in a previous suit for conveyance of properties and arising out of the same cause of action cannot be prayed for in a subsequent suit. The precise question arising in the present case namely that the plaintiff was ignorant of her rights at the time when she brought the former suit did not arise in that case and was, therefore, rightly not considered.

The case of Kishan Narain v. Nizamuddin, (1937 O. W. N. 1146) (5), relied upon by learned Counsel for the defendant-appellant is equally inapplicable to the facts of the present case. No such question as is raised in the present case arose for decision in the above case. In the present case there is a concurrent finding of fact that the plaintiff was not aware at all of her assets and liabilities at the time of the previous suit. The statement of Mohammad Ahmad Khan, P. W. No. 2, general agent of the plaintiff, that he came to know about the payment of the revenue for 1339 and 1340 Fasli by the plaintiff for the shares of the defendants in September 1933, is not definite as it is qualified by the further statement that he could not include the amount in the previous suit as the accounts of Tahsil Kham were not ready. In view of this statement it was not possible for the plaintiff to have asked for amendment of the plaint in the previous suit. It is significant that the defendant-appellant did not raise the question of amendment of the plaint on the basis of the statement made by the general agent of the plaintiff either in the trial Court or before the lower Appellate Court. The decision relied upon has, therefore, no application to the present case.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, rr. 3, 4, 11, O. XLI, r. 4—Lower Court's decision jointly affecting all appellants—Death of one—Legal representative not brought on record within time—Appeal, if abates.

A suit against several defendants for a declaration that the plaintiffs were entitled to water their lands from a particular stream at a specified point and for a perpetual injunction that the defendants should remove their dam in order to enable the plaintiffs to do so, was decreed :

Held, that the decision jointly affected all the defendants and if in appeal by them one of them died and his legal representative was not brought on record within time, the appeal did not abate against all the appellants. 157 Ind. Cas. 994 (1), distinguished, 46 Ind. Cas. 50 (2), 146 Ind. Cas. 511 (2) (3), 154 Ind. Cas. 147 (4) and 146 Ind. Cas. 26 (5), relied on.

C. R. P. from an order of the Additional Judge, Peshawar, dated July 11, 1939.

Mr. Gul Mohd. Khan, for the Petitioners.

Sardar Jaman Singh, for Respondents
Nos. 1 to 5.

Mir Ahmad, J.—Five persons, who are respondents Nos. 1 to 5 before us, brought a suit against 11 defendants for a declaration that the plaintiffs were entitled to water their lands from a particular stream at a specified point and for a perpetual injunction that the defendants should remove their dam shown in the plaint in order to enable the plaintiffs to do so, and that the defendants should not interfere with their enjoyment of those water rights in future. The trial Judge decreed the claim. Out of 11 defendants nine appealed to the District Judge, the remaining two having been made respondents along with the five plaintiffs. Of the nine appellants one Khada Mir died and his legal representatives were not brought on the record within 90 days. The Additional Judge following Boota Mal v. Farid Khan (1) held that the appeal abated so far as all the appellants were concerned. He dismissed the appeal. The eight persons who were appellants in the lower Appellate Court and also the legal representatives of Khada Mir have jointly presented this application for revision against the order of the Additional Judge. Order XXII, rr. 3, 4 and 11, Civil P. C., read thus :

“Rule (3). (1) Where one of two or more plaintiffs lies and the right to sue does survive to the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs alone, or a sole plaintiff or sole surviving plaintiff dies and the right to sue survives, the Court, on an application made in that behalf shall cause the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff to be made a party and shall proceed with the suit. (2) Where within the time limited by law no application is made under sub-r. (1) the suit shall abate so far as the deceased plaintiff is concerned, and, on the application of the defendant, the Court may award to him the costs which he may have incurred in defending the suit, to be recovered from the estate of the deceased plaintiff.

Rule 4. (1) Where one of two or more defendants dies and the right to sue does not survive against the surviving defendant or defendants alone, or a sole defendant or sole surviving defendant dies and the right to sue survives, the Court, on an application made in that behalf shall cause the legal representative of the deceased defendant to be made a party and shall proceed with the suit. (2) Any person so made a party may make any defence appropriate to his character as legal representative of the deceased defendant. (3) Where within the time limited by law no application is made under sub-r. (1) the suit shall abate as against the deceased defendant.

Rule 11. In the application of this order to appeals, so far as may be the word "plaintiff" shall be held to include an appellant, the word "defendant" a respondent, and the word "suit" an appeal.

It is clear that if an appellant or a respondent dies and his legal representatives are not brought on the record within the limitation provided for the purpose, the appeal abates so far as that person is concerned. In case there are more than one appellant or respondent and the appeal has abated the question arises whether the appeal can be proceeded with by the other appellants or against the other respondents. In the case reported in Boota Mal v. Farid Khan (1) the plaintiff had appealed against several respondents. One of the respondents had died and his legal representatives were not brought on the record within 90 days. As the plaintiff wanted a decree against all the respondents jointly a Bench of this Court held that the appeal had abated against them all. This is a correct view. The judgment of the lower Court had become final so far as the respondent who had died was concerned. If the Appellate Court were to decide the case otherwise with regard to the other respondents there would have been two conflicting decrees in the same suit. The appeal could not therefore be carried on by the appellants against the other respondents and the appeal was consequently dismissed. Now the case where one of the appellants dies is different O. XLI, r. 4, Civil P. C., is in the following terms :

"Rule 4. Where there are more plaintiffs or more defendants than one in suit, and the decree appealed from proceeds on any ground common to all the plaintiffs or to all the defendants, any one of the plaintiffs or of the defendants may appeal . . . from the whole decree and thereupon the Appellate Court may reverse or vary the decree in favour of all the plaintiffs or defendants, as the case may be."

It is obvious that where the decision of the lower Court jointly affects all the appellants the Appellate Court has the power to reverse the decision with regard to all the persons concerned even though one of them may have appealed against it. As this rule enables the Appellate Court to set aside the whole decree at the instance of one of the several persons affected by it, there can be no question of the case becoming res judicata so far as those appellants who have not appealed, are concerned. In other words, the Court when reversing the order can reverse it in toto and thus avoid the consequence of there being two contradictory decrees in the same suit. The corollary is apparent that the abatement of the appeal with respect to one of such appellants does not necessarily lead to the result that the whole of the appeal abates and should consequently be dismissed. It follows that in this case the Appellate Judge could hear the appeal and if he thought that the decree should be set aside he could set it aside in favour of all the defendants in the lower Court even though one of them was not a party to the appeal by reason of abatement. This view was taken in the following case: The Division Bench of the Lahore High Court had come to this conclusion in Piyare Lal v. Chura Mani (2). The head-note runs thus :

"During the pendency of an appeal one of the appellants died and no application was made to bring his legal representatives on the record till after the period of limitation had expired. It was contended that the appeal had abated in toto: Held, that the decree of the trial Court having been passed on a ground common to all the defendants the case was covered by O. XLI, r. 4 and the appeal could therefore proceed."

The Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court has taken a similar view in Jamna Bhagat v. Oudh Behari Mal (3). The head-note is as under :

"A sale deed purported to transfer the entire property jointly in favour of all the vendees for one consolidated amount and there was no specification of different interests of the various vendees in the sale deed. The trial Court also treated the purchases as a joint one and passed one joint decree for pre-emption against all the vendees. One of the vendees died pending appeal and his legal representative was not brought on record. Held, that the mere fact that one of the vendees had dropped out, would not prevent the other vendees from prosecuting their appeal, because they were interested in the entire property transferred and were entitled to press their appeal as against the plaintiff on a ground common to all the vendees and that the appeal did not abate as a whole."

Court has said the same in Satulal Bhat-tacharjee v. Asiraddi (4). The head-note is to the following effect :

"A suit was brought by the plaintiffs for a declaration of their title to certain lands and for recovery of khas possession in respect of the same. The first Court granted a declaration of the plaintiff's title to a fractional share in the lands in suit but dismissed the plaintiff's suit for khas possession. On appeal the lower Appellate Court set aside that decision and decreed the plaintiff's suit in full. Defendant No. 1 died during the pendency of the appeal in the lower Appellate Court and his two sons were substituted as his heirs in the record of the appeal. A second appeal was filed on behalf of both the sons. One of the sons died during the pendency of the second appeal and his heirs were not brought on the record within the time allowed by law. Held, that O. XLI, r. 4 enables one of the two heirs of the defendant to maintain the appeal from the whole decree, and it was competent to the Appellate Court to reverse or vary the decree in favour of all the plaintiffs or all the defendants as the case may be, although one of the defendants or one of the defendant's heirs did not join in the appeal."

A Division Bench of the Madras High Court has laid down this proposition in Chenchuramayya v. Venkatasubhayya Chetty (5). The head-note is in the following terms:

"During the pendency of an appeal, appellants Nos. 2 and 5 died: the legal representatives of appellant No. 2 were brought on the record, but an application by an alleged representative of appellant No. 5 was dismissed. Held, that the lower Court's decree could be dealt with as a whole as it stood against all the appellants under O. XLI, r. 4 even though the legal representative of appellant No. 5 was absent on the record."

The case before us is therefore distinguishable from Boota Mal v. Farid Khan (1) and the authorities quoted above apply to it. We consequently hold that the lower Appellate Court has committed a material irregularity in deciding the case on the strength of an authority which is not applicable to the case at all. The petition is accepted, the order of the lower Appellate Court set aside and the case remanded for decision on merits. Costs in this Court shall follow the event.

JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—RESPONDENTS

Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act (VII of 1936), ss. 2, (8) (iii), 34, 2 (9) (a)—Decree passed for cash equivalent of bhag produce in suit for non-payment of share bhag produce by defendant, whether "debt" within meaning of Act—Execution proceedings in respect of such decree if can be stayed under s. 34—Bargadar, whether "debtor."

Where a decree is passed in a suit instituted by the decree-holder against the judgment-debtors for non-payment of their share of the bhag produce due in respect of a certain plot for a cash equivalent of the produce, such a decree is not a debt within the meaning of the Ben. Agri. Debtors Act and is, therefore, exempted from its operation. The execution proceedings in respect of such decree cannot, therefore, be stayed under s. 34.

The reference in sub-s. (9) (a), s. 2 to a person "who cultivates land himself" must mean a person other than a raiyyat or an under-raiyyat who has some interest in the land, which would entitle him to employ hired labourers, adhiaars, bargadars or bhagdars for the purpose of cultivating it, but such hired labourers and the other persons mentioned would not themselves be included within the definition of "debtor."

A. from appellate order of the District Judge, Khulna, dated May 19, 1939.

Messrs. Rajendra Bhusan Bakhshi and Mati Lal Acharjee, for the Appellant.

Mr. Abdul Quasem No. II, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal arises with reference to an application filed by the decree-holder under s. 47, Civil P. C., in which he asked that an order staying the execution proceedings under s. 34, Ben. Agri. Debtors Act, should be vacated. The application was rejected by the learned Munsif and the decision of the trial Court was affirmed on appeal by the learned District Judge of Khulna. It appears that the decree-holder had instituted a suit against the judgment-debtors for non-payment of their share of the bhag produce due in respect of a certain plot of land with an area of 40 bighas. His case was that the owner's share of the produce amounted to 160 maunds of paddy and a certain quantity of straw and he claimed Rs. 770 as the price of the produce, including interest. On contest he obtained a decree for Rs. 292-8-0 which, in the view of the Court which passed the decree, represented the proper price of the bhag produce due to the decree-holder. This decree was obtained on March 28, 1938 and the decree-holder applied for execution on June 17, 1938. Thereafter the judgment-debtors applied to the Debt Settlement Board and a notice was issued under s. 34, Ben. Agri. Debtors Act, on September 21, 1938, whereby further execution proceedings were stayed. It seems to have been urged before both the Courts below that the provisions of the Beng. Agri. Debtors Act had no application in respect of a liability of this sort, but this contention was not accepted as it was held that the Act did not exclude a decretal debt although the claim in the original suit was for bhag produce.

The main point for consideration in connection with this appeal is whether or not a decree such as the decree-holder was seeking to execute is exempted from the operation of the Act by reason of the provisions of s. 2 (8) (iii) of the Act. This sub-section provides that

"debt includes all liabilities of a debtor in cash or in kind, secured or unsecured, whether payable under a decree or order of a Civil Court or otherwise, and whether payable presently or in future but does not include... (iii) any share of the produce of land payable on account of land cultivated under the system known as adhi, barga or bhag."

There can be no doubt that if, according to the terms of the decree, a certain share of the produce of the land had been made payable to the decree-holder, the liability thereunder would have been clearly exempted from the operation of the Act. It must however be remembered that the amount of money which was decreed was considered by the Court which passed the decree to be the cash equivalent of the share of the produce due to the decree-holder and it therefore follows that this cash liability is really a liability in respect of a share of the produce of the land, to which reference is expressly made in s. 2 (8) (iii) of the Act. It is argued that the decree which the appellant was seeking to execute must be regarded as a debt within the meaning of the Act in view of the proviso to s. 18 which is in the following terms :

"Provided that a decree of a Civil Court relating to a debt shall be conclusive evidence as to the existence and amount of the debt as between the parties to the decree."

Admittedly a Debt Settlement Board has exclusive jurisdiction to decide a question with regard to the existence of the amount of a debt which falls within the scope of the Ben. Agri. Debtors Act, but it was pointed out by this Court in Nur Mia v. Noakhali Nath Bank Ltd. (1) that :

"The Civil Court after receipt of notice under s. 34, Ben. Agri. Debtors Act, has jurisdiction to enter into the question whether the debt, in respect of which the proceeding is pending before it, is a debt within the meaning of cl. (8) of s. 2 and, if it finds that it does not come within that definition, it should not stay proceedings in pursuance of the notice."

In my view, the liability of the judgment-debtors under the decree dated March 28, 1938, did not represent a debt within the purview of the Ben. Agri. Debtors Act and it therefore, follows that the provisions of s. 18 of the Act can have no application to a debt of this nature. It is also argued on behalf of the respondent in this case that the language of s. 2 (9) of the Act may be taken to indicate that a bargadar comes within its scope. I am not prepared to accept this argument. According to the Preamble of the Act the intention of the Legislature was to provide for the relief of indebtedness of agricultural debtors and from the general scheme of the Act one of the main intentions seems to be to protect the raiyyats, under-raiyyats and other cultivators who have an interest in land from becoming indebted to such an extent that their holdings or interest in the land may have to be sold for the purpose of liquidating the debts which they have incurred. Sub-section (9) states that "'debtor' means a debtor whose primary means of livelihood is agricultural and who (a) is a raiyyat or an under-raiyyat, or (b) cultivates land himself or by members of his family or by hired labourers or by adhiars, bargadars or bhagdars."

If this sub-section be read together with sub-s. (8) (iii) of the Act it would appear to have been the intention of the Legislature to exclude from the operation of the Act adhiars, bargadars or bhagdars presumably because these people have no interest in the land, which it was necessary to protect by means of special legislation. From the provisions of s. 3 (17), Ben. Ten. Act, it would appear that these people are persons who cultivate the land of another person on condition of delivering a share of the produce to that person. It would, therefore, appear that the reference in sub-s. (9) (a) to a person "who cultivates land himself" must mean a person other than a raiyyat or an under-raiyyat who has some interest in the land, which would entitle him to employ hired labourers, adhiars, bargadars or bhagdars for the purpose of cultivating it, but such hired labourers and the other persons mentioned would not themselves be included within the definition of "debtor." Having regard to the considerations mentioned above, I am of opinion, that the respondents do not come within the scope of the Ben. Agri. Debtors Act of 1935 and in these circumstances the learned Munsif should not have stayed proceedings on receipt of the stay order, dated September 21, 1938, from the Debt Settlement Board of Kailasgunge. This appeal, must, therefore, be allowed with costs throughout. The decision of the lower Appellate Court affirming that of the first Court is set aside and it is directed that execution do proceed. Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act (VII of 1939), s. 15—Exemption under—Whether available where judgment-debtor's usufructuary mortgagee is in possession of holding.

Section 15 does not speak of land in the possession of the judgment-debtor. What it does is to exempt from sale "one acre of the land comprised in the holding." Hence it cannot be said that the whole of the holding can be brought to sale in execution of a mortgage decree obtained by a prior mortgagee, because it is in possession not of the judgment-debtor but of his subsequent sudbarnadar (usufructuary mortgagee).

A. from an order of the District Judge Muzaffarpur, dated September 4, 1940.

Mr. G. P. Shahi, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Jharkhandi Rai and Kailash Rai, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the decree-holder. It arises out of an application made by the judgment-debtor under s. 15 of the Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act, 1939. The decree was obtained on a mortgage of the judgment-debtor's kasht land with an area of 11 kathas and odd. Under cl. (1) (i) of s. 15 of the Act the Court executing the decree "shall exempt from sale one acre of the land comprised in the holding or holdings of the judgment-debtors, if the area of such land does not exceed three acres."

In the lower Courts the decree-holder sought to defeat the judgment-debtor's objection to the sale of his 11 kathas and odd by urging that he was not an agricultural debtor, and this contention was based on the fact that the judgment-debtor admittedly had some zerait land with an area of $5\frac{1}{2}$ or $7\frac{1}{2}$ kathas, on which stands his house along with his bari. The lower Courts came to the conclusion that as the judgment-debtor received no naqdi or other income from his zerait and as the evidence showed that he earned his livelihood by cultivation and not, as alleged by the decree-holder, by service, the judgment-debtor was an agricultural debtor and as such entitled to the benefit of s. 15 as claimed by him (actually there was a body of judgment-debtors, but I have referred to them in the singular as the judgment-debtor).

The learned Advocate for the appellant has not assailed the view of the lower Courts that the judgment-debtor is an agricultural debtor, but he has argued that having regard to the object of the Act, s. 15 should be taken to exempt from execution sales, land in the possession of the judgment-debtor and not land which, as in the present case, has been parted with by him to a usufructuary mortgagee (sudbarnadar). But the section does not speak of land in the possession of the judgment-debtor. What it does is to exempt from sale "one acre of the land comprised in the holding". Mr. Shahi has suggested that the policy of the Act was to save a minimum quantity of land for the livelihood of the agricultural debtor and that this object would be defeated and a prior mortgagee left without a practical remedy if holdings of one acre or less which have been already given away in sudbarna by agricultural debtors are exempted. The sudbarna in the present case is admitted, and I understand it was subsequent to the mortgage on which the appellant obtained his decree. It is quite clear that if the holding had not been given away in sudbarna, the appellant could not have been allowed under s. 15 to bring the holding to sale. It is also clear that the acts of the debtor after the execution of the mortgage in favour of the appellant cannot, without the appellant's consent, affect his rights, and Mr. Shahi has not been able to suggest why the appellant's right should be enlarged merely because the debtor chose after the appellant's mortgage to give his small holding in sudbarna. After all is said and done, the sudbarna cannot have been without consideration, and if the debtor had a right to execute the sudbarna, it has not been suggested on what principle the exercise of that right should enlarge the rights of the prior mortgagee. I am accordingly unable to accept the contention that the holding should be brought to sale in execution of the appellant's decree because it is in the possession not of the debtor but of his sudbarnadar. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Hearing fee one gold mohur.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1896), ss. 435, 439, 17 (1)—Order calling for proceedings signed and issued by Head-quarters Assistant for District Magistrate, legality of—Power of District Magistrate to stay proceedings in Criminal Court subordinate to him—Burma Courts Manual, Para. 102—Discretion of District Magistrate under, exercise of.

Under s. 435, Criminal P. C., the District Magistrate undoubtedly has power to call for the records of proceedings before any Magistrate of the District, even when those proceedings are pending; but it is the District Magistrate who has that power, and an order signed by another person "for" the District Magistrate, calling for a proceeding, is an order without authority. Therefore, the order issued by the Head-quarters Assistant and signed by him for District Magistrate is void. [p. 371, col. 2.]

There is no provision of the Criminal P. C., authorising the District Magistrate to stay proceedings in a Criminal Court subordinate to him, and it is only the High Court, which has power to do so, that power being conferred by s. 439 of the Code and s. 85 (1), Govt. of Burma Act. When a case is once made over for disposal to a Subordinate Magistrate, the District Magistrate is not competent to pass any order relating to it other than an order such as might be made by him under Chap. XXXII, Criminal P. C., i. e., ss. 435, 436 and 437. Radhabullav Roy v. Benode Behari (1), relied on. [p. 371, col. 2.]

The instruction in the Burma Courts Manual (Para. 102) which is based on the provisions of s. 17 (1), Criminal P. C., no doubt applies to pending as well as to completed proceedings; but the discretion which has to be exercised is the discretion of the District Magistrate, unfettered by influences and pressure which may weigh with the Deputy Commissioner, and it can very rarely be a proper exercise of such discretion to remove a pending proceeding from the Court of a Magistrate and forward it to an executive officer, and even in the rare cases when such a course might be justifiable it would be essential for the District Magistrate to take adequate steps to see that the record must be returned within a reasonable time so that the trial could proceed. Cr. Rev. to review proceedings of Township and Additional Magistrate, Pyawbwe, in Criminal Summary Trial No. 113 and Criminal Regular Trial Nos. 50 to 53 and 74 of 1939.

Mr. U E Maung, Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Mr. Tan Po Aye, for the Respondents.

Order.—This Court has been compelled to take up these six revision matters on its own motion by reason of an abuse of judicial procedure occasioned by the action of the Govt.

of Burma in the department of forests. Eight cases under the Forest Act were instituted through the Police by the Deputy Conservator of Forests of the Yamethin division. Two of these were sent to the Township Magistrate of Pyawbwe, who is a First Class Magistrate, for trial, and the other six were sent for trial to the Additional Magistrate of Pyawbwe, who is a Second Class Magistrate. With two of these cases I am not now concerned, because in one the accused has been acquitted by the Township Magistrate and in the other the accused has since died. The six with which I am now concerned are Criminal Regular Trial No. 113 of 1939 of the Township Magistrate of Pyawbwe and Nos. 50, 51, 52, 53 and 74 of 1939 of the Additional Magistrate of Pyawbwe. Criminal Regular Trial No. 113 of 1939 of the Township Magistrate of Pyawbwe was instituted on May 30, 1939. There is only a single diary entry in the case. It states that the accused and the prosecution witnesses were present on May 30, but owing to want of time the case was adjourned for trial to June 14. There is nothing else on this record and nothing further has been done in the case. Nos. 50, 51, 52 and 53 of the Additional Magistrate of Pyawbwe were instituted on May 5, 1939 and they had reached the stage of the defence. The same diary entry appears in each of these cases under the date June 9, 1939. It states that the accused was present but the defence witnesses were absent and that by order of the District Magistrate the case was to remain pending until further orders and was submitted to the District Magistrate for his perusal. No. 74 of 1939 of the Additional Magistrate was instituted on June 3, 1939, and was fixed for hearing on June 9. On that date the accused and the prosecution witnesses were present, but as recorded in the diary the Magistrate did not proceed with the trial because he had been ordered by the District Magistrate to postpone the trial sine die and to submit the proceedings to the District Magistrate. All these six cases therefore, still remain pending, although the last action which was taken in regard to any of them was at the beginning of June 1939. After a lapse of more than one year, the records were recovered by this Court from the Secretariat of the Ministry of Forests with considerable difficulty. It remains to be seen how the records of these pending criminal cases reached the Ministry of Forests.

On June 3, 1939 the Deputy Conservator of Forests, Yamethin division, wrote to the District Magistrate of Yamethin District stating that he had been ordered by the Ministry of Forests to request the District Magistrate to stay further proceedings in the eight cases to which I have referred and further as the Ministry of Forests desired to see the proceedings he requested the District Magistrate to send the proceedings to him. On the reverse of this letter the District Magistrate recorded the following note :

"H. J. C., call for the trial records of these cases and order the Magistrate concerned to stay the cases pending further orders."

This note is signed by the District Magistrate himself and by "H. J. C.", I presume, is meant the District Magistrate's head judicial clerk. How the head judicial clerk could call for proceedings or issue any order to a Magistrate, I am unable to understand. The order which was actually issued to the Magistrate is dated June 7, and was addressed to the Township Magistrate, Pyawbwe. It reads as follows :

"Please stay the cases under the Forest Act pending further orders of the following accused of Gwezi village. The trial records of these cases may be submitted for my perusal. The cases are being tried by you and in the Court of the Additional Magistrate, Pyawbwe."

The order is signed "Po Lat H. Q. A.; for District Magistrate, Yamethin." By some manner which has not been disclosed, this order was also communicated to the Additional Magistrate of Pyawbwe, although being addressed only to the Township Magistrate of Pyawbwe, it did not concern him, for orders to a Magistrate cannot be issued by proxy and the Additional Magistrate is not subordinate to the Township Magistrate. The cases were on June 9, 1939 submitted by these Magistrates to the District Magistrate and they were then forwarded to the Deputy Conservator of Forests, Yamethin division, on June 13, the letter forwarding them also being signed by the "H. Q. A." for the District Magistrate. It appears that the Deputy Conservator in his turn transmitted the records of these pending criminal trials to the Ministry of Forests and for over a year they have lain in the Secretariat of the Ministry without any action of any kind being taken. This Court obtained them from the Ministry on July 20, 1940. By "H. Q. A.", I understand is meant "Headquarters Assistant," that is to say, the Headquarters Assistant of Deputy Commissioner. As such, he exercises no magisterial powers whatever and he certainly has no authority to act on behalf of the District Magistrate. This matter appears to have been at its outset one more of the unfortunately all too frequent instances of the failure of an official, who functions both as Deputy Commissioner and District Magistrate, to differentiate between his duty as Deputy Commissioner and his duty as District Magistrate. Under s. 435, Criminal P. C., the District Magistrate undoubtedly has power to call for the records of proceedings before any Magistrate of the District, even when those proceedings are pending ; but it is the District Magistrate who has that power, and an order signed by another person "for" the District Magistrate, calling for a proceeding, is an order without authority. Therefore the order issued by the Headquarters Assistant to the Township Magistrate of Pyawbwe on June 7, 1939, was a void order on which neither the Township Magistrate nor the Additional Magistrate ought to have taken any action. I have noticed that in many districts it is common for Headquarters Assistants to sign orders on behalf of District Magistrate; it must now be realized that they have no authority to do so and this illegal practice must cease forthwith in all districts.

However it was perhaps too much to expect that two subordinate Magistrates would ignore such an order, and, so far as the order requiring that the proceedings should be submitted to him was concerned, it was an order which the District Magistrate himself could have made. But that part of the order which directed the two Magistrates to stay their proceedings was an order entirely without jurisdiction and not within the competence of the District Magistrate. There is no provision of the Criminal P. C. authorising the District Magistrate to stay proceedings in a Criminal Court subordinate to him, and it is only the High Court which has power to do so, that power being conferred by s. 439 of the Code and s. 85 (1), Govt. of Burma Act. When a case is once made over for disposal to a Subordinate Magistrate, the District Magistrate is not competent to pass any order relating to it other than an order such as might be made by him under Chap. XXXII, Criminal P. C., i. e., ss. 435, 436 and 437 : see Radhabullav Roy v. Benode Behari (1). Hence the order made by the Headquarters Assistant, purporting to act for the District Magistrate, directing that these cases should be stayed pending further orders, was not an order which the District Magistrate was competent to make. The Magistrates themselves were competent to adjourn the trials by orders in writing for any reasonable cause, under s. 344, Criminal P. C., and it may perhaps be considered that, in the case of a Subordinate Magistrate, the fact that the District Magistrate has called for the record is a reasonable cause, although I think that a Magistrate of courage and independence would have proceeded with the trials, so far as he was able to do so, on the day on which the order of the District Magistrate was received before submitting the proceedings. The Township Magistrate, being a First Class Magistrate, could also have stopped the proceedings in the trial before him under the provisions of s. 349, Criminal P. C., and if the District Magistrate had desired to stop these proceedings (although apparently all that he wished to do was to obey the order received from the Ministry of Forests through the Deputy Conservator of Forests) he might have accomplished this by transferring the trials to himself and then stopping the proceedings under the provisions of s. 249.
